Bonaparte never for an instant doubted that he was to conquer and govern the world. Ellsworth, when he was a lawyers clerk, living on a dollar a week, eating dry bread when he had it and going hungry when he had spent his money for books, peopled his garret with magnificent dreams. Before he was twenty he had a plan for the conquest of Mexico and the annexation of Central America. He intended to be Secretary of War, for the purpose of organizing the militia of the United States, but finding that with the present laws the Federal Executive could not manage it, he proposed to be a Senator first so as to initiate the necessary legislation; and with that puspose he entered Mr. Lincoln's office because Lincoln was was the leading lawyer and politician of Illinois. He came with the President to Washington, wanting to be Chief Clerk in the War Department, but while he was waiting the war broke out and there was no place for him but in the field. In an incredibly short space of time he raised his extraordinary regiment and brought it to Washington, gave it some semblance of drill and discipline and was killed before he had a chance to show what was in him as a soldier.

But if the report of his intimate friends can be trusted, he was a man of singular power. Entirely uneducated, he had the speech, the manners, the address of a man of the world. He was a fluent and graceful speaker, He wrote with instinctive force and clearness. His length was apparently inexhaustible; he was known sometimes to work twenty-four hours at once and appear on parade after, quite fresh.—New York Tribune

What funny ideas will creep into the noddles of the dear little uns. Dollie had seen her brother using a burning glass, and heard him talk about the "focus." Consulting the Dictionary, she found that the focus is a place where the rays meet. At dinner she announced that she knew the meaning of the hard word. Her father inquired what it might be. Whereupon she replied that it was the word focus, and that it meant "a place where they raise calves."

This of course, raised a great laugh, but she produced her dictionary in proof

"There!" said she, triumphantly, "Focus, a place where the rays meet." Calves are meat; and if they raise meat they raise calves, and so I am right—ain't I, father?

"MY DOCTOR."

[Respectfully dedicated to the whole medical and surgical fraternity.]

"Who ran to catch me when I fell,
And leeched the place to make it well?
My Doctor."

Dear Doctor, 'tis your art to heal
All maladies we mortals feel;
You cut and carve, and slice and peel,
No matter what our groans reveal;
And for each physical disaster
You straight apply some magic plaster,
Or drug, to antidote each pain
And bring repose to limb and brain.

You take your keen dissecting-knife,
And track the avenues of life,
And most audaciously prepare
To lay our quivering muscles bare.
You twist and scrape our shrinking bones,
Despite our piteous shrieks and moans,
And after all this laceration,
Sew up our flesh with exultation.

If 'tis an arm that must be lopped,
Or huge excrescence to be cropped;
If by some sad, unlucky chance,
We've maimed an ear and marred our glance,
Why we must needs repair to you,
And trust to skill to bring us through;
Your motto is—"Kill or cure;"
[illegible]

Your knowledge we must not gainsay,
Or 'gainst your theories inveigh,
However counter they may run
To common sense. "Thy will be done."
Your verdict who may dare impeach?
For are you not that famous leech,
Who by mere severing of a vein,
Can plethoric purses empty drain!

Some trifling ill afflicts us sore,
Mayhap a headache—nothing more,
And straight, with grave, lugubrious air,
You wag your wise, forboding head,
As though life trembled on a thread;
Then add, "Dear madam, I'll embrace
This chance to diagnose your case."

You then proceed with ostentation,
To talk of some vague "complication"
That does exist within our frames,
And which you designate by names
So horribly atrocious, we
Would fain from your dread presence flee,
And rather than be awed like this,
Deem ignorance our highest bliss.

Our petty "headache" proves to be
A very complex mystery;
A problem that we ne'er had solved,
But for the theory evolved
From out that brain whose mystic lore
All depths of science can explore.
Woe to the wretch whose rattling speech!
Flings satire on the name of Leech!

We ask no questions, but submit
To what "Sir Oracle" deems fit.
Our open throats, alas! alas!
By his decree become a pass
Through which all sorts of stuff go down,
Of colors blue and green and brown;
Mysterious liquids filter through,
Each dim, corporeal avenue.

We take, with unresisting smile,
Abhorrent nostrums, compounds vile,
Emetics whose swift circulation
Reverse the laws of gravitation,
Till nature, almost dosed to death,
Cries out with gasping, scant breath,
And check these horrid-inward throes.

Ah me! 'tis beautiful to see
How learned doctors do agree;
What mutual love their souls inflame,
How tender of each other's fame;
How sacred is the tie that binds
In amity their kindred minds!
From jealousy and wrath how free
Is the admired fraternity!

This earth would be a desert drear,
Were there no lovely doctors here
To give us anodynes and pills,
And mitigate life's varied ills.
What though by carping tongues 'tis said
That doctors' consciences are dead?
I am no caustic; ergo, I
Pass all such knotty questions by,
Content, when pains are most severe,
To have an Esculapius near.

BROKEN PROMISES.

Peter Summit was a tailor. He met Abby Hanscom on the board of the shop where he learned his trade, and made her his wife. For a short time both husband and wife worked for the old house; but by and by there was presented an opening for business on their own account, and they embraced the opportunity. In the not far-distant town of Springbrook the old village tailor had died, and the widow offered the stand for sale. Peter went, and saw, and bought. Abby had saved up a few hundred dollars from the proceeds of her former labor, and this, with what Peter was able to raise, was sufficient to make the purchase. And to Springbrook they removed, where they not only entered business on their own account, but where they went to keeping house.

It was a good opening, and favorable in every respect. The village was growing and thriving, and Peter was the only tailor in town. And, furthermore, he was an excellent workman, and the quality of his work gave entire satisfaction. For a year he prospered to such an extent that he had paid for the shop, and had paid full one-half the price for his little cottage home. And at the end of this year he was a father, and he and Abby were about as happy as it is possible for mortals to be.

And yet there was a cloud in the horizon. Peter was troubled with a disease which is far too prevalent in the business community—PROCRASTINATION.

At first the excitement of the new place and the new faces had given healthful circulation to his system, and had made him prompt and energetic; but, as time wore on, he grew gradually neglectful, and the inevitable consequences followed. His wife, now kept at home by domestic duties, saw something of his fault, and warned him; but he laughed and patted her cheek, and bade her not to worry.

One day Mr. Jones came into the shop and ordered a coat. He selected the cloth and was measured.

"When can you have it done for me?" he asked.

"You shall have it any time after next week."

"Can I have it a week from next Wednesday?"

"Yes."

"Sure?"

"Yes, sir."

Peter made the promise, as thousands of promises are made, without the least particle of will in the matter. He said "yes" because it came easy to say it, and because it was the word which his customer wanted him to say; but in making the promise he did not make a single plan for its keeping. So far as he was concerned, the keeping of one of these promises had come to be a thing of chance. It was a fault of neglect and not of intention. In all things that were of his direct will, he was scrupulously honest. He would sooner have gone hungry than to have given short measure; and he would have bitten his tongue through and through sooner than willfully misrepresent the quality of his goods. And, more still, he could not do a dishonest piece of work.

Time passed, and on the day appointed Mr. Jones called for his coat. It was not done. The customer was disappointed. Peter made his excuses, and set another day. That other day came, and the tailor was obliged to excuse himself again. We need not repeat the excuses he offered. They are stereotyped in the profession.

"Peter," said Mr. Jones, not attempting to hide his feelings, "you cannot always go on thus. This isn't the way to do business. If my custom is worth anything to you, you must be more prompt in the future."

"But how can I help the delays of my workmen? I am not—"

"We won't argue the matter," interrupted the customer, with a wave of the hand. "I don't find fault with the time you have taken for the work. I only blame you for giving me a promise which you had not particularly planned to keep."

Mr. Jones went away, and Peter declared, with a smiting of his fist upon the cutting-board, that he had never seen so unreasonable a man. And under the influence of such feeling he did not improve.

One day a stranger entered Peter's shop and introduced himself as Mr. Dadmun, just moved into the place. He wanted a full suit of clothes made, of the very best quality. How soon could he have them?

"Well," said Peter, in his easy way, "I guess—"

"Hold on!" interrupted the man, with a smile. "I don't care to know what you guess; I want positive information on the subject. To-day is Monday. Can I have them this week?"

"Well—yes—I think I can get them done by Saturday."

"How much do you think?"

"Eh?"

"Can you promise me that I may have the clothes next Saturday evening?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then you may take my measure."

The man gave his full name as John Dadmun. Peter entered it on his book and proceeded to measure the new customer for coat, pants and vest.

On the following Saturday evening Mr. Dadmun called for his clothes, but they were not done. He was disappointed.

"So am I disappointed," said Peter; "but mistakes will happen in the best regulated families."

"They are more apt to happen, however, in families not well regulated," suggested the other.

"The fact is," explained Peter, "my workmen have bothered me."

"How do you allow it?"

"Why, they had more work than I thought for."

"That is, you did not consider how much work you had on hand when you gave me your promise?"

"As for that matter, of course I knew how much work I had; but I thought, perhaps, by pushing a little, we might get your clothes off."

"And have you pushed matters during the week?"

Peter didn't exactly know how to answer this. He was not in the habit of being questioned so coolly. His customers generally either pouted or flared up, giving him an opportunity to keep his temper and calm them down by his good-nature. But here was a man who proposed to anatomize him, and the effect was not pleasant. He squirmed and twisted, and at length got rid of the infliction by promising to have the clothes done on the following Tuesday.

Suffice it to say that Mr. Dadmun got his clothing on the following Thursday, instead of Tuesday. And on that very Thursday Peter first gained the knowledge that John Dadmun was the man who had bought the Steep Falls water-power, and was going to erect a paper-mill thereon.

Easy-going, happy-go-lucky Peter Summit! He did not realize how he had pestered and fretted his customers until his senses had been sharpened by a need that hurt him sorely. One Saturday evening on taking up the village paper, he saw the advertisement of a "New Tailoring Establishment" to be opened in Springbrook by Eben Cutter.

"Let him come," said Peter. "If he can do better work than I can he's welcome."

"Ah, Peter," said his wife, shaking her head, "I fear that is not the point. This new man may strike you in your only weak spot; and if he does, I fear for the result."

"What d'ye mean, Abby?"

"Eben Cutter may be a man who will keep faith with his customers. If he proves to be a man whose promise may be relied upon, he will take your best customers. O, Peter, I'm afraid the lesson is coming severely to you. But I won't anticipate. It may not be yet too late to win back the confidence you have lost."

But it was too late. Eben Cutter opened a fine shop, with an excellent assortment of goods, and he was enabled to show to the people a hearty recommendation from John Dadmun. Among his first customers were Mr. Dadmun and Mr. Jones. He did his work well, and he did it promptly.

Said Mr. Jones to him:

"I would like that coat next week."

"I cannot promise it for next week, sir; but you can have it on Wednesday of the week following."

"Can I be sure of it on that day?"

"If I promise, and am alive and well—yes, sir. It might be a temporary pleasure to make favorable promises at random, but only disappointment could come in the end. I can have it done for you, sir, on Wednesday next."

And on the day set the coat was done; all was satisfactory.

And as Eben Cutter did by Mr. Jones he did by others. He never made a promise at random. He carefully considered before stating the time for the finishing of a piece of work, and when his promise had been given, he set himself earnestly to its fulfillment.

At the end of six months from the day of Cutter's establishment in Springbrook, Peter Summit had lost all his good customers. And he knew just how he had lost them. He was not a fool, nor was he blind. It did not need a magician to reveal to him the secret.

"I'm afraid," he said to his wife, "that we'll have to pull up stakes and leave this place. I don't see how I can hold up here."

Abby tried to keep back her tears, but could not. She had become attached to Springbrook, and to her cottage home. Still, she would not complain. In her own thoughts she felt that the lesson her husband had learned might be worth all her heart-ache.

While Peter and his wife were talking, a knock sounded upon the door. Peter answered the summons, and found Eben Cutter upon the stoop, and invited him in.

The visitor's business was stated in a frank, off-hand way. He had received an offer from a wholesale house in New York, which he was anxious to accept, as it pointed toward ultimate partnership in one of the best concerns in the country. He would go if he could sell his present stock in trade. Would Peter like to buy it?

How much did he ask?

He should want very nearly what the goods had cost him. The sum-total might be near a thousand dollars—from that to fifteen hundred.

Peter was staggered, and gasped for breath. O! if he could only get the business back again, he was sure he could prosper. But where was he to raise fifteen hundred dollars?—or even a hundred?

He answered Mr. Cutter that he would like to buy the goods, but he was not able; and there were tears in his eyes as he spoke.

"I will see you again," said Cutter, as he was leaving. "Perhaps something may turn up."

On the following day Mr. John Dadmun called upon Peter in his shop. He was a man of few words, and went straight at his business.

"Mr. Summit," said he, "it was through my recommendation that Eben Cutter came to this town. He now thinks he has better promise elsewhere. I have marked the effect of his presence upon your business, and have felt really sorry for you. But there is opportunity for retrievement. If I will purchase Mr. Cutter's stock, and place it in your hands, taking your note for the amount, will you do your best to repay me?"

Peter was staggered again. But the kindly look of his visitor told the story. The man who had been chiefly instrumental in opening his eyes to his one destructive fault was now willing to give him another trial.

"Mr. Dadmun," he said, frankly and manfully, "I know how I fell, and I think I know how I can rise again. Are you willing to trust to my honor, and try my resolution?"

"Yes, Peter."

"God bless you, sir!"

"All right, my man! That is enough. I think we understand each other. I will call upon you this evening, and let you know how the business can be arranged."

That evening Mr. Dadmun called, and made arrangements to let Peter have the stock which Cutter had on hand, Peter to pay for the same as he was able.

The next issue of the village newspaper contained a new advertisement from Peter Summit, in which he said to his old customers—"TRY ME."

They did try him; and from that day Peter never made a promise until he had seen his way clear to its fulfillment. When he had set a time for the completion of a piece of work he bent his energies to the keeping of the promise; and he found that it was much better than the old way; for not only were his customers better pleased, but the work was done more systematically, and far more easily.

In later years, said Peter to a young man who had been his apprentice, and whom he was sending out to try business for himself:

"If you would prosper in your business, my son, keep your word to your customers always. You had better far have an occasional misfit thrown back upon your hands, than to give your patrons occasion to charge upon you BROKEN PROMISES."

Forests in Germany.

Few people have any idea of the extent of forest land in Germany, and imagine that of the Black Forest little is left except the tradition. On the contrary, in Hanover alone there are 900,000 acres of wood under State management, while nearly a fourth part of the area of Prussia is in forest, although half of that is in private lands. As is well known, the forest administration in particular districts has long been famous, especially in Thuringia and the Hartz mountains. In North Germany generally the responsibilities are allotted in districts among a carefully organized body of officers, presided over by a Forest Director. The appointments are fairly remunerated, and they are so eagerly sought after that candidates will remain on probation for years at their own cost, or with moderate and precarious pay, in the hope of securing a place in the corps at last.

DID you ever notice how long it takes a boy's hair to dry, when he has run away and gone in swimming? It is painful to be a boy, with a mother who is constantly in fear lest you be brought home from the river on a board. The boy is commanded not to go in swimming, and he swears he won't, but he lies like a little cuss. He thinks he will go in and not get his hair wet, and no one will know it, but just as he gets ready to come out of the water a big boy "ducks" him, and then he swears, and when he crawls in the back window at 10 o'clock at night, his mother, with a press-board hid in the folds of her dress, is the first obstacle he encounters. Does she believe him when he tells her he has been over to Jimmy Lynde's practicing with the "first nine" of a Sunday-school class? No! She feels of his hair, finds it wet, smells of it and finds it musty, and finds his shirt wrong side out. Then she spits on her hands, and with the press-board so works upon his tender sensibilities that he goes to bed with his hand on his aching heart, wishing he was a half-orphan, and he dreams he is a stern-wheel boat, running backward, and that he has collided with a barge loaded with benzine, and set it on fire. The best way for a boy to get along, at this season of the year, is to have his hair shingled.—George W. Peck's Sun.

A CURIOUS memento of the late war, consisting of Federal and Confederate bullets, impacted by coming together in the air, which was picked up in front of Petersburg in 1864, has just been presented to the Ordnance museum.

Extermination of Rats.

Hon. M. L. Dunlap, in the Chicago Tribune says: The common Norway rat will not trouble corn-cribs that are set well up from the ground and kept clear of underlying rubbish, for he burrows in the ground and never makes his nest in the corn. Or if a colony should locate near it, a few minutes' work with a spade will dispose of them; or, by watching the burrows and shooting a few of them, they will leave the premises.

The rat is a troublesome customer to the shiftless farmer, for he delights to hide and burrow under his old rubbish heaps and badly-constructed stable-floors; but he avoids all places where he is exposed to the spade or the shotgun. Any one can have rats if he wishes, for a pile of old boards, barrels, or a heap of stone, will invite them to you. I once thought a good ratter necessary in order to be rid of them; but experience proved that to be a folly. A good clean, sharp spade, and clean premises are worth more than a dozen rat-terriers in the country. I have seen the times when I would not part with a good ratter for fifty dollars, for I supposed them to be the charm that kept the rats off the farm; but, since I have learned a cheaper method, I would not take the best dog as a gift, much preferring to give the waste of the kitchen to the chickens, for in that is one of the secrets of a supply of eggs.

Rats infest corn in the shock, for they make their burrows under the shocks. A rail-crib is also a good place for them, as they are safe from both dogs and spades. They used to annoy me about the stable; but I made the floors of solid clay, well rammed down, upon which the plank was laid, and no rat gets under this planking. The urine tends to preserve the plank, and, after eight years' use, they have not been replaced, and look as though they would last several years longer. There is not a rat about the stable, nor a rat-dog to worry them if there was. Then the hog-pen is up two feet from the ground, which has spoiled all their hiding places, and we are rid of them. So much for rats, in which an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure.

What Sleep Will Cure.

The cry for rest has always been louder than the cry for food. Not that it is more important, but that it is often harder to get. The best rest comes from sound sleep. Of two men or two women, otherwise equal, the one who sleeps best will be the most moral, healthful and efficient. Sleep will do much to cure irritability of temper, peevishness and uneasiness. It will cure insanity. It will build up and make strong a weary body. It will do much to cure dyspepsia. It will relieve a languor and prostration felt by consumptives. It will cure hypochondria. It will cure neuralgia. It will cure a broken spirit. It will cure sorrow. Indeed we might make a longer list of nervous maladies that it will cure. The cure of sleeplessness, however, is not so easy, particularly in those who carry grave responsibilities. The habit of sleeping well is one which if broken for any length of time, is not so easily regained. Often illness treated by powerful drugs, so deranges the nervous system that sleep is never sweet thereafter. Or perhaps long continued watchfulness produces the same effect; or hard study; or too much exercise of the muscular system, or whisky drinking, or tobacco smoking or chewing.

To break up the habit, are required: A good clean bed, pleasant occupation, and sufficient exercise to produce weariness, good pure air and not too warm a room; freedom from too much care; a clear conscience; a clear stomach; and avoidance of stimulants.

AN ELEPHANT A THIEF.—The elephant at the Zoological Gardens, Dublin, innocently got his keeper into trouble on the 23d of April. Staff Surgeon Luckie, who had been in the Ashantee war, dropped in the gardens a ring, taken among the African spoils. The elephant saw the ring drop, put forth his trunk and picked it up. Being in the habit of giving to his keeper coins and other indigestible presents made to him by admiring spectators, he gave the ring to his keeper. So far the keeper was safe—the elephant was the unconscious thief. But the whole transaction was seen by others; and the keeper being taxed with having the ring in his possession, said he knew nothing about it. He was then observed to throw something away, which was found to be the ring. He was fined twenty shillings. The elephant appropriated other people's goods. The keeper was the receiver.

INSANITY IN IRELAND.—An elaborate paper on the statistics of insanity in Ireland, lately read by Mr. W. J. Corbet, before a society in Dublin, showed that, during the last thirty years, with a population diminished by 2,904,437, there has been an increase of 6,245 lunatics. Ten per cent. of the cases of insanity were attributed to intemperance. Yet the most prolific cause of the diffusion of the malady was, singularly enough ascribed to the great care which the insane receive of late years. Many of them are cured by treatment in asylums, and then sent out to mix with the rest of the population, marry, and propagate the hereditary taint. This being the chief source of the mischief, the question was suggested, if, after all, the magnificent asylums which are built and sustained at so great a cost do not have a detrimental, rather than a beneficial, effect upon society.

IT has just been ascertained, from certain correspondence of Mason, Slidell, and other representatives of the Confederate archives purchased by the Government some two years ago, that the British Government proper was absolutely opposed to any countenance or recognition of the movement to dissolve the Union, that Mason tried in vain for over a year to get an audience with the then Premier of England for the purpose of presenting his case and demanding recognition of belligerent rights, and that he left London in disgust and repaired to Paris, where, as is known, himself and Slidell met with more encouragement, finding in the late Emperor Napoleon a warm sympathizer. These papers and documents are likely to prove of very great value in making up a faithful history of the rebellion.

Hail-Storms.

The great hail-storm in St. Louis, on Thursday, was, in some respects, remarkable, and did much damage, but it has often been exceeded in violence and destructiveness. In Jackson, La., in 1834, a fall of hail not only beat down houses and trees, but killed numbers of cattle, although it lasted for only nine minutes. During a storm in Germany, described by the Abbe Maury in a paper read before the Royal Society in 1789, hailstones fell that weighed eight pounds; and there seems good evidence that in the storm of July 24, 1832, at Tussi, a single hailstone was found that weighed fourteen pounds, and that one, at least, passed through the roof of a house. Heyne's grave statement that a hailstone fell in India, during the reign of Tipoo, that was the size of an elephant, is incredible; but that there have been many hailstones large enough to destroy life of either men or animals, is certain. During the early days of California, there was a story of a hailstorm having killed every person in a little mining camp in the mountains save one poor fellow, who escaped, much bruised and hurt, to tell the tale. Some meteorologists have supposed that ships have been sunk by the sudden weight of these frozen missiles, and that catastrophes attributed to contact with mountains of ice have indeed been caused by that substance, but coming from a vertical rather than a lateral direction.

Fortunately for mankind, hail-storms are commonly not only limited in duration, but confined to very moderate areas. That which visited St. Louis does not seem to have been heard of elsewhere. The great French storm of 1788, considered, we believe, the most severe on record, extended in two parallel lines—one of 500, the other of 600 miles in length; but the mean breadth of each was only nine miles; and this instance is accounted altogether unusual and phenomenal. Sudden changes of weather, it would appear, ought, philosophically speaking, to produce these storms, since they are occasioned by the sudden freezing of the water held in suspension in a warm current of air on contact with a cold current in a higher region. Still, although our climate is so changeable, and the thermometer so swiftly capricious, especially in the spring—and although hail-storms are in general more frequent in temperate than in tropical regions—we seem to escape with a very small proportion of them. Other regions, where the temperature is much more equable—the South of France, for instance—are, on the other hand, much oftener exposed to these visitations. Our comparative immunity is perhaps due to the absence of lofty mountains, which are found to be strongly conducive to the formation of hail.—Inter-Ocean.

THE native wines produced in the United States are estimated in round numbers at twenty millions of gallons. California, the largest producer, yields one-fourth this amount, five millions; Ohio about one-sixth, three and one-half millions; New York, three millions, Missouri and Illinois each two and one-half millions and Pennsylvania two millions. In these six States are produced all the wines of the country, excepting about one million and one-half of gallons raised in smaller quantities in the other States. Wines are produced, however, in some quantity in nearly every State and Territory, 20,000 gallons a year being credited to New Jersey, and 5,000 gallons to Delaware. The annual value of our wine crop is about $14,000,000.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
Trade Mark. Patented.
What will it do? is the first inquiry the sick make concerning a medicine. Suppose TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT is the subject of the interrogatory, what then? Simply this reply: It will relieve and cure headache, nausea, flatulence, nervousness, costiveness, debility, biliousness and indigestion. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Old Doctor Kress.
Now and then a happy hit sends a man high up the scale of fortune and favor. The blow must be well aimed and skillfully struck however. Dr. Kress, an old Miami physician, made such a timely hit when he discovered the combination that made Kress' Fever Tonic, the most certain Ague cure ever used. It is a specific for fevers, because it destroys the fever producing germs that enter the system; it drives the disease away. Containing neither Arsenic, Strychnine nor any other poisonous ingredient, no hurtful effects follow its use. Box of Liver Pills free with every bottle. KRESS MANUFACTURING CO., Cincinnati, O.

VEGETINE
Purifies the Blood, renovates and invigorates the whole system. Its medical properties are alterative, tonic, solvent and diuretic.
VEGETINE is made exclusively from the juices of carefully selected barks, roots and herbs, and so strongly concentrated that it will effectually eradicate from the system every taint of Scrofula, Scrofulous Humor, Tumors, Cancer, Cancerous Humor, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Syphilitic Diseases, Canker, Faintness at the Stomach, and all diseases that arise from impure blood. Sciatica, Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Gout and Spinal Complaints can only be effectually cured through the blood.
For Ulcers and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, Pustules, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, Tetter, Scaldhead and Ringworm, VEGETINE has never failed to effect a permanent cure.
For Pains in the Back, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Female Weakness, Leucorrhea, arising from internal ulceration, and uterine diseases, and General Debility, VEGETINE acts directly upon the causes of these complaints. It invigorates and strengthens the whole system, acts upon the secretive organs, allays inflammation, cures ulceration, and regulates the bowels.
For Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Habitual Costiveness, Palpitation of the Heart, Headache, Piles, Nervousness and General Prostration of the Nervous System, no medicine has ever given such perfect satisfaction as the VEGETINE. It purifies the blood, cleanses all of the organs, and possesses a controlling power over the nervous system.
The remarkable cures effected by VEGETINE have induced many physicians and apothecaries whom we know to prescribe and use it in their own families.
In fact, VEGETINE is the best remedy yet discovered for the above diseases, and is the only reliable BLOOD PURIFIER yet placed before the public.

Medical Notes.

A French doctor says that a vapor bath at a temperature of 144 degrees, on seven consecutive days, will cure hydrophobia.

Fever and Ague Bitters.—Take boneset, wild cherry bark, and poplar bark; make an infusion by adding a quart of warm water; let it cool, and drink when thirsty. This is a certain cure for fever and ague.

Corn meal heated and placed in bags, is recommended as a substitute for hot water bottles and such like appliances, for restoring warmth to the sick. It is said to weigh less, retain heat longer, and does not chill when cold.

Neatly trimmed mutton chops put in a covered jar, with a little water, pepper and salt, and cooked in a slow oven for three hours, form, it is asserted, excellent food for an invalid or delicate child, as the meat is not so hard as in the ordinary ways of cooking.

A well known physician says that he considers the following prescription for purifying the blood as the best he has ever used: One ounce of yellow dock, one-half ounce of horse radish, one quart of hard cider. Dose, one wineglassful four times a day.

The following is said to be an excellent cure for rheumatism: Half a teaspoonful of Rochelle salts, to be taken every morning, half an hour before breakfast. Hot drinks, spirits, wine, beer, cider, pepper, and spices are to be avoided, and all grease, except good sweet butter. Fresh meat or poultry may be eaten twice a day, but salt meat and fish must be abstained from.

The following is said to be one of the best applications in cases of burns or scalds, more especially where a large surface is denuded of the skin: Take one dram of finely-powdered alum and mix thoroughly with the whites of two eggs and one teacup of fresh lard; spread on a cloth and apply to the parts burnt. It gives almost instant relief from pain, and by excluding the air prevents inflammatory action. The application should be changed at least once a day.

Infantile Thumb-Sucking not a Harmless Habit.—Dr. Dobell, in the British Medical Journal, remarks: "I have observed that a peculiar and rather common deformity of the chest is caused by the habit of sucking the thumb in infancy and early childhood. The weight of the arm on the thorax of the child during sleep produces depression of the ribs in the line occupied by the arm when the thumb is placed in the mouth. As this is a very important effect of 'thumb-sucking' never hitherto pointed out, I think it desirable to place this note on record for the benefit of other observers."

Bruises, Burns, Sprains, Etc.—Dissolve one ounce camphor to eight ounces spirits of wine; add one ounce oil turpentine; one ounce spirits sal ammoniac; one-half ounce oil of origanum; one large tablespoonful of liquid laudanum. Rub well with the hand four times a day. The above is one of the best recipes for all kinds of bruises, sprains and swellings, both in man and horse, ever tried; it will never fail. Try it.—Dr. G. W. Davis, in Chicago Courier.

The London News, speaking of Dr. Schliemann's alleged discovery of ancient Troy, indulges in this pleasing bit of word-painting:

"High up in the northeast corner of the Levant, where the rapid Hellespont rolls southward in ceaseless flood, lie the plains of the Troad, the scene of the world's grandest epic. The Simois and Xanthus still flow southward to the sea; the Hellespont still rushes by; the shadow of Lemnos still falls at noon upon the shores of Mitylene; the rocky islet of Tenedos—where the Greeks lay hid while the fatal horse was dragged into Ilium's citadel—still lifts its hills girt with their crown of gray-green olive groves out of the blue Ægean; and Ida—Ida where Paris chose between the three immortals—still towers toward the sky, peak leaping above peak. It is hard to look upon the scene and not to believe in the downright truth of the Homeric tale—to picture the turreted walls, and the Scæan gates, and the lofty citadel, and Priam's Palace, with its endless corridors and countless chambers, and the naval camp of the Achæan host with its trench and rampart, and the beach where the 'vermeil-prowed' ships lay in long rows, and the huge mound under which lies 'the great Achilles, whom we knew.' Xerxes, before he crossed the Hellespont with his hosts, went to up the hill which tradition even then identified as 'the Pergamus of Priam," and sacrificed a thousand oxen to the Ilian Athene. A century and half later Alexander not only ascended the holy hill, but hung up there his own armor and took down a suit of mail which local tradition cherished as the panoply of Hector himself. Centuries have since rolled by and the ghost of Demetrius of Scepsis has shuddered at the sacrilegious infidelity of Wolff; but the divine lay of Troy's fall still retains hold upon men's hearts, and traveler after traveler has wandered along the Troad shores with reverent step, and sought to identify the site of Priam's city and to fix the mound beneath which Troy's ruins lie."

The News, we may add, places but little faith in Dr. Schliemann's deductions, and quotes Prof. Max Muller, who, viewing the Iliad as an imaginative poem rather than an historical record, says that "the diggings at Troy will no more yield the treasures once possessed by the Homeric heroes than the armor of Uter Pendragon will ever be brought to light from the ruins of Tintagel, or the imperial crown of Friedrich Barbarossa from the caves of the Kyffhauser."

The Doomsday Book of Scotland, just presented to Parliament, shows that, within a fraction, half the whole extent of Scotland is held by 100 landowners, every one of whom owns more than 20,000 acres. There are fifty-two persons among those who own more than 50,000 acres each. The Duke of Southerland stands at the head of the list, having a domain of 1,170,343 acres. The area of their combined property is greater than that of any county in England, except Yorkshire and Lincolnshire.

The Manufacture of Iron.

The antiquity of the manufacture of iron on a large scale is shown in an article by Richard Mallett, upon the working of iron in India, where, according to this author, it had been carried on upon a scale so stupendous as to rival the production of the largest steam-hammer in Europe at the present day. Among other illustrations mentioned is that of a wrought-iron pillar at the principal gate of the ancient mosque of Kutub, near Delhi, which is as large as the screw-shaft of a first-class steamer. This is lengthy, spindle-shaped, and is surmounted by a capital of elaborate Indian design, carved by the chisel in the solid iron. The entire length is about 60 feet; its diameter near the surface is 16 inches; it contains about 80 cubic feet of metal, and weighs upward of 17 tons. Near its middle is an inscription of 16 lines in Sanscrit, from which its age has been assigned to the third or fourth century of the Christian era.

A Sensible Bride.—In these days of foolish display, a good word must be said for Miss Stewart, daughter of Senator Stewart, who was married in Washington last night. To begin with, the bride is said to be one of the most sensible as well as beautiful young ladies in Washington. She cooks, sews, markets for the family, and is versed in every useful accomplishment. Her wedding cards, eschewing the silly custom of the times had no monogram. The wedding was in her father's house, at an early hour, and followed by a good, old-fashioned dance. There was but one bride's maid, the bride's sister. The bridal trousseau was purchased entirely in Washington, and every article of it made at home under the personal supervision of the bride and her mother. Finally, the newly wedded couple do not make a "tour," but settle down at once to common sense happiness. All this is refreshing.—Indianapolis Journal.

Keep It from Them.—Don't give liquor to your children. Possibly you can do it with safety, but the chances are against it. One of the first literary men in the United States said to a writer, after speaking on the subject of temperance: "There is one thing which, as you visit different places, I wish you to do everywhere: that is, entreat every mother never to give a drop of strong drink to a child. I have had to fight, as for my life, all my days to keep from dying a drunkard, because I was fed with spirits when a child, and acquired a taste for it. My brother, poor fellow, died a drunkard. I would not have a child of mine take a drop of liquor for anything. Warn every mother, wherever you go, never to give a drop to a child."

Worcestershire Sauce.—A correspondent of the London Garden gives a recipe for this popular sauce. He says: "I do not offer it as Lea & Perrin's, but I do say that it is equal, if not superior to it, in my opinion. It is not a recipe copied out of a book, but one I have known a long time. Half a pound shallots; 1 oz. pimento, powdered; ½ oz. mace, powdered; ¼ oz. cayenne; half a nutmeg, powdered; ½ lb. anchovy fish; 1 oz. salt; 3 pints vinegar; 6 oz. soy. Chop or bruise the shallots, beat up the anchovy fish, mix all together, let it stand for a month or so, and lastly strain through a coarse sieve."

How to Light a Dark Room.—To light a dark room looking out on a narrow yard or street, let the glass be roughly ground on the outside, and set flush with the outer wall. The light from the entire visible sky, and from the remotest parts of the opposite wall, will be introduced into the apartment, reflected from the innumerable faces or facets which the rough grinding has produced. The whole window will appear as if the sky were behind it, and from every point of this luminous surface light will radiate into the room.

A discovery has been made in Germany tending to show that the transformation of vegetable matter into coal is in reality much more rapid than geologists have hitherto believed. In an old mine in the Hartz mountains it has been found that some of the pine timber originally employed in the construction of the levels is converted into a substance closely resembling lignite or brown coal. It is certain that this wood cannot have been in the mine—which is near Clausthal, and is known as the Dorothea mine—more than four hundred years.

A Queer Post-Office.—The smallest post-office in the world is kept in a barrel, which swings from the outermost rock of the mountains overhanging the Straits of Magellan, opposite Terra del Fuego. Every passing ship opens it to place letters in or to take them out. Every ship undertakes to forward all letters in it that it is possible for them to transmit. It hangs there by its iron chain, beaten and battered by the winds and storms, but no locked and barred office on land is more secure. It is not in the track of mail robbers.

The old question, Does lager intoxicate? came before a court in Dayton, Ohio, a day or two ago. A German testified: "If you drink five or six glasses of lager, in a little while you will feel more pleasant as if you drink five or six glasses of water in the same time; and if you drink five or six glasses of water, in a little while you will feel more disappointed as if you drink five or six glasses of lager in the same time." The jury were out four hours, and stood seven to five.

The Secret of Captivation.—Features of Grecian mold, a well-turned neck, and beautifully rounded arms, are no doubt very nice things to have, and ladies who possess these charms have reason to be thankful to Mother Nature; yet, after all, the most captivating of all womanly charms is a pure, fresh and brilliant complexion. This superlative fascination any lady may secure by using Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

Ye Old Mexican Mustang Liniment has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, sprains, scalds, burns, salt rheum, sore nipples, swelling, lameness, chapped hands, poisonous bites, stings, bruises, &c., &c., on men, women and children, and sprains, strains, galls, stiff joints, inflammation, &c., in beasts, than all other liniments put together. It will do what is promised or no money refunded.

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that Plantation Bitters is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

Reanimating the Hair.—When the hair ceases to draw from the scalp the natural lubricant which is its sustenance, its vitality is, as it were, suspended, and, if not promptly attended to, baldness will be the certain result. The one sure method of avoiding such an unpleasant catastrophe is to use Lyon's Kathairon, which, when well rubbed into the scalp, will speedily reanimate the hair and prevent it from falling out.

Cincinnati, June 11, 1873.
C. C. Olin & Co., Waukesha, Wis.: Having used your water from the Mineral Rock Spring, Waukesha, Wis., for the diabetes, I have found great relief from the use of the same. Before I commenced using this water, my physician reported that the specific gravity of my urine was 35, and after using it for twenty days the specific gravity of the urine was reduced to 21, showing a great improvement, and finding great relief in not being compelled to urinate so frequently. I had other waters, but give it as my opinion that the Mineral Rock Spring is preferable. And I do earnestly recommend it to all who are afflicted with the disease commonly known as Diabetes.
Respectfully yours, Alfred Wilson,
Dept. Coll. Int. Rev., No. 8 W. Third Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Hudson, Wis., Jan. 3, 1873.
Messrs. C. C. Olin & Co.—Dear Sirs: I am astonished at the immediate benefit received from the use of your healing water. I commenced using the water as directed, and found a marked change, reducing specific gravity of urine 32 down to 20 in three days, producing a moist skin and a direct perspiration, making an entire change for the better in my digestion. I also find it beneficial to the liver. Since drinking the water, I rest much better at night, and without being disturbed, as I usually was before, from two to three times during every night. Thinking of visiting your spring in the summer, believing the water to do all that you claim, and knowing the favorable results in my own case, you will please express the forty gallons immediately, as I am satisfied that it does not lose any of its healing properties by shipping. I think your price very reasonable, and will advertise your Spring all I can, for the benefit of invalids suffering with those incurable diseases of Bright's Disease and Saccharine Diabetes, as I know they can be immediately relieved by drinking Mineral Rock Spring Water. With kindest regards, yours truly, Geo. Jones.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS,
For all the purposes of a Family Physic,
CURING
Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach and Breath, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and Purifying the Blood, are the most congenial purgative yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other Pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organ into action and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every day complaints of everybody, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skillful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens, send certificates of cures performed and of great benefits they have derived from these Pills. They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar-coated, they are easy to take and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

On motion Saturday, August 1st at 3 o,clock P. M, was selected as the time for holding township caucuses to select delegates to the County Convention.

The second thought on the currence bill came to pass in the senate the 13th the vote changing just a trifle but not enough to pass it over a vote, Mr. Sherman seems to have given up his abhorance at the thought of trfling with the finances, and joins the rank of the inflationists.

There is much rejoicing in California now that they have got the bandid Vaspues, weighed down with chains, with no prospect of delivery from them until they are substituted by hemp around his neck. It is reported that his fetters weigh nineteen pounds, and that these are attached to an iron bar by enormously heavy chans. What a feeling of security the community must enjoy now that there is a prospect of this great rascal getting his just deserts

Secretary of State.

We are informed that Dr T. Davenport, of Warsaw, will be a candidate for Secretary of state. We have been acquainted with the Doctor for some time and know him to be possessed of all the qualifications to fill this imporant office. He is a gentleman of fine abilities scholarly attainments, an honest up right man. There will be none mentioned in connection with this position that will have greater claims, more merit than Mr. D. This will give our district a repesentation and feeling, that he would be the right man to the right place, it will be to our interest in the north to stand by him and secure his nomanation.

Neither George W. Curtis nor Carl Schurz made promiuent in the eulogies of the late Senator Sumner one of the chief glories of his character, as neither of them dwelt prominently upon the subject of his manly hatred of all stealing. In this age, when respectable men seem to delight to aplogize for successful thievery, and to blow down to its practitioners, Charles Sumner never paid homage to any known robber, but with language strong and manly he denounced men and measures whereever the appearance indicated robbery of any kind. In this respect the lamented Senator was far in advance of his cultivated and more pretentious contemporaries. Upon whom has this mantle of honesty fallen? We shall carefully watch our public men to find an answer to the question.

The Indiadapolis Sentnel fostered and petted a new party. That party was to sweep the State. The Sentinel, for the sake of its new-found friends, made hast to abandon the Democratic party. The new party met in Convension. The most important thing it did was to adopt some resolution on the commanding question of the hour, that of currency. Suddenly the Sentinel discovered that the new party wasn't its party at all, and said .

The resolution on the currency is an affront to the intelligence of a civilized community, and sounds not unlike an extract from the doings of the Commune. From the phraseology, it may be presumed that it was boiled down by Messrs. Buchannan and Olleman, from the extraordinary jumble which figured in the Indana plain last winter, and which even Congress in its most insane moments rejected. It is hardly possible to conceive sane men give expression to theories and sentiments which are not only opposed to all the laws of reason in finance, but really incendiary and base."

The most melancholy thing in life is to raise a child and then find it isn't yours.

The Supreme Court Judgeship.

At the next October election there is to be elected a Judge of the Supreme Court from the 5th Sup. Court District created by the last Legislature. The Counties comprising the District are the following. Lake, Benton, Porter Laporte, St. Joseph, Elkhart Kosciusko, Marshal, Stark, Jasper, Newton, Pulaski, Fulton, Wabash Miami Cass, Carroll, DeKalb, and Noble.—The Judge is to be elected by the electors of the entire State, but he must reside within the district for which he is to be elected, Among the names which we have heard most frequently and favorably mentiond as suitable to be placed upon the Democratic ticket for that office, is that of Hon. T. J Merrifield, of Valparaiso, Mr Merrifield is too well and too favorably known to the bar and people of Northern Indiana to need any commendation from us. He stands high in the estimation of both bench and bar for legal knowledge and ability, while his character for honesty, fairness and integrity is beyond reproach from any quarter. We heartily second the movement in favor of his nomanation. —Warsaw Union.

The New Party.

The Logansport Journal says the no-name State convention in Indianaoplis, on the 10th inst., is generaly considered a failure. The attendance was small, and the number participating much smaller. On a call of counties, representatives of only about one third of the counties in this State could be found. The participants were earnest, honest men, but they had no plan action, and it was manifest that no great common purpose had drew them together.

The following ticket was nominated

For Secretary of State—Noyes S. White, of Vigo County.

For Auditor of State—Ebenezer Henderson, of Steuben county.

For Treasurer of Stae—Norris C. Bennett, of Steuben County.

For Attorney—General—Captain James A. S. Mitchelle, of Elkhart Co

For Judge of the Supreme Court—Horace P. Biddler of Cass County

For Superintendent of Public Instruction—
Clarkson Davis, of Henry County.

This ticket is generally regarded as a weak one. Noyes S. White its head. has for years beeen resting under a charge of having been expelled from an Odd Follows Lodge in Warrick Co. for embezzling its funs. Serious charge. are also made affecting the integrity of Mr. Henderson. Caption Bennett and Mitchell are respectable gentlemen, but not known to posess any peculiar fitness for the positions for which they are nominated. Judge Biddle and Mr Davis are very decidedly the best men on the ticket. The latter is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The following platform was adopted.

Resolved That we are in favor of the office seeking the man and not the man the office; various officers who are honest and capable without regard to former pelitical opinions; that we detest bribery, corruption and fraud in obtaining votes either by the use of money or whisky. and will not support any man for office known to be guilty of the same, and that we are opposed to electing any man to fill the same office more than for one term in succession, from the president down.

Resolved, that we uncompromisingly comdemn the practice of our public officials in recieving free passes from railroad managers.

Resolved. That we denounce the action of our Legislature and Representatives in Congress and state for the increase of taxes, fee and salaries of all to a reasonable basis.

Resolved, That we demand a reduction of all public expenditure to the end that taxation may be reduced to the lowest possible limit.

Resolved, That it is contrary to the policy of good Government to encourage litigation, and that the allowing of ten per cent. on judgment. and the collecting of attorneys, fees from defendent. encourage litigation. favors capital. and is a source of corruption and subseves no good purpose, and there fore ought to be remedied by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, that the prsent assessment law of real estate imposes unequal and unjust burdens on the producing class corporate wealth, and we demand its speedy amendment.

Resolved, that we demand a charge in our Grand Jury system, that their jurisdiction extend to felonies only.

Resolved. That no party is worthy our confidence denies the rights of the people to restrict the abuses of the liquor traffic.

Don't forget Tommy Leasure when you want a splendid article of Ice Cream.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER SIXTEEN.

Cedar creek runs across the north west corner of the township and the two branches of Bear creek, rise in it, but are not living streams, in very dry weather, until after they cross the township line.

The first settler in the township so far as I know, was Wm. Miller, who moved in, in the spring of '36. We have mentioned that he and his son Joseph Miller, cut the first wagon track from the river settlements through to Cedar creek, below Auburn. This road crossed Jackson Township, from its east line, very nearly to the west one. I mentioned also, in the same connection, the cutting of a road from Shryock's, or as it was then called, Blair's mill. I am now informed, by Joseph Miller himself, that this was but a narrow track, with the logs still remaining in it, and that the articles brought through on it, were hauled by means of a yoke of cattle, and a "backwoods" sled, made in the following manner. A sapling was cut, having a fork at the top, consisting of two stout limbs, which were left several feet long. These limbs constituted the "runners" of the sled; and the body of the sapling, passing through the ring on the ox yoke, formed the tongue. On these uncouth runners a kind of box was fixed, on which the articles to be drawn were placed. This sled possessed a double advantage over more civilized vehicles. 1st, Being narrower before, where the limbs united, and gradually widening backwards, it could "nose" its way through the bushes, gradually bending down, and over-riding those that were not too stubborn; and 2nd, it easily slipped over any logs that the oxen could surmount. The narrow track cut for the passage of this "lizard" alligator, or whatever else you may choose to call it, was widened, and the logs cut out, by Park and Eiller, for the passage of a cart, as mentioned in our last chapter.

Other early settlers, in the north west part of the township, were T. L. Yates, who had sold his land on the river, and settled where Alonzo Lockwood now owns Leonard Boice and Adam Hartle, who occupied the tract of land now owned by Henry Feagler, Benjamin Miller, and the above mentioned Alonzo Lockwood.

In the south east corner, were James Steward, Samuel Henderson, John Moody and his brother David, Wm. Watson, senr and their families; Nathan Wyatt and his sons, then forming three families; Jacob Mowrer (afterwards Justice of the peace,) and Willis Bishop. Farther north on the east side of the Township, were Wm. Means, the first Justice elected in the Township, and his son James; Sam'l Tarney, who filled several offices in the Township; Henry Dove; Abram and Amarih Johnson, Wm. R. Moore, Wm. McClure Wm. Squires, Wm. and Matthew George, Henry Brewn, Esq, Sam'l Guisinger, and Nelson Griffith. Around the center of the Township, the first settlers were Mr. Essig Joseph Walters and Wm. McNabb. Mr. Walters, has served years as County Commissioner, and Mr. McNabb in Township offices.

The untimely death of two young men —brothers—the sons of Esquire Means, was a distressing incident in the early settlement of this Township. They were at work together in the clearing, and one of them came to the well at the house for a drink, and accidentally losing the bucket in the well he went down to get it. There were damps in the well, and he fell senseless into the water. The women raised the alarm, and the other young man hastened to the well, and perhaps not understanding the matter, went down to try to rescue his brother, and fell senseless with him. Before they could be drawn out, life was entirely extinct.

The "hurricane" was another remarkable event of those early times. I think it occurred in the summer or fall of 1841. A dark cloud arose seeming to threaten a heavy shower, but soon the rapid motion and wild confusion of the clouds betokened the approach of a windstorm. It struck the forest about where the western line of the farm of Joseph Woolsey, deceased now is; and, from thence, leveled the timber with scarce any exception. William and Mathew George, Henry Brown, Nelson Griffith, and perhaps one or two other men, were working on the road, west of where Mr. Karper now lives, and about 80 rods from the residence of Mr. Brown.

The cabin of Mr. Karper had been raised, but he had not yet moved in. The men, seeing the storm coming, and the air darkened with the limbs of trees which the wind was carrying toward them, and hearing the continual roar of falling timber, ran with all their speed to the house of Mr Brown where his children and a daughter of Wm. Monroe were, and rushing in, they seized the children, and car-

The trouble among the coal-miners in the Hocking Valley is simmering down. The prompt action of Governor Allen and his representative has thus far prevented a collision between the strikers and employ. A number of the negroes have joined the unionists, but as the supply of negroes is inexhaustible it is not likely that the tactics of the strikers will avoil. The coal operators are determined to pen their minds, and the strikers might as well yield to the inevitable.

Our thanks are due our Catholic friends for a most beautiful cake, made by that master confectioner, Wieman, of Fort Wayne.

We advertised for a boy last week and have had a number of applications already. We have secured one and further application is unnecessary.

We have received an invitation from the Tammany Society of New York to attend the 98th Anniversary of American Independence. As we don't go much on that society we shall not attend.

The Steuben Republican says that Mr. Edward Fisher, of Richland-tp., while at work in his saw mill the other day, slipped and fell a distance of some 20 feet, striking his head and shoulders on the hard ground, and receiving injuries from which he died.

We take the following startling paragraph from the columns of the Butler News, headed, "Auburn Items:

Thirty trillions of cubic feet of water is raised daily by evaporation from the surface of the ocean.

Great Heavens. If this thing keeps on what are the people of Auburn going to do about?

We receive a hat-full of communications about every week, all signed by fictitious names. The authors will not be surprised to learn that they all go into the waste basket, from the fact that the real name of the author is not given also. We must know who they come from no matter what other name they desire to go before the public.

Fort Wayne has a few coal oil lamps set up here and there through the city and this is called lighting the city. They add to the gloom on dark nights, and make the weary traveler think he has struck oil when he has'nt. Its only Naptha. They have a good gas company there and that is the reason they light up with oil.

Some people go to the circus for amusement, others go to church from a sense of duty, and others still go to jail, but the public generally goes to the best dry goods store to make their purchases, and that is Miller & Casebeer's, where the largest stock and lowest prices are to be found, as all those who have bought there can testify.

The managers of the festival last Tuesday evening feel that an apology is due the band, owing to an oversight on their part It was intended to have them entertained for the excellent music discoursed, but owing to the great jam and confusion, they were overlooked. Should an entertainment be gotten up for the band, they will endeavor to show their appreciation by contributing to its success.

Catholic Festival—The largest and most successful festival ever held in this place was that of last Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Catholic Church. It was thought of but a few days ago and yet it was a grand success in all its features. Not so attractive and enjoyable as the Odd Fellows of last year, but more exciting and extensively patronized. Four large rooms in Ensly's building were occupied, and the display of good things were very fine. The receipts of the evening will amount to about $180. Father A. Young returns the thanks of the church to the ladies, the band, and the public generally for their assistance and patronage.

Parties wanting to buy large bills of goods should not fail to see Richmond's stock.

Corn 80 cents and Oats 55 cts at Hare't Feed Store.

As a rule, newspaper men are not given to "putting on airs," but we notice, lately, in some of our exchanges, suggestions about "cleaning silverware." Why don't they write about something they have in the house, or tell their readers how long a man can live off the shadow of a well polished soup-bone? They can't play their silver-ware dodge on an intelligent public.—Pharos.

The Steuben Republican says, When our Republican friends consider it best to go outside of the party to effect any needed correction in the policy or procedure there in, they commit a grave error.

We differ with the Republican, and believe this to be an attempt only to whip back those members of that party, who have tried for years to reform and correct the abuses that are disgusting the people generally. We believe that honest people ought to step out from any organization that becomes as corrupt as the Radical party now is.

Over the Waters.—We have received a letter from our European friends, Messrs Klotz, Baker, Weaver and Hebel, dated New York June 18th '74. They arrived in New York last Thursday, and stopped at Hartman's Hotel; they were fortunate enough to secure the services of Mr. Koesterlitz who showed them the great points, (not five points) of the city. It is said that after the arrival of Hebel the brewers raised the price of beer, for which we are sorry on Weaver's account. On Saturday they embarked on the steamer "Oder," for Bremen. They took 1st class Cabin passage, and before their departure their many friends, especially the brewers serenaded them with a band, and gave them a farewell dinner, so that the lads fared bully. We will now soon have an efficient corps of European correspondents We have our own correspondent in New York now, and our readers may look out for something good in this way. We have received two already, but too late for this week.

At a meeting called at the Court House Monday, June 15th, 1874, for making arrangements for celebrating the 19th Anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence.

L. P. Vordermark was chosen Chairman and T. H. Sprott, Sec'y. On motion the following committees were chosen:

Committee on Spekers—Tom. C. Mays, S. Lauferty and N. Ensley.

Committe on Arrangements—Jno. L. Davis, Tom. C. Mays and Wm. McIntyre, Committee on Finance—David McQuiston, Benson Martin and Chas Baker.

Committee on Footrace—D. McQuiston, L. P. Vordermark and Mr. Wile.

Committee on Grounds—H. E. Altenburg Bruce Miller, T. A. Clark, Wm. Sheffer and C. Brown.

Committee on Fire-works—D. McQuiston, Jno. L. Davis, V. A. Beard.

Committee on Singing—Charles Shepherd, James E. Rose, W. Griswold.

J. H. Ford, President of the day with instructions to appoint one Vice-president from each township in the county.

H. E. Altenburg, marshal of the day with instructions to appoint as many deputies as he may deem necessary.

On motion the meeting adjourned to meet at the Court House, Thursday eve., June 17th, 1844.

L. P. VOERERMARK, Chair
T. H. Sprott, Sec,y.

Corunna—This burg seems to working out of the kinks at quite a rapid pace.—Several new dwelling houses are in course of erection and a general fixing up seems to be in order.

The new Church will present a fine appearance when completed, They are having a fearful time building it on account one old "deacon" doing too much work with his "gab."

Lafe Miller, Esq., freight agent, shipped in one day 230,985 bushels of wheat. He is also the possesser of a fast horse, that racks a mile in 3 minutes and turns and trots it back in the same time.

The depot has undergone a thorough renovating, which adds materially to the appearance of the structure. Mike Bollen the enterprising operator, has his department fixed up in superb style,

Barney Dearborn & Co., have fitted up a good livery stable and supplied it with horses and vehicles. They are also proprietors of the hotel.

The Masons have repaired a room, on Main street, at considerable expense and leased it for five years. It would well for her citizens to have a town hall, because there's no telling how soon the Johnson & Christies' minstrel troupe will start out again.

The Corunna and Sedan boys have organized a joint base ball club, and now stand ready for a game with any other in the county.

Mr. McMillen is running a butcher shop and is kept busy supplying the wants of the public.

The crops are not very good, especially that of the wheat. The land is about all clay, which accounts for it.

From Druggists.

There is no case of Dyspepsia that Green's August Flower will not cure. Come to the Drug Store of Davenport & Co., and inquire about it. If you suffer from costiveness, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, or derangement of the System, try it. Two or three doses will relieve you.

Boschee's German Syrup is now sold in every town and City in the United States We have not less than five hundred letters from Druggists, saying it is the best medicine they ever sold for Consumption, Throat or Lung disease. 75 cents per bottle.

RICH AND RACY.

An Awful Warning.

T. C. Mays Remember I will Have My revenge Remember That I Curse you as long as I live Never I see you out at night it will not be good for you I will dog you wherever you go your footsteps will never die out of my Ears Remember them that does not put in the paper what I rite to them I swear by the lost black Art I will have my revenge if I have to call up legions of my acomplices from the under world I swear I will if I have to call on the most Powerfull enemies them that hate mankind

Mr Mays Edward Everett does not take it so light as that I will treat you as Abdel Hassen did his slave

My name is Edward Everett alias Mongrell the shadow of revenge

Years from now if you are an old man my blow will fall on your unsuspecting Head now mark my words and remember my words when you are at night a shadow as if smoke rising from the ground

Mongrell of the revenge

Shades of Franklin! Who would'nt be an editor. Just think what a nice time we will have for years to come dodging around corners on dark nights, and dreaming of legions of firey demons hovering around us. Oh, its nice to be an editor. However we have armed ourself with a stomach pump and a seven barrel pop-gun, and the first fellow we notice putting our footsteps in their ears will get one or tother, we don't know which. Come on, McDuff.

MARRIED.

Casebeer—Bunnell—On Thursday evening June 4th at the residence of the bride's parents at Hickeville, Ohio, by the Rev. J. Lower, Mr. B. F. Casebeer of Auburn and Miss Belle Bunnell.

There is nothing that fills our heart with so much joy as to learn of the happiness of our friends, and be so kindly remembered by them. We wish Ben and his handsome bride a world of happiness, a journey down the path of life as delightful and pleasant as is possible to fall to the lot of man.

DEATHS.

Snyder.—Elizabeth Snyder was born September 28th 1852; died June 12th 1874; aged 21 years, 8 months, and 14 days.

The deceased was only sister of Messrs David, Simon and John Snyder, of Auburn well known throughout our county. The Messrs Snyder being in business in town, and their sister living with their stepmother—both their parents being dead—determined to keep house, the sister taking charge of the home. They had rented the new property of Mr Kuhlman, on the corner of Jefferson and 6th sts, and here the re-united members of the long scattered family expected to enjoy each other's society, and be happy once more in a family home. How often are joys just realized snatched from those who expected to possess them! So it was in this case. On Thursday the sister came to town, prepared the house for the carpets, and with the assistance of one of the brothers had put two of them down. In the evening she was taken with vomiting and severe pain in the head. As she was subject to severe attacks of headache, no fears were entertained. She went into Mrs. Klotz's, the next door, and at 9 o'clock a physician was called; she rested well from midnight until morning, when the pain in her head returned, and she died at noon, in dreadful paroxysms of pain in her head. Our town was startled with the unexpected intelligence, and no one half so surprised as the members of the family. Before they even dreamed of the case being serious, she was dead! Not often does death thus come to a family; but when it does, it smites with a crushing blow. There was sorrow in our streets. The hum of joy was hushed in our homes.

The funeral took place from the Presbyterian church, on Saturday at ten A. M. The house was crowded with those who mourn.

"What is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away," were the words for the discourse.

I bear witness to the statement I have heard from many, that they never saw a funeral where so many felt bereaved. She had a warm place in the hearts of those who were acquainted with her.

Many were present from her old home. Young and old alike came to pay their tribute of sorrow. The deep furrows of hoary age ran full with tears. The hands that had received her into this world, tremblingly with love's sorrow, stroked the face now as cold as marble and as pale. That was no feigned grief that wept and sobbed over the dead. If sympathy can possibly give comfort in an hour of such sore bereavement, then the Messrs Snyder have more to comfort them, than the common lot of those who mourn.

Thus one, in the bloom of early womanhood, has been suddenly and unexpectedly cut down and borne away to the final resting place of us all.

"The evening cloud, the morning dew
The withering grass, the fading flower
Of earthly hopes are emblems true
The glory of a passing hour."

Another is missed the circle of friends. Another link is taken from the lessening family chain. A vacancy is made that will not again be filled. A wound inflicted in hearts that will not heal.

If there be one that o'er thy dead,
Hath in thy grief borne part;
And watched in sickness by thy bed;
Call that a kindred heart.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA., has been visited by a series of incendiary fires during the past two or three years, involving the destruction of over a million dollars' worth of property. A few days ago five members of the volunteer fire department of the town were arrested on suspicion of being the incendiaries, and they have confessed to the crime.

The West.

JAMES LICK, a very wealthy Californian, has deeded nearly the whole of his vast property to the public. He gives $700,000 to the construction of the largest and best telescope in the world for the observatory at Lake Tahoe; $420,000 for public monuments; $150,000 for public baths in San Francisco; $100,000 for the Old Ladies' Home; $300,000 for the endowment of the School of Mechanical Arts of California, and various sums, ranging from $10,000 to $30,000, to other public charities. ....Judge Drummond, of the United States Circuit Court, heard arguments for granting an injunction against the Wisconsin Railway Commissioners, and further hearing of the case was postponed for two weeks.

TELEGRAMS received at the War Department in Washington report that the Indians in the neighborhood of the Cheyenne Agency, in Southern Dakota, have gone on the war-path.

THE Wisconsin railroads have adopted the practice of requiring prepayment of fares before admitting passengers upon their trains, the object being to prevent the 3-cents-per-mile rides, which were becoming too frequent. ....The village of Tampico, Whiteside county, Ill., was visited by a terrific tornado on the night of the 6th inst. Twenty-one dwellings were totally destroyed, and every house in town more or less damaged. No lives were lost, though a number of persons were injured, several seriously....A horrible tragedy was enacted at Jeffersonville, Ind., on the 6th of June. A saloon-keeper named John McDerrick, while laboring under a fit of temporary insanity, murdered his wife and child by shooting them with a revolver, and then blew out his own brains.

THE storm of wind and rain on the 8th inst. seems to have been general throughout the Northwest, traversing a wide extent of territory, and was very destructive. Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan especially suffered, the damage to property in those States amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

THE National Anti-Slavery Reunion was held in Chicago, commencing on the 9th inst. The meeting was largely attended, many prominent old-line Abolitionists being present, including Vice-President Wilson, who was elected Chairman of the meeting. ..Advices from the West represent that the Comanche and Cheyenne Indians are preparing for a raid into Texas....The first train of cars passed over the bridge at St. Louis on the 9th of June....The hog cholera is playing havoc with the swine in Jackson county, Ill.

GOV. CARPENTER, having been applied to by the Iowa Grangers as to his action relative to the Railroad Tariff law, replies: "Should the railroads attempt to overthrow it by appealing to the courts, I shall not hesitate in the duty which will then be upon me, to see to it that all the authority possessed by the Executive is invoked to secure its enforcement. In the performance of this duty, the law associates with me the other members of the Executive Council, each of whom is entirely in sympathy with me in respect to the line of our duty in the case of resistance by the railroad companies."

The South.

FROM Louisiana word comes that hundreds of people are without either food or shelter, thrown out of house and home by the flood. The entire amount thus far contributed to their relief is about $170,000.....Cholera has made its unwelcome appearance in New Orleans. Fears are entertained there that in consequence of the floods, and the soggy condition of the country, it may spread and become unusually virulent.

Washington.

The conference committee on the currency bill on the 4th inst. agreed to a report recommending the passage of a measure which is substantially the House bill, with minor changes, and a provision that the retirement of greenbacks on the issue of the national bank currency shall be at the rate of 37½ per cent....Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Sawyer has tendered his resignation..... Adolph Cluss has brought suit for libel against Shepherd and other members of the Washington Board of Public Works, by whom he was officially charged with having committed perjury.

ON account of the incorporation of a clause in the Indian Appropriation bill recently passed by Congress, requiring all the accounts of the Indian Commissioners to be audited in Washington, the members of the Board have resigned in a body....A Washington dispatch of the 9th inst. says the Currency Conference Committee have agreed to report a bill in the form agreed upon and made known to the President before the publication of his views—that is, one for free banking, with the retirement of thirty-seven and one-half per cent. of greenbacks, the abolition of reserves in circulation, except five per cent. deposited in the Treasury to redeem mutilated notes, and fixing the time for redeeming greenbacks in gold bonds in January, 1878.

THE Pension bill has passed both houses of Congress. The principal features of the bill are the increase of the monthly allowance of those totally disabled in the army to $50, and a slight increase of the pensions of those who have lost one leg or arm. These changes will not perceptibly increase the appropriations. ....Washington correspondents state that all hopes of the passage of the Civil Rights bill at the present session are given up....The Senate Committee on Railroads have agreed to postpone the question of the terminus of the Pacific railroad, as between Omaha and Council Bluffs, until the next session of Congress. ....After due deliberation, the committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia have prepared a bill abolishing every vestige of the existing local government, and committing the affairs of the District to a commission of three persons, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, but the Commissioners are restrained from exercising any of the functions of government save to keep the streets in repair. All the public improvements projected by the Board of Public Works are to be discontinued for the time being. The First and Second Comptrollers of the Currency are directed to ascertain the precise amount of the public debt, and to take measures for the payment of the interest. A committee to sit during the recess of Congress is to prepare a plan for the future government of the District.

SENATOR LOGAN has introduced in Congress a bill to establish the "Commercial Railway Company." It proposes to incorporate a company by that name, with a capital of $200,000,000, to construct and operate a railroad with four or more tracks from New York city to the cities of Chicago and St. Louis, dividing its main line at such point as may be found best to reach said cities, with the right to extend its road from Chicago to any point on the Mississippi river above St. Louis. The road is to be commenced within two years and finished within twelve years from the enactment of the bill. The rates for the transportation of passengers and freight are to be fixed by a commission composed of three persons, to be appointed by the President, one person by the Governor of each State through which the road shall pass, and three persons by the corporation, but the charges shall not exceed 10 cents per bushel of grain by the car-load, bulk freight, and 30 cents per barrel of flour from Chicago or St. Louis to Jersey City. The names of the proposed incorporators are left blank.

THE President has nominated J. C. Bancroft Davis Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to the German Empire....The House Committee on Railroads and Canals have made a favorable report on Representative Hawley's bill connecting the waters of Lake Michigan and the Illinois, Mississippi and Rock rivers. The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to lay out and construct a canal from a point at or near Hennepin, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi river, with a branch canal or feeder from the Rock river, at the city of Dixon, connecting with the main line of the canal near the town of Sheffield. The total length of the canal is 102 miles, at an estimated cost of a little over $4,500,000. The bill appropriates $1,000,000 toward its commencement.

General.

THE sessions of the American Institute of Homeopathy commenced at Niagara Falls on the 9th inst. Dr. Youlin, President of the Institute, in his address, stated that France has 4,000 homeopathic practitioners, Germany 500, Great Britain 400, Italy 200, and the United States nearly 8,000.

Political.

THE majority of Grover (Democrat) over Talman, for Governor of Oregon, is 400.

THE Republicans of the Twenty-second District of Pennsylvania have renominated Gen. James S. Negley for Congress....Appointments by the President: W. C. Whitson, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Idaho; Roger S. Greene, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory; Charles H. Webb, United States Attorney for the Western District of Wisconsin; Franklin W. Oakley, United States Marshal for the Western District of Wisconsin; Luman Norton Judd, Register of the Land-Office of Dakota.

THE Illinois Independent Convention assembled at Springfield on the 10th of June. David Gore, of Macoupin county, was nominated for State Treasurer, and S. H. Etter, of McLean county, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. What is known as the Decatur Platform was adopted with a few slight changes....The State Reform Convention of Indiana met at Indianapolis on Wednesday, the 10th inst., and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, Noyes S. White, of Vigo county (Democrat); Auditor of State, Ebenezer Henderson, of Morgan county (Democrat); Treasurer of State, N. C. Bennett, of Steuben county, (Republican); Attorney-General, James A. S. Mitchell, of Elkhart county (Democrat); Judge of the Supreme Court, H. P. Biddle, of Cass county (Republican); Superintendent of Public Instruction, Clark Davis, of Henry County (Republican)....The Anti Monopolists of Minnesota will hold their State Convention at St. Paul, on the 23d of September....The Independents of Kansas have called a nominating convention to be held at Topeka on the 5th of August.

Foreign.

MINERS who were lately engaged in a strike have been driven from their houses by the proprietors of the Durham (Eng.) collieries. ....The French Assembly on the 14th inst. passed the General Electoral bill to its second reading by a majority of 75. This is practically the same bill upon which the DeBroglie Cabinet was defeated. It disfranchises large numbers of citizens, particularly those between the ages of 21 and 25, and as the younger men of France are inclined toward republicanism, this is deemed a blow at republican institutions....A cable telegram conveys the highly important intelligence that "the Duchess of Edinburgh's position at Court has been settled. She is to be called 'Her Royal Imperial or Imperial Royal Highness,' and is to rank next to the Princess of Wales, except when the Princess Royal, the Crown Princess of Prussia, happens to visit England."....The Carlists are exceedingly active in Spain.

A LICENSING bill has passed the British House of Commons by a vote of 167 to 126. It fixes the hours for opening and closing saloons at 7 o'clock in the morning and at 12:20 at night in London; in towns having over 2,500 population from 7 o'clock in the morning to 11 o'clock in the evening, and in towns with a less number of people from 6 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock in the evening.

A REVOLUTIONARY movement is probable in Mexico....The Catholic Episcopate of Bohemia has determined to resist the ecclesiastical laws, and has begun its opposition by making appointments to vacant livings.... Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender, has issued a decree authorizing the provinces now occupied by his forces to elect members of the Council which is to personally attend him in Spain....The Left Center in the French Assembly has adopted a platform calling for a definite proclamation of a republic or a dissolution of the Assembly. There are no hopes of an alliance between the Right Center and the Left Center.

A PARIS telegram of the 9th inst. says: "The feeling at Versailles is gloomy. The proposal for a dissolution of the Assembly has been signed by 125 Deputies, who have hopes of securing in addition the signatures of 195 members forming the Left Center. A motion for dissolution will be presented in the Chamber at the earliest opportunity. The Left Center is determined to have a settlement of the question of republic or dissolution before the August adjournment."....All the European powers have agreed to send delegates to an International Conference in Vienna, which is to consider measures to prevent the spread of cholera.

PARIS papers publish a letter written by the Bishop of Laranda giving particulars of the massacre of Christians at Tong King, China. He says that of eighty thousand Christians in his mission ten thousand were strangled, burned and drowned, and that he himself does not expect to escape martyrdom. The report is not verified, although the Paris papers credit the statements....The Duke of Connaught (Prince Arthur) has taken his seat as a member of the British House of Lords.

A PARIS telegram states that while M. Gambetta was waiting for the Versailles train he was hustled and insulted by a band of well-known Bonapartists....A collision between the Republicans and Bonapartists is regarded as imminent....The French Assembly has fixed the age of voters at 21 years ..Reports from the famine districts in India are becoming decidedly encouraging. Not only are cases of actual starvation rare, but the number of persons to be relieved is decreasing in consequence of the recent rains.

Newspaper Postage.

A Washington dispatch states that the House Postoffice Committee have agreed to report the bill providing that on all newspapers and periodical publications mailed from a known office or news-agency, and addressed to regular subscribers or news-agents, postage shall be charged at the following rates:

Newspaper and periodical publications issued weekly, and more frequently than once a week, one cent and a half, and on those issued less frequently than once a week, three cents, for each pound or fraction thereof. On receipt of such newspapers and periodical publications at the office of mailing, they are to be weighed in bulk and postage paid thereon by special adhesive stamps.

Newspapers, one copy to each actual subscriber residing within the county where printed, in whole or in part, and published, go free through the mails; but the same shall not not be delivered at letter-carrier offices or distributed by carriers, unless postage is paid thereon, as by law provided; and newspapers and magazines reciprocally interchanged between publishers, not exceeding sixteen ounces in weight, to be confined to a single copy of each publication, go free through the mails. All mailable matter of the third class may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof, and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of 1 cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof, but nothing herein contained shall be held to change or amend section 134 of said act. Affidavits are to be made by publishers or news-agents to secure their adherence to these provisions, for the violation of which penalties are prescribed.

PRESIDENT GRANT.

His Views on the Finance Question—He Expresses Himself Unqualifiedly in Favor of Specie Payments, and Advises an Early Repeal of the Legal-Tender Act.

Senator Jones, of Nevada, has procured from President Grant a memorandum giving his views on the finances, which is printed below, as telegraphed from Washington with the President's consent:

I believe it (says the President) a high and plain duty to return to a specie basis at the earliest practicable day, not only in compliance with legislative and party pledges, but as a step indispensable to lasting national prosperity. I believe, further, that the time has come when this can be done, or at least begun, with less embarrassment to every branch of industry than at any future time. After resort has been had to unstable and temporary expedients to stimulate unreal prosperity and speculation on a basis other than coin, the recognized medium of exchange throughout the commercial world, the particular mode selected to bring about the restoration of a specie standard is not of so much consequence as that some adequate plan be devised, the time fixed when currency shall be exchangeable for coin at par, and the plan adopted rigidly adhered to. It is not probable that any legislation suggested by me would prove acceptable to both branches of Congress, and indeed a full discussion might shake my own faith in the details of any plan I might propose. I will, however, venture to state the general features of action, which seem to me advisable—the financial platform on which I would stand—and any departure from which would be in a spirit of concession and harmony in deference to conflicting opinions.

First—I would like to see the legal-tender clause, so called, repealed, the repeal to take effect at some future time, say July 1, 1875. This would cause all contracts made after that date for wages, sales, etc., to be estimated in coin. It would correct our notions of value; the specie-dollar would be the only dollar known as the measure of equivalents when debts afterward contracted were paid in currency. Instead of calling a paper-dollar a dollar, and quoting gold at so much premium, we should think and speak of the paper as at so much discount. This alone would aid greatly in bringing the two currencies nearer together at par.

Second—I would like to see a provision that at a fixed day, say July 1, 1876, the currency issued by the United States should be redeemed in coin on presentation to any Assistant Treasurer, and that all currency so redeemed should be canceled and never reissued. To effect this, it would be necessary to authorize the issue of bonds payable in gold, bearing such interest as would command par in gold, to be put out by the Treasury only in such sums as should from time to time be needed for the purpose of redemption. Such legislation would insure a return to sound financial principles in two years, and would, in my judgment, work less hardship to the debtor interest than is likely to come from putting off the day of final reckoning. It must be borne in mind, too, that the credit interest had its day of disadvantage also, when our present financial system was brought in by the supreme needs of the nation at the time.

I would further provide that, from and after the date fixed for redemption, no bills, whether of National Banks or of the United States, returned to the Treasury to be exchanged for new bills, should be replaced by bills of a less denomination than $10, and that in one year after resumption all bills of less than $5 should be withdrawn from circulation, and in two years all bills of less than $10 should be withdrawn. The advantage of this would be the strength given to the country against a time of depression resulting from war, failure of crops, or any other cause, by keeping always in the hands of the people a large supply of precious metals. With all the smaller transactions conducted in coin, many millions of it would be kept in constant use, and of course prevented from leaving the country. Undoubtedly, a poorer currency will always drive the better out of circulation. With paper a legal tender, and at a discount, gold and silver become articles of merchandise as much as wheat or cotton. The surplus will find the best market it can. With small bills in circulation, there is no use for coin except to keep in the vaults of banks to redeem circulation. During periods of great speculation and apparent prosperity there is little demand for coin, and then it will flow out to a market where it can be made to earn something, which it cannot do while lying idle. Gold, like anything else, when not needed becomes a surplus, and, like every other surplus, it seeks a market where it can find one. By giving it active employment, however, its presence can, it seems to me, be secured, and panics and depressions, which have occurred periodically in times of nominal specie payments, if they cannot be wholly prevented, can at least be greatly mitigated. Indeed, I question whether it would have been found necessary to depart from the standard of specie in the trying days which gave birth to the first legal-tender act, had the country taken the ground of no small bills as early as 1850. Again, I would provide an excess of revenue over current expenditures. I would do this by rigid economy, and by taxation where taxation can best be borne. Increased revenue would work a constant reduction of the debt and interest, and would provide coin to meet the demands on the Treasury for the redemption of its notes, thereby diminishing the amount of bonds needed for that purpose. All taxes, after redemption begins should be paid in coin or United States notes. This would force redemption on National Banks. With measures like these, or measures which would work out such results, I see no danger in authorizing free banking without limits.

RECIPROCITY.

Synopsis of the Proposed Treaty Between the United States and Canada.

The following is an outline of the proposed reciprocity treaty between this country and Canada, submitted by President Grant to the Senate for consideration:

First—The abandonment on the part of Great Britain and of Canada of all claim for compensation on account of the concessions of the United States by the Treaty of Washington of the privilege of the "inshore fisheries."

Second—The free admission and interchange of all natural products of the United States and the British Provinces.

Third—The reciprocally free admission of the manufactured products of the two counties, specifically enumerated.

Fourth—The Welland and St. Lawrence Canal to be built by the Dominion.

Fifth—The Saughnawga canal to be built by the Dominion.

Sixth—American and Canadian built vessels may carry cargoes and passengers from any port on the Great Lakes and the River St. Lawrence to any other such port.

Seventh—All canals on either side of the boundary to be open, under the same conditions, to the citizens of the two countries.

Eighth—Lake Michigan to be open to Canadians, as the St. Lawrence has been to Americans.

Ninth—Canadians may purchase American vessels and register them as Canadian, and Americans may purchase and register Canadian built vessels in like manner.

Tenth—A joint Commission to regulate the navigation of St. Clair lake and river.

Eleventh—A joint Commission for the propagation of fish.

Twelfth—A joint Commission for the regulation and maintenance of the light-houses.

Thirteenth—A joint Commission for regulating the interchange of traffic at custom-houses on the line.

Fourteenth—The treaty to continue in force for twenty-one years.

CONGRESS.

THURSDAY, June 4.—Senate.—The Senate was engaged most of the day in discussing the Windom cheap-transportation resolution—Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey and Bogy speaking in favor of, and Bayard and Scott opposing, the resolution.

House.—The following bills were passed: For the further security of navigation on the Mississippi river; to authorize the building of a bridge across the Mississippi at LaCrosse, Wis.; for the establishment of life-saving stations and houses of refuge on the sea and lake coasts, and to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service; for the deepening of the channel at the mouth of the Mississippi river, by dredging or otherwise; to prevent the introduction of infectious diseases into this country....Lamport introduced a bill to increase the tax on fermented liquors to $2 a barrel ....Woodford presented a petition from New York book and newspaper publishers for a uniform rate of postage of 1 cent a pound on newspapers, and 2 cents a pound on all other periodicals.

FRIDAY, June 5.—Senate.—The bill for the relief of certain settlers on public lands in Iowa and Minnesota was passed....Logan presented a memorial, signed by 3,000 citizens of Illinois, praying Congress to charter a double-track railroad from the Mississippi river to the Atlantic ocean.... The Senate engaged in a long debate on the bill authorizing the sending of agricultural documents through the mails free. Pending consideration of the bill, an adjournment to Monday was moved and carried.

House.—A bill was passed to admit all articles for the Centennial Exposition free of duty...,The bill authorizing the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi by the Eads jetty system was rejected, and a bill for the construction of the Fort St. Philip canal, offered by McCrary, was then taken up and passed. It confides to the Secretary of War the duty of making all necessary surveys, and, when these have been effected, of completing a contract for the construction of the canal. The maximum cost of the whole undertaking is fixed at $8,000,000. Morey, from the same committee, reported a bill to repeal the first section of the act of June 21, 1866, for the disposal of public lands for homesteads to actual settlements in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida and Arkansas. The bill was discussed at considerable length. The object of the bill is to allow public lands in the South, which were, after the war, reserved for settlement by freedmen, to be sold as they are in other sections of the country. The bill was recommitted, which is tantamount to its defeat.

SATURDAY, June 6.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—A long discussion of the deficiency appropriation was closed by the reference of the various amendments to a conference committee....The report of the Committee on Mississippi Levees, providing for a commission of engineers, was passed; also the bill reported by the Postoffice Committee, providing for the prepayment of postage on printed matter. The same committee also reported a bill to prevent "straw bids" for carrying the mails, and a bill for adjusting the salaries of Postmasters....The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice presented a report relative to the financial management of the West Judicial District of Arkansas since the organization in 1871. The committee recommend the abolition of the district, and its annexation to the Eastern district.

MONDAY, June 8.—Senate.—Bills were passed: Authorizing medals commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the first meeting of the Continental Congress and the Declaration of Independence; authorizing any Circuit Judge to designate the time for holding District or Circuit Court, and to designate the District Judge to attend and hold court in a district not his own; providing for the better organization of the District Courts of the United States within the State of Louisiana; to provide for the publication of the revised statutes of the United States....Pending discussion on the Moiety bill, the Senate adjourned.

House.—A bill was introduced to increase the revenues, to restrain gambling, and imposing a tax of 20 per cent. on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold, etc.....An attempt to take up the Civil Rights bill was defeated.....The bill for the admission of Colorado was passed under a suspension of the rules—170 to 65.... Gunckel, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill in relation to bounties. The bill proposes to pay all the rank and file who served faithfully in the army, including those borne on the rolls as slaves, $8.37½ per month for the whole time of service....The Louisiana contested election case of Sheridan vs. Pinchback was discussed without action.

TUESDAY, June 9.—Senate.—A joint resolution was passed providing for the termination of the treaty between the United States and Belgium of July 17, 1858....Logan introduced a bill to establish the Commercial Railway Company....Morton, from the conference committee on the Currency bill, made a report, which was ordered printed. It recommends that the volume of greenbacks be reduced as National Bank notes are issued in the proportion of 87½ per cent.; that a reserve on circulation of 5 per cent. be kept in the Treasury for the redemption of mutilated notes; that the reserve on deposits be diminished by 5 per cent.; that legal tenders be redeemed in 1878 by the issue of 5 per cent. bonds, the notes redeemed to be emitted for the purchase of 5-20 bonds....Conover submitted as an amendment to the House supplemental Tariff bill a proposition to impose a stamp-tax of one-twentieth of 1 per cent on all sales of bullion, coin, and stocks, and a stamp-tax of 1 mill per dollar of the value of all manufactured or unmanufactured cotton on contracts for future delivery.... Mr. Hitchcock, from the Committee on Territories, reported favorably the House bill to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State Government....The bill abolishing the moieties system of collecting the customs was discussed at length and laid over.

House.—The Louisiana contested election case came up, and the majority and minority reports of the Election Committee—the former declaring Pinchback elected, and the latter awarding the seat to Sheridan—were both rejected. A resolution was then adopted declaring that the testimony was not sufficient to show the election of either Pinchback or Sheridan, and permitting them to take further testimony....Butler (Mass.), from the Judiciary Committee, reported a substitute for the Geneva Award bill....A bill was passed abolishing the Western Judicial District of Arkansas.

WEDNESDAY, June 10.—Senate.—Ingalls introduced a bill to abolish the Board of Indian Commissioners....Howe, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries....The bill to amend the Customs Revenue laws, and to repeal moieties, was finally passed with only three dissenting votes—Flanagan, Howe and Pease.

House.—The Ways and Means Committee reported adversely on the following bills: To abolish the tax on cigars and tobacco, and to strengthen public credit; to repeal the taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco; for the issue of convertible bonds; to impose income tax; to repeal the duty on salt. ..Beck introduced a bill for the relief of owners and purchasers of lands sold for direct taxes in the insurrectionary States....Butler's substitute for the Geneva Award bill was taken up and passed—132 to 101. It provides for the payment of claims in the following order: (1) Direct losses; (2) war premiums; (3) insurance companies that incurred direct losses.

CURIOUS NAMES.—Queer names of all kinds occur on the Congressional rolls. "Ebenezer McJunkin," the member from the Twenty-third Pennsylvania District, for instance, and "Hezekiah Bundy." The Old Testament is represented by Abraham and Isaac, Reuben, Lot, Zachariah, Timothy, Moses and Aaron, Eli, Josiah, Hosea, Elijah, Abijah, Ephraim, Nathan and Jeremiah. The four evangelists appear, and Lazarus. Two gentlemen, "Chester Darrell" and "Lionel Sheldon," should be put into a novel immediately, while two Alonzos, Lorenzo, a Fernando and Jason refresh the memories of the dime blood-and-thunder stories, libretti and the Golden Fleece. There is the good old Puritan name of "Goodlove," borne by a very jolly, unpuritan, Teutonic-looking gentleman, Mr. Orth, of Indiana. And then follow Roscoe, Philetus, Roderic Random, Epps, Glenni, and Sobieski.

Died With His Boots On.

Burgett has fought his last battle. He is dead. He died in a Mississippi mud-hole, riddled with buckshot by Grider. Much to the disgust of the late Burgett, he died with his boots on, for the reason that they couldn't get him out of the mud-hole quick enough to carry out his pathetic request for the removal of his boots. Grider having been very industrious and precise in his musket-practice. The late lamented Burgett went for wool and got shorn. Exactly how many Griders have been sacrificed upon the altars of Burgett's ambition is not known, but it is stated that three Burgetts have died with their boots on, and now a pair of boots in a Mississippi mud-hole is all that is left of a fourth Burgett.

It happened this way. One fine morning Burgett learned that there was a Grider a few miles up the river. So he got out his skiff and stored it with provisions. He took plenty of money with him, thinking, perhaps, that he might transact a little business after he had settled matters with Grider. Having provided himself with a gun and two pistols, and ammunition enough to slaughter a regiment of Griders, the expedition started, and on the way Burgett practiced on several wild pigeons and turkeys. Burgett sailed leisurely on among the snags and sawyers, happy in the thought that each moment was bringing him nearer to Grider. He had calculated to meet Grider at Harkerode's Landing, on the Arkansas shore, and was not disappointed. Grider was there, with his shot-gun, for no Grider or Burgett ever traveled without weapon and ammunition. Burgett had a skiff-load of weapons and ammunition, and Grider, being on land, had all he could carry in a carpet-bag. When Burgett's skiff rounded to at the landing, Grider was on the river bank, calmly surveying the scenery. Burgett stepped briskly out, and, gathering up his gun, a few pistols, and what ammunition he could carry, walked up to the bank.

The conversation was short and touching. Grider accosted the bristling Burgett: "How are you, Henry? What do you mean by coming here this way?" Burgett replied: "I do not mean anything serious. How are you, Jesse?" Grider answered: "I am not very well." Thus far the conversation is not dissimilar to that which occurs every day between Smith and Brown when they meet on the street. But Burgett gave a very sudden turn to the conversation by remarking, "Then, damn you, take that," and thereupon fired at Grider. This was the signal for the battle of Burgett vs. Grider, and Grider won. The shot-guns being exhausted, the stock of pistols was brought into requisition and was used industriously. At last Burgett's ammunition gave out, while Grider was even with Burgett with an inning to spare, and he improved his inning. As Burgett sought to get into his skiff, Grider sent his compliments in the shape of a charge of buckshot, which were so liberally distributed through his anatomy that he had nothing more to say, but quietly laid down in the mud-hole, and, after requesting the crew of a steamer who had been witnesses of the affray to remove his boots, he turned his face to the mud and died.

Although it boots little to Burgett now whether his boots are on or off, it is somewhat sad to reflect that his last request could not be granted owing to the large number of Grider's buckshots and the rapid effects of the dose. We presume that Burgett reasoned in a nice metaphysical way that to die with his boots on indicated point-blank that he had died by gunpowder. He was naturally mortified and somewhat disappointed to die by Grider's gunpowder, and, if those boots of his could only be got off in time, why then it would be a point in his favor that he had died a natural death, even if he were in a mud-hole, full of Grider's buckshots as a pod is with peas. This last consolation was denied him, and so he died with his boots on, like the Burgetts before him. It is now incumbent upon some surviving Burgett to kill Grider before he can get his boots off, and so on, until all the Griders and Burgetts are gone, leaving behind them only a large and miscellaneous collection of boots, which by the way will be much more valuable and serviceable than all the Griders and Burgetts that ever walked in them.—Chicago Tribune.

The Scissors Editor.

Some people estimate the ability of a newspaper and the talent of its editor by the quantity of original matter. It is comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to pour out daily columns of words—words upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in one weak, washy, everlasting flood, and the command of his language may enable him to string them together like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be a meager and poor concern. Indeed the mere writing part of editing a paper is but a small portion of the work. The care, the time employed in selecting, is far more important, and the tact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than anything else; and that, we know, is half the battle. But, as we have said, an editor ought to be estimated, and his labor understood and appreciated by the general conduct of his paper—its tone, its uniform, consistent course, its aims, its management, its dignity, and its propriety. To preserve these as they should be preserved is enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervision of the newspaper establishment, which most editors have to encounter, the wonder is how they find time to write at all.

SWIFT, in passing through the county of Cavan, called at a homely but hospitable house, where he knew he should be well received. The Lady Bountiful of the mansion, rejoiced to have so distinguished a guest, runs up to him, and with great eagerness and flippancy asks him what he will have for dinner. "Will you have an apple-pie, sir? Will you have a gooseberry-pie, sir? Will you have a cherry-pie, sir? Will you have a currant pie, sir? Will you have a plum-pie, sir? Will you have a pigeon-pie, sir?" "Any pie, madame, but a magpie!"

Curious Transpositions.

A writer in the Newell Reporter has given the following literary curiosity. There are twenty readings of the same line, without adding or exchanging a word, or changing the ending or injuring the sense. The line is from "Gray's Elegy:"

"The ploughman homeward plods his weary way."

Variations:

The weary plowman homeward plods his way.

The weary plowman plods his homeward way.

The homeward plowman plods his weary way.

The homeward plowman, weary, plods his way.

The homeward, weary plowman, plods his way.

The weary, homeward plowman, plods his way.

Homeward the weary plowman plods his way.

Homeward, weary, the plowman plods his way.

A Wife and Mother Rendered a Childless Widow in an Hour.

From an aged citizen of Decatur county, Tenn., we have the particulars of the following series of appalling accidents, by which a happy and industrious wife and mother was bereft of her children and her husband in less than an hour: A man named Bennett Kyle, formerly a citizen of Wayne county, Tenn., having lost his wife some years ago, married a second, and with her removed to Missouri, where he settled, and engaged in farming. Two children were born to them, and they were prospering and happy. A few weeks ago a letter was received from the wife, detailing her terrible bereavement. She had gone a short distance from the house to do the family washing, taking with her her infant child, leaving the other, some two years old, at the house with her husband working upon the roof. Having occasion to be absent from her child for a few moments, when she returned she found a rattlesnake had fastened its fangs upon the wrist of her babe. She quickly dispatched the snake and freed the child, which almost immediately died. Clasping her infant in her arms she hastened to the house, where she found her other child drowned in a tub of water. Her screams of agony upon beholding this second bereavement startled her husband, who, losing his presence of mind, fell from the roof and was instantly killed. Thus, by this singular train of accidents, was the poor woman rendered a widow and childless in a few brief moments. Our informant knew the parties well, and vouches for the facts above related.

Reanimating a Corpse.

The experiment of reanimating a corpse was lately tried in New Orleans, and for a time succeeded admirably; but the sanguine hopes of the experimentalists were finally doomed to disappointment. The case was this: A child had fallen from a gallery of some height, and death from concussion of the brain was the result. Dr. Ewing, a graduate of the Pennsylvania University, with the consent of the child's aunt, undertook to resuscitate and restore life to the body. The only instruments used were a Leyden battery, the conductors of which were connected with the body just above the ribs, and a pipe, supplied with air from a common bellows. This pipe was inserted in the child's mouth, and by its means artificial respiration was induced and kept up. The heart had, with the assistance of the battery, resumed its function and seemed to work with unusual force. A pin inserted in the skin seemed to give pain to the child, and a strong charge of electricity caused the corpse to sit sit up, and the pain was evidently intense. The next day the artificial life continued, but it was simply the animal life. No sign of soul or mind had been awakened. The experiment continued for two days longer, and on the night of the second day the assistant on watch, becoming exhausted, fell asleep, and when he awakened the action had ceased, and the corpse was indeed a corpse.

Secretary Bristow.

Gen. Bristow, the new Secretary of the Treasury, is 41, was born in Todd county, Kentucky, practiced law successfully in Hopkinsville before the war, was a strong Unionist, was on the winning side at Donelson as Major of the 25th Kentucky, was wounded at Shiloh, and was afterward appointed Colonel of the 8th Kentucky cavalry. At the close of the war, he was appointed United States District Attorney, and afterward organized the office of Solicitor-General.

OZONING AIR.—An easy means of ozoning the air in a sick room, as described in a German periodical, consists in the use of a powder composed of peroxide of manganese, permanganate of potash, and oxalic acid, which has the property of giving out, in contact with water, an abundant quantity of ozone. For a chamber of middling size it is sufficient to use about two tablespoonfuls of the powder, over which are poured from one to one and a half tablespoonfuls of water every two hours. In this way the quantity of ozone produced is exactly what is wanted; the presence of a larger quantity in the air would occasion irritation of the throat and coughing. All metals, except gold and platinum, must be removed, on account of the oxidizing effects of the ozone.

FARM AND HOME.

Farm Rakings.

God speed the plowshare! Tell me not
Disgrace attends the toil
Of those who plow the dark green sod,
Or till the fruitful soil.
Why should the honest plowman shrink
From mingling in the van
Of learning and of wisdom, since
'Tis mind that makes the man?

God speed the plowshare, and the hands
That till the fruitful earth,
For there is in this world, so wide,
No gem like honest worth.
And though the hands are dark with toil,
And flushed the manly brow,
It matters not, for God will bless
The labors of the plow.

A man of truth and acquainted with chickens describes in the New England Farmer certain sable ways in which fowls are made to appear beautiful at poultry shows. Imprisonment in a darkened room while feathering, and a curling-iron, insure fair and wavy plumage; while trimming feathers, and scraping and varnishing spurs assist the artificial effect.

The Way to Set Hens.—The usual way is to allow a hen to sit where she has been accustomed to lay. But, many times, the nest is where other fowls go to lay. As a consequence, a dispute and a rough contest will often occur for possession, during which some of the eggs will be broken. A sitting hen should be provided with a quiet place, where nothing will melost her during the period of incubation, and where she will be comfortable during cold weather. We have known hens to forsake their nests when they had been sitting a week or more.

Potash in Different Kinds of Ashes.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman gives the following table, showing the amount of potash contained in 1,000 pounds of ashes, made from burning different kinds of wood:

Pine	1⅜	pounds.
Poplar	⅞	"
Beech	1¼	"
Maple	4	"
Wheat-straw	4	"
Corn-stalks	7	"
Oak-leaves	24	"
Stems of potatoes	55	"
Wormwood	73	"
Sunflower-stalks	19	"
Oak	2¼	"
Beech-bark	6	"

Disease in Pigs.—Cough is common in young pigs, where they are not provided with dry, clean, comfortable quarters, and are not exposed to dampness or rains. The best remedy is to obviate these defects, by purifying their sleeping apartments, sheltering, and making them clean and comfortable. Succulent food, tending to open the pores, will contribute gradually toward a cure. Good nursing is the best remedy; but if the cough is attended with costiveness, it may be well to mix with the daily food of each animal a teaspoonful of Epsom of Rochelle salts for a three months' pig, and less or more as it may be younger or older.

Lazy Farmers.—Laziness prevents a man from getting off his horse to put on the first rail that gets knocked off the fence, and through his lazy neglect a whole field of corn is seriously damaged. Laziness keeps a man from driving one nail when one would do, and finally costs a carpenter's bill for extensive repairs. Laziness allows a gate off the hinges to lie in the mud, or stand propped up by nails—or a stable or a barn to leak and damage hundreds of dollars' worth of provender. Laziness, in short, is the right and proper name for nine-tenths of excuses given for bad farming. But far the most prolific of the many wastes that are due to laziness is the waste of ignorance.

Flies.—A hundred or more remedies have been given to keep flies from annoying horses, but the right one has not been found yet, unless Rochard, a French veterinary surgeon, has hit it. His method consists of painting the inside of the ears, or any other part especially troubled, with a few drops of empyreumatic oil of juniper. It is said that the odor of this substance is unendurable to flies, and that they will keep at a distance from the parts so annointed. If this treatment should accomplish the alleged result, it may perhaps be equally applicable in repelling mosquitoes from the face and hands of tourists and sportsmen, when passing through woods or meadows.

Scratches.—Having recently become acquainted with a new remedy for this and all other diseases of domestic animals that require an external application, and having tested it in scratches, inflamed eyes, bruises and sprains, I feel that I cannot do your readers a greater service than by calling their attention to this new and very valuable remedy. I allude to cosmoline. It is the emollient principle of petroleum, and is far superior, as an external application, to any ointment or liniment I have ever tried. It is equally good for cuts and wounds, and is, in short, of universal application. Galls are rapidly healed by its use, and for all hoof diseases it is invaluable.—Cor. Rural World.

Household Suggestions.

Eggs should be curdled by standing in hot water several minutes, not boiled hard in three.

If a glass stopper is set, warm the neck of the bottle in the flame of a lamp and it can often be easily removed.

If the hinges of a door creak, put on a few drops of oil. And remember to oil your washing-machine and wringer every week. You will be surprised with the delightful result.

To renovate velvet, wet a clean sponge in warm soap-suds, squeeze it quite dry in a cloth, and wipe the velvet with it thoroughly; then pass the velvet over the edge of a hot flat-iron, the wrong side next the iron.

Never use enameled kettles for every-day common purposes; cook no solids in them, for if the glazing comes off they will poison the food. If you clean your brass kettle before you set it away, do not do it with salt and vinegar—just scour it with fine brick-dust.

For cleaning wall-paper, take a piece of wood of the shape of a scrubbing-brush, nail a handle on the back, then upon the face nail a piece of dried sheep-skin, with the wool upon it; or flax or tow will do, or cotton flannel of several thicknesses will answer very well. Dip this brush into dry whiting, and rub the smoke lightly with the brush, on the upper parts of the room first, protecting the carpet with matting or newspapers, as the whiting dust is hard to sweep off the carpet. The whiting that remains on the wall is easily brushed off with a soft cloth attached to a stick. It is very effectual if the room is not damp and the whiting is dry.

To destroy cockroaches take dry red lead; mix with thin molasses to a consistency of thin cream; then take pieces of glass and broken plates, etc.; spread it on about as thick as thin window-glass. Where roaches are very numerous, give them plenty of the mixture, as they eat very greedily of it. I think the general failure with roach poisons is this—the poison is so quick in poisoning the roaches that they will not eat enough of it to kill them, for they are slow eaters. The red lead being slow in its effect on them, they will get a good quantity into them before it will sicken them. I have noticed when any of them would happen to be trampled upon, it would appear that they were entirely filled with the red lead. Place the lead where the roaches can get at it most conveniently. If the lead should become too dry and hard, mix a little more lead and molasses with the old to freshen it up again, and place it in other places.

Kitchen Recipes.

Cymbals.—Two pounds flour, eight ounces butter, half pound sugar, six eggs, rose water, and a little spice.

Wonders.—Two pounds of flour, half ounce butter, half pound of sugar, ten eggs, a little cinnamon. Roll thin.

Naples Biscuit.—One pound white sugar, one pound eggs, one pound flour; pulverize, sift, beat and mix well. Bake size of Boston crackers.

To Fry Pork Without Smoke.—The disagreeable smoke and odor of salt pork can be avoided by slicing it, as usual, into the frying-pan, and putting it in the stove oven. It requires but little more time, and is very crisp.

Hoe Cake.—Pour boiling water on a quart of Indian meal; stir in a spoonful of butter or lard and a little salt. Let the dough be stiff, and knead or work it ten minutes. Bake slowly on a board before the fire. When nicely brown on one side turn and bake the other.

Preserving Fruit with Honey.—Fruit may be preserved with honey by putting the fruit first in the can, then pouring honey over it, and sealing airtight; when the honey is poured from the fruit it will have the flavor and appearance of jelly, making a delicious dessert.

Prune Pie for Dessert.—In the scarcity of pie material the following recipe makes a wholesome and nice dessert: Stew the prunes and take out the pits. Sweeten to taste, and if liked, add a little lemon. Cover a plate with nice paste; when cool put the prunes in and cover like an apple pie.

Temperance Cake.—Two pounds of flour, three-quarters of a pound of butter, one pound of granulated sugar, one grated nutmeg, and six well-beaten eggs. After the flour and butter have been thoroughly rubbed together, lay the sugar in and pour upon it a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved, then add the eggs. Mix well together until it can be molded in the hands. Roll thin, cut into cakes and bake in a quick oven.

Nebraska as a Fruit-Growing State.

A correspondent writes: "The fertile soil of Nebraska not only produces grain in abundance, but its orchards bear fine fruit. The soil is rich, and the subsoil is peculiarly adapted to fruit culture. Over a great part of the State the subsoil is a lacustrine deposit, formed during unnumbered years by the washings from the Rocky Mountains, brought down by the Missouri. This subsoil is identical in chemical composition with the loess of the Rhine banks, in which are grown some of the finest grapes of Europe. The Nebraska orchards and vineyards were first planted in the southeastern counties, where the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company owns a considerable body of land; and the favorable experience there gained is causing fruit culture to extend to every part of the State. Although the youngest State in the Union, Nebraska has already taken high honors for its fruit. In 1871, at the general exhibition of the American Pomological Society, at Richmond, Va., the State was awarded the first premium for fruit; and at the exhibition of the same society at Boston, Mass., in 1873, the first prize for apples. Some of the orchardists of Nebraska cultivate 150 varieties of apples.

A Patriarch.

"We have among us," says the San Francisco News Letter, "a patriarch one hundred and eleven years old, who does not claim to have seen George Washington! He never held his horse, nor blacked his boots, nor combed his wig, nor polished his regimentals, nor danced in the minuet with him, nor saw him go by in the carriage, nor ever had his head patted by him, nor ever contributed in any way, manner, shape or form, by accident, design, or otherwise, to the personal reminiscences of the immortal George. He deserves to be put upon the pension list for his moral bravery in acknowledging it, and his name written in letters of fire." But the News Letter adds that the worthy patriarch is a Digger Indian.

A novel adaptation of electricity has just been applied to several of the carriages of the London General Omnibus Company. By a very simple piece of mechanism placed under each seat of the passengers a tell-tale or dial is made to register the number of passengers entering the carriage and the distance which each travels. It is the invention of Sir Charles Wheatstone.

ANTI-MONOPOLY.

Speech Delivered by Prof. J. B. Turner, at Galesburg, Ill., June 5, 1874.

I suppose, my friends, that you have invited me to speak on this occasion, because you wish to know what I think on the great practical questions of the day. I shall therefore proceed without either apology or reserve to comply with your wishes as truly and honestly and unreservedly as I can in the time allowed me.

I never could be either a pessimist or an optimist; while I do not believe in the attained perfection of either men, parties, sects or institutions of any sort, I do not believe that [illegible] its men [illegible] tions are worse than in days of old, or worse than when I was a boy; on the contrary I believe them in many very important respects, gloriously and triumphantly better than they ever were before. But I believe it to be our highest and only duty to make them altogether better and better still, and in this respect we have no less a job on hand than had our fathers before us; for, thank God, our possibilities of improvements are, and ever will be, infinite, at least to our capacities. When, therefore, I denounce in strong terms existing evils, having for the time being only those evils in mind—it is not because I am soured with the world and hopeless of its advance, for I was never—even in my teens—half as hopeful of it or half as well pleased with it as a whole as I am to-day. Still I know, and you know there are things in it, and always will be, that need bettering; other things that need a total extermination, or, at least, reformation and revolution.

The things we are just now throwing into the furnace heat of American politics, with the intent of reconstruction and repairs, are our railroad and other corporations, and the various special privileges and monopolies that hang around and live upon our present systems of party politics, banks, tariffs, finances, etc., and the doctrines of our courts and teachings of our conservative doctrinaires, touching all these alike.

The office-holders and fuglemen of the parties in power of course see all things as lovely as leafy June, and are sure that all who do not sneeze when they take snuff must be totally depraved. But those who are compelled to furnish the means and foot the bills do not always see it so. These mere placemen cannot conceive that any men who oppose them can be actuated by any other motives than a low ambition for place, pelf, and power. We cannot undeceive them; and we need not try. As it is now, so, in this respect, it ever has been, and ever will be. Still I think we can point out some reasons why we now need a new political organization and a thorough reform in our politics. While I admit that each of the old parties, in their day and generation, have done, in some lines, a good and great work, and that there are multitudes of good and true men still in each of them, only the same thing has, in fact, happened to them which some now allege has happened to me, namely, that I have, as they say, "outlived my usefulness," and very likely it may be true of us both alike; if so, all you need to do is to set us both aside.

Were you crossing the Atlantic in a gallant steamer that had breasted and outridden the storms of a score of years; if, while all on board was going "merry as a marriage bell," both crew and passengers should begin to rush in mad confusion, one against another, amid loud cries of alarm, you need not necessarily infer that all have suddenly become insane or totally depraved—you might infer that the good old vessel had at last sprung a leak, and that all alike felt they were in danger of going to the bottom together. What then, would you do? Why, if it was in your power to bring alongside a wholly new craft, better made, better manned, better fitted to the sea than the old one ever was, or ever could be, it would be your plain duty to do so, and go aboard of her, leaving others to tinker away at the leaks in the old hulk, as best they could. Such a new ship, with new timber, rigging and sail, better made, better rigged, and better manned, at all points thoroughly armed and equipped against all privateers and pirates of all sorts, we now propose to throw alongside of the sinking hulls and despairing crews of our old political parties, and to invite freely and frankly all on board who choose to come, and no others. Is not this fair? Where is the wrong in it? I maintain that the time has now come when such a lightening of the load of the old party ship now in power is the only thing that can save it, if its salvation is possible, or if it can be made good for anything after it is saved.

The only way any political party on earth was ever kept for any long time from total corruption and destruction, was by having right alongside of it, outside of power, a living party, thoroughly organized on the real and living issues of the day, ready at any moment to take its place, should it stumble and fall. I contend, therefore, that now every motive, both of philosophy, of history, of wisdom and of true patriotism, urges us at once to the formation of such a new party. Then if the old parties can patch up the leaks in their old hulks and outride the storm, all right; but if they go to the bottom, we will at least save the cargo and the crew, and that is something, though they may esteem it nothing. I do not as yet know that this new proposed party can give us either a better platform or more trustworthy men than the old parties will. If they cannot then I shall not go on board, and would advise you not to go. I have no idea of being dragooned into a new party merely because it is new, or going out of an old one merely because it is old. I do not now believe it possible for the leaders of either of the old parties to give us either a platform of principles or propose to us a set of men upon whom we can in fact place the least reliance to properly guard, defend and protect our present vital interests, as the producers and laboring men of the country. And if they even pretend to do it, I fear it will be a cheat and a sham; for, as all the world now knows, they are either in one or the other of their about equally divided factions, already distinctly pledged against the reform indispensable to our political and financial salvation. Such a party, if it comes at all, must spring up from the heart of the people, not only without the aid of, but in spite of, the dogmas and aim and practices of our present political leaders of whatever party. For these leaders heartily and truly, to adopt our indispensable principles, would not only be self-stultification, but a political "felo de se."

Whether we can ourselves agree to do better than they are now doing, remains to be seen. But if not, I sincerely hope that no mortal man who has our true interests at heart will feel bound by our doing. For myself, I have, however, full faith that we can and ought to do better.

It is now, and ever will be, for the interest of their party-leaders and presses to keep us for ever divided into two hostile factions, forever quarreling with each other, on the ground of old prejudices and old dead issues; while our only possible emancipation from such absurd party serfdom is an immediate and hearty union over the living issues that hourly affect our own households and homes. Is there any real manhood left in us? or have they already obliterated it all?

At the present moment I have no more means than you have of ascertaining what will be the platform of that new party. But it may not be amiss for us to consider some of the general ideas, around which it will be likely to gather and concentrate, if it attempts to do anything which we, as farmers and workingmen, desire; and if it does not, we shall not support it, let who will organize or control it. We have been led by the nose in the old parties about long enough already, and we want no new party whatever to perform that operation for us. One of the vilest and most detestable instruments of the old political parties is their old caucus system, by means of which a few village politicians perpetually manage to have their own choice in men and measures, while no one else has any real choice at all. I do not know as we shall ever be able to get rid of this infamy of the age until we inaugurate a regular system of double election under due forms of law, devoting the first election day simply to voting for nominees, and meeting and voting some weeks or months after that, for the final election or confirmation of our nominees. At present we should adopt the principle, that the office should seek the man and not the man the office, and that we will vote for no man whatever whom we find to be engaged in any way in electioneering and maneuvering to push himself into office, or to keep himself in one he already holds. It is not essential that we should be with the majority, or on the side of power; but it is essential that we should preserve our own individual manhood and self-respect, and vote only for such men and measures as our own individual judgment approves. If our pretended political leaders fail to propose to us such men and measures, men whose whole record and life, and not merely their fine talk before elections, show them to be heart and soul in our interest, we ought to either nominate for ourselves, or at least refuse to vote for any other. Let us stay at home from the elections, dig fish-worms, go a-fishing, whip the dogs and cats, do anything whatever rather than go to the polls as so many collared dogs, simply to do the bidding of a few village pot-house politicians and office-seekers who have assumed to be our masters. We have already saved the Democratic party and saved the Republican party, till both they and we seem past all hope of salvation; and if they cannot in future save themselves, without any such further degradation on our part, let them, and all other parties like them, perish forever, and the sooner the better. If they cannot propose to us men for whom we can vote heartily and intelligently, we will vote for none of them. If the Republic, with all its sublime grandeur and glory in the past, and its still higher heaven-born hopes for the future, must go to the bad, we will no longer help to vote it there. The old dogma of keeping us forever choosing the least of two evils, always leads at last to the necessity of taking the biggest of two devils. We have had enough of it. If any of our old party leaders, therefore, wish to "gobble us up," as the phrase is, and re-enlist us under their old political bummers of any sort, they cannot do it through caucuses and conventions, but they must take us one at a time, and each man by himself.

I. We declare it, therefore, first of all, to be our purpose to purge the Government, and relieve the public of all its present monopolies and exclusive privileges, and official and caucus corruptions, of all sorts.

II. We deny that the proper reward of office to a free man and a worthy citizen is merely so much money, whether voted or stolen; and affirm that no possible amount of money can ever pay the true patriot for any real service he ever renders to his country, whether in public or private life; for the simple reason that such service is in its own nature invaluable.

III. We deny that the cost of a proper style of living for our public officials, either in Washington or elsewhere, is what it is pretended to be, and we will neither connive at either paying or stealing any such needless expenditure.

IV. We deny that man ought anywhere to be kept in positions of public trust simply on account of their usefulness to office-seekers, caucuses and conventions; and affirm that known and approved capacity and trustworthiness should be the only ground of all public trusts whatever, and that no defaulter should ever be permitted to have a second trial of his fitness in these respects. The republic should provide places for supporting its public paupers, reforming its knaves, and instructing its idiots, other than its own positions of public trust.

V. We maintain that the fundamental principle of both English and American common law, and of all other just law, is now, and from time immemorial ever has been, that all contracts, corporations and combinations of men, of whatever sort, which contravene any principle of public policy, or of the public weal, are, in fact, illegal and void, whether the courts so declare them or not; and that no Legislature or other power can lawfully confer any such right either upon individuals or combinations of men.

VI. We, therefore, deny that close corporations, which owe their very being to the State, and have already received from it millions of money and whole empires of public lands as a gratuity, can, by any principle of either common or civilized law, absolve themselves from their full responsibility to the public, to the State and its laws.

VII. We therefore repudiate and deny both the logic and the equity of the pretended applications of the celebrated Dartmouth College case, by our courts, to our railroads, in order to shelter and protect these corporations from the just power of the public and of the States who endowed and created them, under the cover of the pretended authority of the Constitution of the United States, and we affirm that it is one of the first duties of the States and of the United States, at whatever peril or cost, to reduce railroad corporations as common carriers, and all other corporations to a strict obedience to both the common and statute laws of the land.

VIII. We deny that there is either any statesmanship, or justice, or sense in the perpetual attempts of the two old parties; on the one side aiming to contract the currency to favor the creditor, professional and salaried classes; while the opposite faction is forced into an attempt to expand it to favor the opposite debtor and speculating class. Such a preposterous war of interested factions over rival interests can never relieve nor provide for the great financial wants of the country as a whole. Neither faction can succeed; or if so, it would only make matters worse than now, because each faction alike is wrong, both in its methods and its ends. We want neither the kiting schemes of the one nor the collapsing schemes of the other. We have no need to hire rival factions by the year to "bull and bear" the gold market in Wall street.

IX. We are equally opposed to all sudden contractions or expansions of the currency, and to all unlimited or indefinite expansion under whatever pretexts, or by whatever modes. We wish to liquidate all our just debts on that just basis of value on which these debts were contracted, and on no other basis; and for the present if Congress will only let the currency alone, and let us alone, only defending us in our just rights, we will take care of both it and them too.

X. But we do wish the unjust monopolies of the present banking scheme wholly repealed as soon as it can be done without either a too violent expansion or contraction of our present scale of values; and we desire that the old original greenback scheme, so dishonestly and knavishly destroyed, in the interest of brokers and speculators, and contrary to every interest of the people, should again be restored, and Government greenbacks exchangeable at all times at par for bonds, and otherwise exchangeable on conditions prescribed by law, substituted for four present bank currency.

XI. We no more believe in a variable and flexible currency of any sort than we believe in variable and flexible yard sticks and pound weights. We resign all such things to the knaves who have need of them; they are of no use to us. We believe only in fixed, honest and invariable measures of all things alike, as far forth as it is possible to get them, and and shall strive to obtain them as soon as we can without, the violent disturbance of the existing order of business; and in all matters of currency we believe stability of nominal values to be at all times the first, second, third and last great practical requisite for all men alike.

XII. The price of both gold and interest being now at less rates in the great centers of trade than it has averaged for ten or fifteen years past, plainly shows that our present distress does not arise from any deficiency of money in the country as a whole, but that monopolists and schemers of various sorts contrived to concentrate it and put it beyond our reach; so that while there is a surplus of money in the country there is a famine of it in our pockets. Under existing conditions, should the currency be doubled, the same game would be played over our heads worse than ever before, while in the end we should be compelled to meet all the costs and risks of the new expansion. We do, indeed, as we all declare, need more money; but we want to obtain it by releasing and putting to its proper and honest use what we already have rather than by issuing more bank notes. Interest is now below three per cent. in New York; where the money is—less, indeed, than many of our Western annual taxes. More money piled up there will not help us. Our true remedy is to break down the monopolists and exterminate the schemers, and release and use the money we now have, rather than increase our bank debts for more money.

XIII. We are neither for free trade nor for protection; for since we must annually pay some three or four hundred millions to liquidate the debts and expenses of the Government, we prefer that the greater part of this tax should fall on foreign goods and products rather than on our homesteads, farms, and stock in trade, to be paid annually in cash. We insist that this tariff, be it little or great, shall be laid for the honest and legitimate purposes of revenue, and not to foster and build up monopolies either at home or abroad.

XIV. If we could have in our public administrations, both State and national, fewer seven-by-nine lawyers and small talkers, more workingmen, less wind, less talk, less [illegible] buncombe and more honesty, hard work and hard sense, we might get along at least quite as fast and as well as we do now. Suppose we try the experiment? The old dogma, "principles and not men," we repudiate and call aloud for both principles and men, and first of all for men.

RAILROADS.

After securing to themselves free grants of millions of public money (more than twenty millions from this State alone), and more square miles of public lands than there are in the six New England States, with New York, Pennsylania, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois included, besides their right of way, our various corporations of common carriers began to consolidate and combine for the unlimited taxation of the produce of the country, under pretext of an unlimited right to fix their own freight and charges in defiance of the people, the States and their laws. They well knew that such a course was in fact a direct trampling under foot of every real doctrine of common law known to the civilized world since Romulus and Remus were suckled by the wolf. Hence they sought shelter from this common law of Christendom, and from all State laws based upon it, by inducing the courts to throw over and around them the pretended protection of the Constitution of the United States by that most infamous application to them of the doctrines applied in the celebrated Dartmouth College case. It seems to me that the simple reading of Mr. Webster's argument in that case, and of Judge Marshall's grounds of decision, by any lawyer of common sense, before any court of ordinary common sense, without further note or comment, would show, beyond all doubt, that whether the decision of the court was right or wrong in that particular case (which now some of our very ablest lawyers dispute) it is impossible that it should be made logically, either to cover or come near to, any of our railroad cases.

I do not deny that railroads have guaranteed rights, which must be most sacredly regarded; but those rights are neither fully defined in, nor limited by, the wording of their charters, whatever that wording may be. They have simply the rights of common carriers under the common law, no more, no less. This they themselves well know. Hence their extreme anxiety to escape the domain of the common law, and all statute laws of the States, which would render the practical application of law either available or possible to the citizens; and to find some shelter from it under special statutes or constitutions of some sort. But they will find in the end that this common law of Christendom evermore grasps and envelops them on all sides alike, as the light of day envelops the earth, and evermore will grasp and control them, and they cannot escape from its presence, by throwing dust in the air, whether it be their gold dust in our halls of legislation, or the still more blinding dust of their pettifogging special pleaders in our courts of justice.

The dogmas by which these adroit hireling special-pleaders would subject us to this corporate tyranny, through our courts, are no more the real common law of Christendom than the dogmas under which ecclesiasts burnt heretics, through the church, in the middle ages, were the common law of Christianity. I know that the subject has, now, mainly through our own folly, inaction and inattention, become involved in immense difficulties, from which it is not possible to retrieve the country and save the future liberties of the continent without great and serious and undeserved losses to many worthy citizens. But the republic must live, even though you and I and all the rest of us may die. It is high time that we were awake and fully resolved on its salvation, at whatever costs of either our moneyed or personal interests. The recent subterfuges, and skulkings, and evasions of this unscrupulous moneyed power, show us clearly that we are on the right track, whatever special-pleaders or a prostituted and hireling press may say to the contrary.

You all remember the old-time saying of "a nigger in the wood-pile." But did you ever expect to live to see the day when a great moneyed corporation like the Alton and St. Louis railroad would itself turn nigger, spell its name with two g's, and crawl into the wood-pile to hide itself from the just action of the common law of the land?

The great question now is not whether those corporations tax us too little or too much. As our fathers said, in a far less infamous case, "the right to take one pound implies the right to take ten pounds." Were they now carrying our products for nothing, I would still, with the same vigor, prosecute this railroad war in behalf of the rights and liberties of my children, of the continent, and of the race. Under any principle of real law known, or fit to be known to civilized men, I deny that it was possible for any Legislature to put any sort of words into any single charter whatever that could give any company this practical, indefinite power of taxation. It is the tyranny and the infamy of the principle we are resisting, not merely a few cents per bushel in the price of corn and wheat.

The question now is not whether our corn will bring us 60 or 61 cents per bushel, but whether a few close corporations in Wall street through their knaves in Legislatures, and their hireling attorneys in courts, or our forty millions of people, and their immemorial rights under the common law of christendom, are to rule this great continent of ours. Are we men? If we are we shall settle this question, whether pork goes up or down, even though compelled at last to settle it, sword in hand, and with loss of all things. But there is no danger of that. The smell of a fee or a bribe attracts these fellows across the whole continent. The smell of gunpowder does not. I know that like the old slave corporations, and all other despotisms, all they now want is "peace," and simply "to be let alone," and "let the country prosper." But as the one could not blind our eyes and deafen our ears by their outery for the rights of cotton, so neither can the other by their outcry for the rights of charters and corporations.

BANKS.

I will add a few words on our banks and finances:

Amid the ravages and desolation of the civil war, our rulers and representatives had for a time, honesty and patriotism enough to give the whole people of the country a better paper currency than the world had ever before known or dreamed of; and better I fear than it will ever see again. It made every man of the Republic his own broker and banker, promised to redeem all bills with 6 per cent. gold bonds at the option of the holder, if more than $50 in amount, and finally absolutely limited the amount of paper issues to 400,000,000; it pledged the faith of the nation and the government to these principles, in every possible way that its faith could be pledged, even by printing the terms of the contract on the back of each of the bills. Of course this did not then suit the interests of the brokers, bankers and speculating classes. The corporate debtors, and hopelessly debtor classes, also joined their hue and cry for more money. The promise of redemption in bonds, printed on every bill, was, nobody knew exactly how or why, spirited away and finally utterly trodden under foot. That perfidious and hypocritical evasion of all pledges, the so-called "National Bank System," took its place.

In spite of all possible pledges in laws, statutes, and by solemn enactments, the people were in fact stripped of all power of acting as their own brokers, and of all their solemly granted rights of redemption in gold bonds; a new set of brokers and bankers was installed over them; the currency of the nation was actually inflated to the amount of 750,000,000, and practically to 900,000,000, instead of 400,000,000—not by Congress; oh no, not at all; but by the cat's-paw power they set to work and sustained and guaranteed in their work, and paid some 18,000,000 or 20,000,000 annually, in cash out of the people's pockets for doing it. Of course, gold went up in the market to $2.85. Farms and everything else almost doubled in nominal value. Swarms of railroad contractors and stock-jobbers, carpet-baggers and salary-grabbers, perambulated the country in all directions. Western men were incited to buy lands and stocks, build railroads, run in debt and give cut-throat mortgages, covering, often times, more than half their property. And now when, by this most absurd and perfidious inflation of currency, and violation of all possible modes of plighted public faith, they have got you in debt and have your notes and mortgages in their pockets, this same class have become most alarmingly honest, and want to get back again to "hard-pan," as they say; to actual specie payment, which, if suddenly enforced, would put at least 25, if not 50 per cent. more in their pockets, and leave us to whistle for plighted national faith, farms, homesteads and all, until they got ready for another game of expansion, to be, in like manner as before, played over our heads, whether we will or not. Which one of our counties can you name to-day that is not already shingled over with these cut-throat mortgages, and other obligations, to the amount of nearly half its value. In view of these plain facts, known to every man who knows anything whatever on the subject, it is really amusing to hear grave homilies and moral platitudes about keeping the national faith, years ago trodden in the dust in every way in which it is possible to do it, in the interests of the very class of bankers and speculators who now so devoutly preach of plighted faith with us:

When the Devil was sick,
The Devil a Monk would be;
When the Devil got well,
The Devil a Monk was he.

Well let him be so, if he will only stay so. We want no more of either these sudden contractions or expansions. Under these manipulations and changes the public and private debts of the country have already been run up to more than ten thousand millions of dollars more than the whole costs and losses of the war to both North and South. Some of our Republican editors and writers make it even more than this. It costs us more than a thousand millions annually (more than the French paid for their German war) to pay even our annual interest and meet our taxes. It is a burden which we and our children groan under and must groan under.

Government can neither print it away, nor fiddle it away, nor legislate it away; all we hope of them is that they would simply let our scale of prices alone, and let something somewhere lie still until we can work it out and pay it.

Expansion up to $2.85, and ten thousand millions of consequent impending debts abundantly satisfy us with this operation; and practical contraction in fact, it matters not by what means, from that point, down to 1.12, is as much as our debtor class ought to be forced to stand, until their old debts are liquidated; for future relief, we look to the grace of God and our own hard hands, and not to any plighted faith of Congress, past or to come.

Still for our credit, both at home and abroad, we would like to keep Congress tolerably decent if we could. The necessities and terrors of the civil war may have been some apology for this unfortunate and disastrous legislation, in favor of the moneyed, and speculating, and extreme debtor classes; if so the ten thousand millions of debt under which it has whelmed the working classes of to-day, may be some reason why we should defer another counter-revolution in our scale of prices, till some of these debts can be paid, on the just basis of values on which they were contracted. How childish to imagine that any possible retinkering of the currency can now annihilate the terrible debts our former tinkerings have produced, or that when we have been compelled to suddenly stop short the annual construction of several hundred millions of dollars' worth of railroads, utterly blockading the great iron and coal markets of the world, stopping thousands of furnaces and shops and throwing whole armies of men either into new employment or wholly out of employment, and thus crippling and deranging all other modes of business; how utterly childish, I say, to imagine that the printing of a little more or less of currency can retrieve these past disasters, set all this absurd railroad building on foot again, and the smelting furnaces and all other dependent forms of industry in full blast, unless, indeed, it be done as before, by our old expansion by the accumulation of another ten thousand million debt, and the disasters inevitable in its train? Suppose we again start our furnaces, now that railroad building is stopped, what shall we do with our iron? Can we make it all into darning-needles and jack-knives; or can we continue to run in debt 300,000,000 per annum for new roads? Currency is now, as compared with gold or interest rates, cheaper and more plenty than ever before. But under the sudden blockading of our great enterprises, under the past general lead of those monopolists and currency tinkers, and the horde of public thieves and speculators ever in their train, it is now placed where the great masses of the laboring people cannot get hold of it until this order of things is changed; or, at best, it goes out in expenses, and taxes, and interest, as fast as they can gather it in, and is whirled away again to Wall street.

They say we can have more money and banks only when we get more capital. Most true; but when shall we get more capital if we allow these various hordes of monopolists to spirit it away to Wall street faster than we can earn it?

We propose to change this order of ruin, and restore and save the country, by annihilating, or at least weakening, the power that brought these evils upon us. Who will help us? Who will incur the odium indispensable to the first step? I will do it for one. It requires no bravery; and scarcely a self-denial in me. It is of little consequence what becomes of an old man already past three-score. But I have six sons, still in the youth and vigor of life, whom I would like to leave on a free continent, and among a free people; and I cannot consign them, without reproach in life, and remorse in death, to the despotism of moneyed monopolies, even worse in some respects than the old by-gone despotism of the slave-holders. How is it with you, my friends?

It may seem strange, but it is nevertheless true, that alcohol, regularly applied to a thrifty farmer's stomach, will remove the boards from the fence, let cattle into his crops, kill his fruit trees, mortgage his farm, and sow his field with wild oats and thistles. It will take the paint off his building, break the glass out of his windows and fill them with rags. It will take the gloss from his clothes and the polish from his manners, subdue his reason, arouse his passions, bring sorrow and disgrace upon his family, and topple him into a drunkard's grave. It will do this to the artisan and the capitalist, the matron and the maiden, as well as to the farmer, for, in its deadly enmity to the human race, alcohol is no respecter of persons.

What a foe the farmers have to contend against in the potatoe-bug is shown by the experience of a man in Joliet, Ill. He placed some in a bottle eight months ago. They have been exposed to the extreme of winter and summer, have had nothing to eat, and are still living.

A CARD.

A Clergyman, while residing in South America, as missionary, discovered a safe and simple remedy for the cure of Nervous weakness, Early Decay, Disease of the Urinary and Seminal Organs, and the train of disorders brought on by baneful and vicious habits. Great numbers have been cured by this noble remedy. Prompted by a desire to benefit the afflicted and unfortunate, I will send the receipt for preparing and using this medicine, in a sealed envelope, to any one who needs it, Free of Charge. Address,

[From our Own Correspondent.]

N. Y. CITY, June 14, 1874.

DEAR COURIER:—I promised to drop you a few lines from Gotham, provided I could find material quantum sufficit from which to frame an interesting epistle. Will endeavor now to redeem my pledge, relying upon the indulgence and charity of your readers for the valuable space taken in their favorite paper, without what, perchance, would seem to them a compensating return of interesting matter.

New York is a grand old city—a little world of and in itself. It is the most thoroughly cosmopolitan city to be found on the American map. All nationalities have not only a representation but a local and distinct organization here, and it requires but the existence of certain exigencies to practically demonstrate the fact; for instance: a victory of the Cubans in the present war for independence will bring to the surface a demonstration of this particular element, and a parade of 2,000 or 3,000 sun-bronzed Cubans down Broadway to celebrate the event is no uncommon sight. Every nation has its separate organization, and yet all living in unison and harmony under the protecting folds of our ample flag and laws; and although the Spanish residents may "view with a critic's eye" the Cuban demonstration, or the Orangemen may take exceptions to the Catholic parade, or vice versa, yet in this loved land of freedom all are permitted to enjoy their peculiar civil and religious views without fear of molestation. The volatile Fenians, too, may flaunt their flag of green in the eyes and athwart the brows of the British St. George's society, and proclaim upon the public highways that Britian's queen is a tyrant and usurper; yet H. B. Majesty's loyal sons are powerless to revenge, and seek in vain for redress. What a grand country is this in which our happy lot is cast—an asylum for the oppressed of all nations, where freedom of expression, as well as of the press, is countenanced and supported by our organic laws, and each humble citizen becomes a proud sovereign. Our laws, certainly, are generous enough; it only remains for our people, both naturalized and to the manor born, to appreciate and respect those laws to make America the greatest country God ever deigned to smile upon.

New York is to this country what Paris is to Europe. American tourists on the other side of the Atlantic may miss historic London or pious Rome; they may ignore Geneva with her snow-capped Mont Blanc in the distance, or even give little Baden-Baden the "go by," so lovely situated at the foot of the Black Forest Hills that, like a horse-shoe encircle her; Berlin, with her ravishing parks and lager; Brussels, with her Waterloo nine miles away; all these may be missed, but Paris—never! Gay, giddy Paris, that city of luxuries, sin, glitter, pleasure, must be seen or a trip to Europe would be made in vain. So with New York. European tourists may pass by Philadelphia, with its staid old Quaker costumes; Boston, with its crooked streets made upon the lines of its original cow path trails; resurrected Chicago; the Federal Capital; beautiful Auburn, with its classic shades; but New York must not be shirked, or America has has not been visited at all. To see her Wall street and Stock Exchange is to see the origin and basis of her commercial wealth, the index of the very value of all her currency and marketable paper; for it is Wall street that makes the figures governing the very gold and bonds of the country, and the quotations of her Stock Exchange are telegraphed and cabled to the larger cities of the world; and those figures are respected and accepted everywhere. This potent lever has its fulcrum in Wall street and moves the monetary world. It was my pleasure to have met you, Mr. Editor, on 'Change some three weeks since. I believe you came on with a delegation of Hoosier hash wrestlers. You noticed and remarked at the time the animated scene where hundreds of bulls and bears were fixing the temporary price of local stocks and securities; some engaged in buoying up the price where they or their friends were large holders; others depressing those stocks in order to buy. And thus it goes from day to day, and has for years, resulting in opulence to some, impoverishment to others—a mere game of chance, like keno or poker, only considered by the wealthy aristocrat a little more respectable.

New York is not alone celebrated for this. She is the great entrepot of all nations. This is the main receiving reservoir, into which is poured the emigration of the Old World, to be distributed to other portions of our boundless country. Not only may we refer to living freight, but the commerce of all the seas finds an anchorage within our beautiful bay, and a ready market for all their commodities.

New York cannot vie with Rome, Milan or London in its cathedrals, for they have had thousands of years in which to build them, while America, scarcely out of her first century, is comparatively new; and yet, without a Michael Angelo, this city through her Roman Catholic citizens has erected a white marble cathedral on Fifth avenue, between 49th and 50th streets, that outshines them all in chaste and elegant architecture and adornments; not so large as those of the Old World, but far more handsome. (I have seen them all and speak from observation.) Notre Dame, of Paris, like St. Paul's, of London, have grown gray and old, and the ravages of time are clearly discernible on those noble piles of consecrated stone; but our pet cathedral, as pure as the driven snow in its immaculate whiteness, is pointed out with pride to visitors here and is honored by New Yorkers without regard to religious belief. London has had centuries to perfect and improve her Hyde Park; Paris to beautify her Bois de Bologne, but New York, with her Central Park, scarcely sixteen years since a barren waste, overtops them all, the combination of art and nature being simply perfect in all its details and appointments. And where is the counterpart of our Broadway, that noble artery of local travel, flanked on either side by marble palaces of business representing a yearly traffic of millions, covering acres and employing hundreds of clerks who part their hair in the middle and wear button-hole bouquets and waxed moustachios?

Greenwood Cemetery, too, that beautiful, incomparable, silent city of the dead, whose long avenues and serpentine walks lead along between rows of handsome vaults, in which rest all that remains of many who died leaving name and fame and wealth behind, and whose names alone suggest a history to the resident Gothamite. Paris has its Pere la Chiase, with its costly monuments and shafts. It is beautiful indeed; but to compare it with Greenwood is folly most complete. In Europe they bury their royal and imperial dead in the crypts of their cathedrals and Westminster Abbeys; but in our democratic country, where blood fails as the distinguishing feature to denote honor, and where ability, honesty, integrity constitutes American royalty, we bury upon the same grounds, as our God expects us to return to the same dust, to be sifted by himself when the resurrection gun fires.

The chimes of Trinity are ringing out in merry cadence upon the still air, reminding Christians that this is the usual day of worship, so I must desist and become devout, at least till after morning service. Having written up New York in part, my next will contain some allusions to its suburbs and surroundings. Adieu, C.

THE COUNTRY VS. THE INDEPENDENT PRESS.

From National Republican.

During the last few days Washington has been honored by a visit from two sets of editors. The one small in number, but large in pretentions; the other large in number, but meek and humble in their claims to popular recognization. The one party consisted of only three persons, namely Saml Bowles, of the Springfield Republican; the gentle Harry Watterson, of Kentucky, and the philosophic Horace White, of the Chicago Tribune. Mr. Reid of the Lotos Club, and the New York Tribune, who originally formed one of the distinguished party, did not gladden us with his illustrious presence, mainly because, we suppose, he cherishes certain unpleasant recollections of the capital of his country.—The last time he was here the rude minions of the law had the impertinence and the audacity to serve a notice of a libel suit upon him and compel him to find bail in a reasonable sum for the slander of a truly good and virtuous man, the old and true and trusted friend of his patron, the late Mr. Greeley. The other editorial party, was made up of what is called the "Editorial Association of Indiana," a body of men unknown to fame individually, but collectively of surpassing glory and renown.

The manner in which these two bodies were received affords much food for thought, and is in a great measure an index to the time. The gentlemen we have mentioned by name have formed themselves into a sort of editorial dictatorship over the politics of the country—have constituted themselves the special guardians of Congresses any Cabinets, the keepers of the conscience of the nation. They have soared into a moral atmosphere, and from their elevated table ground look down with sovereign contempt upon the herd of struggling politicians who have no regard whatever for the interest of the people, and are only anxious to subserve their own wicked purposes. The devotion of these gentlemen to purity and politics and reform in government, to the interests of the Republic, is one of the sweetest symptoms of our modern politics, urging the dawning of a better day and the comp. to regeneration of this fallen American race. The manner of their reception at the National Capital especially when contrasted with that of their humbler Indiana brethren, is truly sad. Considering their labors, thier sacrifice and their difficulties for the last few years, during which as the controllers of a mighty and independent press, they have struggled so hard to regenerate the country, we should have supposed that their advent in Washington would be a signal for a popular ovation such as the capital has never seen. But, notwithstanding the fact that their coming was heralded from one end of the land to the other by the indefatigable agents of the Associated Press, Messrs Watterson and White and Bowles were permitted to enter the city the same as ordinary people. Instead of civic delegations and brass bands and committees from the two houses of Congress, the Legislature and the Board of Public Works being present to receive them, they were greeted with shouts of a set pestiferous hackman and the cries of a score of small boys, white and black, shouting, "National Republican!—Price, 3 cents!" No wonder that Watterson went to his hotel and wrote home that the liberties of his country had been overthrown, that Grant was plotting a third term, and that we were all ready for the proclamation of the monarchy. No wonder that he sought the quiet shades of a fashionable restaurant, and solaced himself with a sherry and so far forgot what was and what was not the delicacy of the season as to eat terrapin in May, and send the fact down into history in the columns of his great rural journal. How the announcement must have shocked his city friend and the exquisite Mr. Reid Terrapin in May! Terrapin for the grate and Intellectual Watterson, who had been to Paris and made the tour of the continent! The whole thing is frightfully suggestive what must he have said or done in the gay capital of France! The experience of Bowles and White was equally unhappy. They prowled around the Capitol unrecognized by even the page or the doorkeepers, sat gloomily in the galleries, cheek by jowl with intellectual colored brethern, who meet there day after day, drinking in political wisdom because they have nothing else to do. The whole thing was really sad, and is only another illustration of the ingratitude of republics. The world, we are told, knows nothing of its greatest man, and White and Bowles and Watterson are the latest melancholy example of the truth of the old proverb.

How different with the comparatively obscure Indiana editors. No sooner, was it known than the capital got in to a white heat of excitement. Every Indianian in town felt that the honor of the county and of his native State was involved in their appropriate reception. The omnibus man contended for the precious privilege of carrying them to the hotels they condescended to honor, A terrible rivalry sprung up among the hotel men themselves for the honor of their entertainment. Congress was on the point of adjourning to receive them in a body, only that there was some uncertainty as to the exact hour they would arive and the exact railroad line over which they would deign to ride free gratis for nothing, in palatial Pullman palace cars. Not since the grand army of the North marched up on us was there such a furore of anxiety in Washington. The discriminating and appreciative Representative Garfield, of Ohio, was, it is true, the prime cause of all this wild up-roar. Weeks in advance he told us in his own glowing and scholarly style, from his seat in the House of Representatives, that it was not White or Reid, or Bowles, or Halstead, who wielded our destinies, controlled men and parties, made and unmade presidents, and congresses as they and we had been fondly supposing it was, but that great and terrible body, the country editors, whose throne was a country store box and whose aggregated wisdom was gathered in the stray moments between "drinks" and the intellectual game of seven-up. They were gigantic molders of public opinions, to whose fiat we all should bow, whose behest we all should obey. No wonder that we all shivered in our boots as the hour of their arrival drew nigh. And how right royally we received them is told in their own gratefull and expressive words in another column. The House threw wide open its doors and received them on the floor, upon the motion of Mr. Coburn, all but the ladies, their butter halves, who if Indiana is not an exception to the rest of the Union, do more to govern and direct the press and the public than all others agencies combined. This, was the rate and only mistake that was made, especially when it is recollected that a lady editor, and a poetess to boot, was the most distinguished of the whole party. The turn out of the fire department to the detriment of numerous treasury wagons, broken and smashed in the wild rivalry of fire "laddies" to be first on the ground; the erection of a monster ladder and the squirting of half a dozen streams of water one hundred feet high; the watchful guardianship of Major Richards and of the detective corps lest they should be robbed of their free passes, are all matters of minor consideration, but which nevertheless contributed to the expression of our grateful appreciation of their immense service to the world generally and this freest country upon earth in particular. We are an extremely grateful crowd, from Congress down to the humblest citizen, and if these Indiana editors, who hold us in the hollow of their hands, do not deal gently and tenderly with us in the future, why they are not the men we take them for. But what a lesson, as we said, there is in the whole thing for Reid, and Bowles, and Watterson, who eat terrapin out of season and see the ghost of Caesarism stalking through the land! The first has been made last and the last first. We do not know that they ever were first; but they thought they were, and it is all the same thing. The best thing White and Watterson can do is to come down from their dizzy height to their proper level with their Indiana brethren, and like them they will be honored and applauded in the land. They have evidently made a great and grave mistake in spurning their old-time associates and going upon a wild-goose chase after fame and immortality on the wings of what they are pleased to call independent journalism. When they return, we promise them all that they covet, terrapin in season and out of season, free passes in Pullman cars, the privilege of the floor and the sweet commendation of our leading Congressmen.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

An important verdict has just been rendered in the New York Marine Court in the case of H. B. Claflin & Co. against the Western Union Telegraph Company. The amount of money involved is not large, being but $312, but the principle at issue was an important one. The plaintiffs sent the following dispatch to one of their salesmen traveling in the South: "Atlantic P, twelve D, twelve one-half off trade." In the course of transmission the D was changed to A, and, in consequence, the salesman disposed of goods at 11½ cents a yard which were 2 cents higher at the time, involving a loss to the firm of $600. On the trial, the telegraph company set up as a defense that the dispatch being in cypher, should have been repeated, under the conditions on the company's blanks, and that the salesman himself was negligent in selling at a price lower than had been known for years. Notwithstanding the defense, the verdict was given against the telegraph company.

The West.

The places of the union miners at Nelsonville, Ohio, who have been on a strike for several weeks, are being supplied with negroes from the South. Several hundred arrived last week, and more are engaged.... The police of Salt Lake City the other day arrested a soldier and confined him in jail. Gen. Merrow demanded his surrender, which being refused, he proceeded to break open the jail and release the man.... A dispatch from Dubuque, Iowa, says: "In ten or a dozen counties west of Humboldt, and up the west branch of the Des Moines river, the country is full of locusts. They have already eaten the growing crops on the grounds and left the fields as barren as a board. Many of the homesteaders, in despair of a crop, have packed up and are moving out of the country."

The troubles in the Hocking Valley (Ohio) mines wore a serious aspect on the 13th. A dispatch of that date says: "Over 300 negroes were brought here yesterday morning and quartered at Longstreth's mines. During the day the strikers have succeeded in persuading about fifty negroes to desert and come over to them, telling them they would furnish money and send them home, and the negroes believed all this, and are in the public square to-night, where the union is holding a meeting. Several negroes have made speeches, telling the miners to hold out if they have to wade through blood to secure their rights." ....The new Chicago City Directory, just issued, contains 151,918 names, an increase of 18,865 over that of 1873. Making an estimate of the entire population, with the ratio three and one-half, which has always been considered fair and just, and by which the population of Chicago has been arrived at during the past five years, the result gives a grand total of 531,708 souls in the city of Chicago.

The striking disturbances at Nelsonville, Ohio, are ended and the colored miners are busily at work.... A strange freak of nature of the Siamese-twins order was brought to light in Chicago, a few days ago. A young woman, who had been married a little over a year, gave birth to a singular malformation, being two girls of the natural size and perfectly formed, but closely united, or rather grown together, from the breast-bone to the lower part of the abdomen. The bodies were dead.... Des Moines, Iowa, is excited over a brutal and mysterious murder. The victim was a man named Johnson, a coat-maker, aged 50 years, who was found dead one morning, lying in a gutter, face downward. Near the body was found an envelope containing a piece of paper on which was written: "This is the twenty-seventh man we have killed, and we will never be taken alive." .... A San Francisco dispatch announces the death in Arizona, on the 9th of June, of Cochise, the famous Apache Indian Chief.

The Chicago City Council has agreed to sell the Lake Front property, about which there has been a good deal of contention for some time past..... The Sioux Indians have at last commenced open hostilities. A dispatch from Bismarck, D. T., dated June 15, says: "Four hundred Sioux attacked Fort Berthold Indian Agency, but were repulsed. Four Agency Indians were killed. Reinforcements were sent at once from Fort Stevenson, and no further danger is anticipated."

Gen. Custer telegraphs from Fort Lincoln, under date of June 16, that a small party of Sioux appeared on the river bank opposite Fort Berthold Agency the day before at 7 o'clock a. m., and commenced firing into the village. The Indians from the Agency at once crossed the river and were met by about 400 Sioux. A short fight took place, in which five Reese and one Gros Ventres were killed, and one Mandan mortally wounded.... The notorious Younger brothers were recently seen and recognized at Malta Bend, in Missouri.... Six union printers have been arrested at Burlington, Iowa, and held in bonds of $200 each, on a charge of libel, for publishing as "rats" certain printers who do not belong to the Union.

The South.

The Southern Cotton Exchange has just had an interesting and profitable two days' session at Atlanta, Ga. The convention effected a permanent organization of a National Cotton Exchange, adopted a plan for the compilation of statistics, and made arrangements for the issue of general crop reports by Central Exchanges.

Gov. Kellogg, of Louisiana, reports (June 17) that "fully one-third of the State is still under water from one to two feet deep; that from 70,000 to 80,000 people are now in destitute circumstances; that much sickness already prevails, and unless the people obtain relief the suffering during the summer months will be almost beyond precedent."

Washington.

The following is the vote of the Senate on the Compromise Currency bill: Yeas—Allison, Bogy, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Ferry (Mich.), Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Tipton, West, Wright—32. Nays—Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Buckingham, Conkling, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton (Md.), Hamilton (Texas), Hamlin, Jones, Morrill (Me.), Morrill (Vt.), Sargent, Schurz, Stephenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Washburn—23. Cameron, Dennis, Lewis, and Windom, who have voted for the report, were paired with Cragin, Wadleigh, and Saulsbury, who would have voted against it. Senator Carpenter, from the Committee on Elections, reported to the Senate that, while said committee considered it impolitic to adopt a ballot-box, it recommends unanimously to the States severally Marston's safety ballot-box as an excellent preventive of ballot-stuffing and other frauds.

The House Committee on Territories have reported a bill defining the qualifications of Delegates from the Territories, namely: That the Delegate shall be 25 years of age, be a citizen of the Territory, and shall have resided seven years in the Territory which he is chosen to represent; and further, no person guilty of bigamy or polygamy shall be allowed to represent any Territory in Congress.

Elder Cannon has escaped expulsion, but the House has passed a bill declaring that hereafter the practice of polygamy shall be deemed sufficient cause for rejecting Delegates otherwise entitled to seats.... Appointments by the President: John L. Cadwalder, of New York, Assistant Secretary of State; Maj. Absalom Baird, Assistant Inspector-General and Lieutenant-Colonel. Consuls-General—Thomas B. Van Buren, New Jersey, at Kanagawa; George Pomutz, Iowa, at St. Petersburg; P. Sidney Post, Illinois, at Vienna; Herman Kreismann, Illinois, at Berlin. Consuls—Paul Jones, Ohio, at San Domingo; W. H. Young, Ohio, at Mannheim.

The House Judiciary Committee decided, by three majority, to report articles of impeachment against Judge Busteed, of Alabama, and by one majority to impeach Judge Durell, of Louisiana.

General.

A large meeting was held in Toronto, Canada, last week, for the purpose of discussing the proposal for connecting Lake Ontario and the tidal water with Lake Huron and the lakes connected therewith, by means of a canal. A resolution was adopted to the effect that the construction of the Huron and Ontario Ship Canal was a commercial necessity. It was stated that the county of Simcoe had promised a bonus of $800,000, and that other aid would be forthcoming.

Civil Service Reform has come to an abrupt end, Congress refusing to make any further appropriations for carrying it on.

Political.

The Republicans of Vermont have nominated Judge Peck for Governor, and indorsed the President's veto of the Currency bill.... The Republican State Convention of Illinois assembled at Springfield on the 17th of June, and nominated Thomas S. Ridgeway, of Gallatin, for State Treasurer, and William B. Powell, of Kane, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The currency question was disposed of by the passage of the following resolutions: That, as one of the consequences of the late civil war, about $382,000,000 of non-interest-bearing Treasury notes were issued to and are now held by the people as a safe and convenient currency, it would be unwise and inexpedient, in the present financial condition of the people, to attempt the policy of the immediate cancellation of any portion of such Treasury notes. That the laws for the establishment of national banks having secured to the States and Territories the best system of bank circulation ever before offered to the people, its issuance should be no longer confined to a privileged class, but should be free to all alike under general and equal laws, the aggregate volume of the currency to be regulated by the untrammeled laws of trade. That we reaffirm the declaration of the National Republican Convention of 1872 in favor of a return to specie payment at the earliest practicable day; that we are opposed to any increase in the amount of legal-tender notes, and favor the gradual retirement of the same as the volume of the national bank notes shall be increased.

The platform, apart from the finance question, commends the measures passed by the lower house of Congress, looking to the cheapening and perfection of inter-State railway transportation and the improvement of navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi river; advises an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of President by the people; urges the passage of the Civil Rights bill; opposes interference with the liquor traffic, except so far as public peace requires; discountenances railroad extortion and also interference with railroad property; and appeals to the past record of the party as a guarantee for its future good conduct.

The Indiana Republican Convention assembled at Indianapolis on the 17th of June and renominated the present State officers by acclamation. The convention expressed confidence in the honesty of the President, but placed itself on record in favor of free banking and an increase of the currency.

La Dow, Democrat, has been elected to Congress from Oregon, instead of Williams, as heretofore announced.

Foreign.

Cambridge (England) University has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on James Russell Lowell, of Boston.... Don Carlos has a summary way of dealing with malcontents. Some of his adherents in the Basque provinces, realizing that they were fighting for a forlorn hope, and desiring to end the guerrilla warfare that has for so long devastated the country, sent a petition to him asking for peace. Don Carlos' answer was an order commanding the petitioners to be shot.

The Paris papers hold England responsible for the escape of Rochefort and his companions, and declare that the British Government cannot refuse to enter upon an inquiry as to whether one of its subjects, in assisting convicts to escape, has not transgressed international law.... The French Government has suspended the publication of Le Pays and Le Rappel, radical Republican, and Le Dix-Neuvieme Siecle, Conservative Republican organs, for a fortnight, because of violent attacks upon its policy. Paul de Cassagnac, the editor of the first-named journal, in his last issue replied to the demand of M. M. Schoelcher and Testelin, who were delegated by the Republicans to demand armed reparation for his article attacking the members of the Left. He says therein that he assailed M. Gambetta and other Deputies, but not M. Clemenceau, who is not, therefore, entitled to reparation, but, says De Cassagnac, if M. Clemenceau wants a personal quarrel he can have it. De Cassagnac says he particularly wishes to fight M. Gambetta, and adds that nine members of the editorial staff of Le Pays are willing to fight nine of the Republican Deputies, and will draw lots for the choice of adversaries and of arms.... It was shown during the recent disturbances at Paris and Versailles that a majority of the police were ardent sympathizers with the Bonapartists. The army, it is more than suspected, has a similar tendency.

Saint Croix, Gambetta's assailant, has been tried before a Paris police magistrate and sentenced to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 200 francs. He was also ordered to pay the costs of his trial. The other rioters were sent to prison for terms ranging from one week to a month.... Chili has been agitated over the sale of forged drafts on the Valparaiso Bank to the amount of 32,000 pounds, by A. G. Wendell, son of Dr. Wendell, of New York.... A Paris telegram says Clemenceau has sent another challenge to Cassagnac, with a proposition to match ten Republican Deputies against ten Bonapartists. Cassagnac's reply is that he will fight nobody but Gambetta.... The temperance crusade has reached the Sandwich Islands..... The great international race for the Grand Prize of Paris, run at Paris on Sunday, June 14, was won by the English colt Trent. .....British Columbia, incensed at the treatment she has received from the Dominion Government, has broken faith in the matter of confederation, and has sent a delegation to represent her grievances to the Imperial Government.

Monday, June 15, was an important day in the French Assembly, being the occasion of the introduction of the Constitutional bill prepared by the Left Center. Casimir Perier offered the measure, and moved that it be declared urgent. After a heated debate the vote was then taken on the motion for urgency, and it was agreed to—yeas, 345; nays, 341. Urgency having been declared, the bill was referred to a committee of thirty. La Rochefoucauld then introduced a resolution in substance as follows, which was read amid profound silence: "The Assembly declares that the Government of France is a monarchy; that the throne belongs to the head of the House of France; that Marshal MacMahon may assume the title of Lieutenant of the Kingdom." Great excitement followed the reading of the resolution. La Rochefoucauld moved that it be referred to the Committee of Thirty. The motion was rejected by a majority of 100 votes.... It is reported that eighteen Carlist officers have been shot at Tolosa, Spain, by order of Don Carlos, for mutiny.

The Committee of Thirty of the French Assembly, to whom the constitutional measures were referred, propose to make haste slowly. It is thought that two weeks will be consumed in their consideration.... Rochefort has arrived in England. He was received at Queenstown by a noisy mob, who greeted him with hootings and execrations.

THE CROPS.

Condition of the Growing Grain and Tobacco.

The following is a synopsis of the leading information regarding the growing crops published by the National Crop Reporter of the 15th inst.: Reports from correspondents dated June 1 indicate a severe drought prevailing in nearly all portions of the country east of the Rocky mountains, as far as New England, with more or less damage to the growing crops in most sections. Since the date of these reports there have been very general rains throughout the country, and it is thought enough to check all damage on the score of drought.

Wheat.—The condition of the growing wheat in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio and Wisconsin, was nearly 3 per cent. above a good average condition. In Illinois and Missouri the condition of the wheat was very high; in Iowa 5 per cent. above an average, and in the other States below the average.

Oats.—The condition of oats in the same States at the dates mentioned was 5 per cent. below a good average, Missouri being the only State reporting above an average.

Barley.—Estimates or returns of the area sown this season in barley indicate in the States previously mentioned an increase over last year of 262 acres, and make the area this year, in round numbers, 580,000 acres.

Rye.—There is an estimated falling off this season in the rye area, averaging in the same States 3 per cent., or 10,150 acres. The area this year is placed at a trifle less than 337,000 acres.

Tobacco.—Special returns in relation to the tobacco crop in Kentucky, Southern Ohio and Indiana, and in Tennessee, are such as to make the outlook a very bad one. Aside from the late frosts, the bug and the fly and the insects have been very destructive. No transplanting had been done up to June 1, the ground being too dry. It seems to be a general opinion among growers and dealers that the prospects are not in favor of more than one-half to two-thirds of last year's crop. Much damage is reported by the potato-bugs, which are evidently increasing in numbers.

THE COTTON CROP.

The Statistician of the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, has just made a report of the acreage in cotton, based on returns from most of the cotton counties in six cotton States, as follows, the comparison being with the area of 1873:

Virginia	80	North Carolina	89
South Carolina	91	Georgia	90
Florida	91	Alabama	86
Arkansas	90	Tennessee	93
Mississippi	88	Louisiana	81
Texas	102	Missouri	75

The aggregate reduction slightly exceeds 10 per cent. The condition of the crop is represented by the following figures—100 being the normal or fair condition:

North Carolina	89	South Carolina	81
Georgia	80	Florida	90
Alabama	82	Mississippi	78
Louisiana	70	Texas	90
Arkansas	90	Tennessee	85

The report concludes: "The report of the condition in 1873 was more favorable to every State except North Carolina and Texas. The season has been remarkable. The stand is very poor, many plants not having made their appearance on the 1st of June. Since the last of May light showers have been general, and prospects are much improved. The fields are much cleaner than at this date last year, and can easily be kept free from weeds. With favorable weather, rapid improvement is certain, and a fair comparison with July is quite probable at the time of the next report."

The Amended Bankrupt Law.

The principal points of the new Bankrupt law, just passed by Congress, are as follows: Forty days are allowed to elapse before a merchant or trader who fails to pay his commercial paper is liable to be thrown into bankruptcy. The assent of one-fourth in number and one-third in value of the creditors is required to throw a debtor into bankruptcy. This provision dates back to the first of last December. Proceedings may be discontinued whenever the debtor pays those secured debts which were the ground of throwing him into bankruptcy, or whenever, with the consent of the court, he and a majority of the creditors shall ask for a discontinuance of the proceedings. In order to set aside hypothecated pledges as liens on the bankrupt's estate, it must appear that the party dealing with the bankrupt knew that he intended to perpetrate a fraud on the Bankrupt law, and that he intended to go into bankruptcy. When a loan is made to a bankrupt in good faith, and security taken, with the intention of aiding him to pull through, it shall be considered as having actual value, and the security shall not be invalidated by proceedings in bankruptcy, and a voluntary bankrupt may have his discharge if his estate pays 30 per cent. of his debts, or provided he obtains the assent of the same number of his creditors as is necessary to throw him into bankruptcy. An involuntary bankrupt can get his discharge if his conduct is free from all fraud and he is innocent of any violation or infringement of the Bankrupt act. Assignees are prohibited from dividing fees with other persons engaged in the case. Composition by the creditors may be made with the assent of the debtor, providing a majority of the creditors join, where approved by the Court, for the release and discharge of the debtor. The fees and expenses are reduced one-half until the Judges of the Supreme Court shall establish a permanent reduction and simplify proceedings. All the acts of the persons connected with the execution of the law shall be made public in the shape of full and minute reports from the Clerk, the Assignee, the Marshal, and the Register. Original jurisdiction is conferred upon the Territorial courts, with an appeal to the Supreme Court of the Territory.

CONGRESS.

Thursday, June 11.—Senate.—The bill authorizing the importation of goods for the Centennial free of duty was passed.... The Judiciary Committee reported favorably on the bill concerning courts in Utah Territory.... The Senate decided that there were no grounds for action against Senator Hipple-Mitchell, of Oregon. He acknowledges that he changed his name and declares that he supposed his first wife was dead before he married a second time.... The feature of the day's session was the debate on the finances, which was participated in by Morton, Sherman, Logan, Jones, Thurman and others. Without reaching a vote the Senate adjourned.

House.—Dawes, after the reading of the journal, moved to go to Speaker's table and pass all the bills to which no objection was made. Under this motion a large number of bills were passed, including the bill authorizing the making of medals commemorative of the first meeting of the Continental Congress and the Declaration of Independence.... The House was engaged for some time in considering the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole. A proposition to insert an item appropriating $75,000 for the Washington Monument was negatived. Garfield offered an item appropriating $7,000 to reimburse Gen. O. O. Howard in his expenses for defending his official conduct as Commissioner of Freedmen's Affairs. Speer suggested that there had been no such proposition made to pay the expenses of President Johnson in defending his official conduct. Garfield remarked that Johnson's acquittal had not been unanimous, as Howard's had been. The question was passed over informally in order to allow Garfield to find the law under which the item would be in order. Kellogg offered an item appropriating $25,000 to enable the President to carry out the civil-service rules. After a long debate, and pending action on the motion, the House adjourned.

Friday, June 12.—Senate.—Carpenter, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported adversely on the Senate bill for further protection in the elections for President, Vice-President and members of Congress, with a written report, and the committee was discharged from further consideration of the subject.... The amendments of the House to the bill to amend the laws relating to patents, trade-marks and copyrights were concurred in, and the bill passed.... The new Finance bill agreed upon by the Conference Committee was taken up and passed by a vote of 32 to 23.

House.—The bill appropriating $500,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the Southern inundations was passed.... The House resumed consideration of the Civil Appropriation bill. An amendment was adopted providing for the payment of the old Choctaw Indian claim of $2,100,000. The item appropriating $25,000 for the expenses of the Civil Service Reform Commission was stricken out. A $300,000 appropriation for the Washington Monument was defeated on the ground that it was not a work authorized by law. An item of $20,000 for a lighthouse at the mouth of Thunder Bay river, Mich., was inserted.

Saturday, June 13.—Senate.—West, from the Committee on Transportation, reported adversely on the House bill providing for the construction of the Fort St. Philip canal.... A bill was passed providing for the care and custody of persons convicted in courts of the United States who have or may become insane while in prison.... The House bill providing for the enforcement of the collection of the tax of 5 per cent. authorized by law on the net earnings of the Pacific railway companies was passed.... Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported favorably on the House bill to provide for the election of Congressmen-at-Large for Alabama.... Sherman, from the Committee on Finance, reported adversely on the House bill to provide for the abatement or repayment of taxes on distilled spirits in bond destroyed by casualty.... The Chair laid before the Senate a resolution of the House disagreeing to the report of the Conference Committee on the Finance bill, and asking for a new conference. Edmunds moved that the subject be referred to the Finance Committee. Further conference being [illegible]. Rejected. The question then being on Wright's motion that the Senate insist upon its amendments and grant a committee of conference, it was agreed to—yeas, 30; nays, 17.... The Chair laid before the Senate a resolution of the House disagreeing to the Senate amendments to the Moiety bill, and asking for a conference committee. Sherman moved that the Senate insist upon its amendments and grant a committee. Agreed to, and the Chair appointed Scott, Howe and Bayard.

House.—The House refused to concur in the Senate amendments to the Moiety bill, and it was sent to a conference committee.... Maynard made the conference report on the Currency bill. After considerable discussion a vote was reached and the report rejected—108 to 146. Dawes moved that the subject be sent to a new conference committee. Agreed to—yeas, 198; nays, 48.... The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill. An item of $50,000 was inserted for printing the agricultural reports for 1873-4. Butler's proposition to abolish the Civil Service Commission was agreed to.

Monday, June 15.—Senate.—The House amendments to the Geneva Award bill were disagreed to, and a conference committee asked for. ....A bill was passed to regulate the removal of cases from State courts to United States courts. One section provides that process to commence a civil suit in a United States Territorial court may be served upon any person through his agent. This provision is intended to render the Washington correspondents liable for utterances of the papers which they represent.... Ramsey introduced a bill to provide for the prepayment of postage on printed matter.... The resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to report an amendment to the River and Harbor bill for the survey of routes recommended by the Transportation Committee was agreed to—yeas, 42; nays, 6.... Edmunds, from the Committee of Conference on the Bankrupt bill, made a report, which was agreed to. He explained the report, and said that most of the amendments were of a verbal character, and the bill was substantially as it passed the Senate, with the exception of a section relating to voluntary bankruptcy.

House.—The House was engaged nearly the whole day in considering the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.... Butler's amendment repealing the law for the Civil Service Commission, as amended by Haskins' proposition giving preference to discharged soldiers and sailors and their dependent relatives, was agreed to without division. An amendment requiring the heads of the Executive Departments to prescribe rules and regulations governing appointments was agreed to—96 to 58. The amendment providing for the payment of the old Choctaw fund was defeated. The provision that wages paid to printers and binders in Government employment shall not be above the price paid for similar work in the cities of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, was stricken out—129 to 90. The bill was then passed without division. It appropriates a little over $28,000,000, as against $32,000,000 in the like bill last year.

Tuesday, June 16.—Senate.—House bill to authorize the issue of duplicate Agricultural Land Scrip where the original has been lost or destroyed was passed.... The Postoffice Appropriation bill was under consideration in the Senate, and some important changes were made in it. The sections providing for the prepayment of postage on printed matter, and for the free passage through the mails of agricultural reports, were stricken out, and an amendment was adopted to the effect that postage on public documents shall not exceed 25 cents, which may be paid at the office of delivery.... The bill to provide for the election of Congressman-at-Large for the State of Alabama was passed.... The House bill to prevent discrimination in rates on the Pacific railways was passed without amendment.

House.—The contested election case from Arkansas of Bradley against Hynes was decided in favor of the latter.... Conference committees were ordered on the Geneva Award and Indian Appropriation bills.... A bill was passed providing that nobody shall be a Delegate in the House of Representatives from any Territory who has not attained the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not be an inhabitant of the Territory; and no person who is guilty either of bigamy or polygamy is to be eligible. The bill does not apply to sitting Delegates.... The contested seat from Arkansas—Wilshire (sitting member) against Gunter—was awarded to the latter.... The bill for the relief of settlers on the Des Moines river land grant was passed under a suspension of the rules..... The Joint Investigation Committee on the District of Columbia made their report, which was ordered printed. It sustains, in the main, the allegations of the memorialists, and recommend the entire abolition of the present District Government. No mention is made of any persons involved by the investigation..... The bill to amend the Bankruptcy law was passed as it came from the Senate.... The bill to perpetuate the Southern Claims Commission was passed.

Wednesday, June 17.—Senate.—House bill enabling a commission of engineers to investigate and report upon a permanent plan for the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi subject to inundation was passed.... The Naval Committee was instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the number of navy yards and Navy hospitals.... The Postoffice Appropriation bill was passed with amendments requiring the prepayment of postage at the rate of 4 cents a pound on newspapers and periodicals; allowing public documents to be sent out to collect on delivery not more than 25 cents apiece, and allowing the Congressional Record to go through the mails free.... The following bills were passed: Prohibiting the publication in newspapers of the revised statutes of the United States; House bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at or near the city of La Crosse, Wis.; Senate bill to provide for the establishment of an International Commission of Maritime Powers to lay down ocean courses for ocean steam vessels, and otherwise provide for the increased safety of sea travel; House bill to provide for the establishment of life-saving stations and houses of refuge upon the sea and lake coasts of the United States, and to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service; repealing all revenue tax on savings banks having no capital, and where investments are made solely for the benefit of depositors.

House.—Tremaine, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill to preserve the ballots cast at, and all papers connected with, elections for members of Congress. He moved to suspend the rules and pass it. Rejected—148 to 100.... A resolution was adopted giving the use of the rotunda of the Capitol to the Women's Centennial Executive Committee of Washington for the 16th of December next, to celebrate the destruction of tea in the harbor of Boston.... A resolution indorsing an international system of arbitration was passed.... The bill reported by the District of Columbia Investigating Committee for the reorganization of the District Government was passed with only 22 dissenting votes. The bill provides for the appointment by the President of a Commission of three for the temporary government of the District until Congress shall decide upon a permanent system. It also provides that there shall be no assessment on personal but on real property in the District.... Wilson (Ind.), from the Judiciary Committee, reported in favor of the impeachment of Judge Durell of Louisiana. Tremaine presented a minority report, recommending that all proceedings against Durell be discontinued. Both reports were ordered printed.

Population of the Earth.—In Petermen's Mittheilungen there is a paper by Behm and Wagner upon the population of the earth, from which we extract the following table, giving the inhabitants of the five grand divisions of the globe:

Europe	300,530,000
Asia	798,220,000
Africa	203,300,000
America	84,542,000
Australia and Polynesia	4,438,000
	1,391,030,000

An Obituary Editor.

Two or three years ago I was attached to the Morning Argus, the only paper published in our village, and during my engagement, we employed as an assistant editor a young man named Drinker. When Drinker began his duties, the manager said to him:

"See here, Drinker, among other things, I want you, whenever you see, in the exchanges or anywhere, a good biographical sketch of any prominent man, to clip it out and put it away, so's when he dies, you understand, we can rush it out as an obituary article, as it were."

Drinker went to work, and about two months afterward some well-known man died, and I examined the obituary bureau for the purpose of obtaining his history. It was not there; but I discovered that the insidious Drinker had stored away in that mortuary receptacle one biographical sketch of John Wesley, a collection of anecdotes about Gen. Putnam, and an essay upon "The Life and Services of John Hancock."

I commenced with Drinker upon the subject.

"Mr. Drinker," I said, after calling his attention to the article about the father of Methodism, "you certainly must be aware that John Wesley died long before you came into this office."

"N-n-no!" exclaimed Drinker, with a look of pained surprise, with his face. "Wh-wh-what! John Wesley dead! That great and good man gone! Thunder! Why, its too bad. I had no idea of such a thing. What a shock it must have been to his family!"

And as for Gen. Putnam, Drinker, it is perfectly absurd for you to pretend that you thought he was alive, you know, Come now, that's too much."

"Is he dead, too?" Well, well. The fact is, I've been living down in the country for two or three years, and haven't kept the run of things. And so old Putnam's dead. That noble old man. Strange, strange, how we are passing away."

"And, Drinker, you certainly can't be such an idiot as to have put away this article about Hancock, with the expectation that he would die again. You know he did die once. Why, Drinker, he died about 10,000 years ago."

"Come now!" exclaimed Drinker, exultingly, "I've got you there. Ah! ah! Died 10,000 years ago, did he smarty? You know too much. You think everybody's a fool but yourself! Dead, is he? Now, what's the use of your trying to stuff that down me, when I know well enough that the Democrats talked about running Hancock for the Presidency at the last election! O, pshaw! You ain't fit to write for any paper that's got any sense."

Then Drinker was discharged. I didn't enlighten him. He will probably go down to the grave with the firm conviction that Gen. Hancock is the man who set copy for the miserable penmen who signed the Declaration of Independence.—Max Adeler.

Inhabitability of the Moon.

Returning to the serious aspect of the inhabitability of the moon, the lecturer pointed out that all experiment and observation pointed to the absence of atmosphere and consequent existence of extreme heat and cold, which are incompatible with the organized life of our planet. Every examination pointed to the existence of physical irregularities. In demonstration of the non-existence of atmosphere he adduced the fact that the shadows, which are supposed to be valleys not exposed to the sun's direct light, are all black. While on earth, owing to the refraction of light, the valleys are not plunged in absolute darkness at sunrise, while on the moon, even under the noonday sun, the points which do not receive directly the sunlight are plunged in total darkness. Another proof of the absence of atmosphere at the moon's surface was found in the instant obliteration of stars, which, once they pass behind her disk, are no longer visible until they appear on the opposite side. This well-observed fact would be sufficient to settle the question of the existence of an atmosphere similar to ours. When the sun appears to sink suddenly below our horizon he has some time, but, owing to the refraction of light by the atmosphere, he is visible long after he has sunk below the true horizon. Not is the moon without air alone, but so far there are no indications of water existing or having existed. The diagram of a supposititious lunar landscape was produced to show what effect glacial action or water might produce if such things existed in the moon; but as they did not the audience was warned against putting faith in those imaginary pictures of moonland, in which inventive people seek to give the characteristics of our own earth to the pale satellite that follows our wanderings through space. If there are inhabitants on the moon they would see our earth under which we examine the moon. In passing through the heavens our planet would not blot out the stars, but they would appear as a ring of light on the outer edge of the disk. In the lunar eclipses the moon is not black, but ruddy with sunlight bent by the action of our atmosphere.—Prof. Proctor's Lectures in New York.

Glorious Sight.—One of the finest sights Prof. Stiner, the aeronaut, says that he ever saw, was the view he had of two sunsets, while on his balloon-trip from Milwaukee. He was at a certain altitude the first time when he saw the sun go down upon Lake Michigan, and then descended to the waters of the lake. Afterward he commenced rising very rapidly, and soon reached such an altitude that the fiery orb again began to rise, apparently upon the western waters, and ere long he was once more in full sunlight. Then, as he descended again, the sun sank beneath the waters a second time, thus affording two sunset views in a single day. The Professer says, as the sun appeared to rise a second time, it was one of the finest visions he ever witnessed, and the spectacle was one of the most magnificent description.

There are seventy-four national cemeteries and 285 cemeteries not national, including post cemeteries, where soldiers are buried. The total interments of Union soldiers in all the cemeteries is 327,694. Of these the "unknown" number 141,060, the "known" 186,604.

Flowers Blushing Unseen.

But the man who wants a woman and not a toy for a wife may not despair because he cannot marry the daughter of the "poor rich man," who leads as useless a life in her luxurious nest as fledglings do in theirs, for there are girls as pure as pearls, who live not in luxurious nests, that the young man may find if he wishes, who would be willing to help build a nest all their own, where home-duties and home-affections dwell in harmony, that the young man need fear no comparisons, for they will all be in his favor. "Full many a flower is born to blush unseen." There are at this time rare and lovely young women, who are beautiful morally, intellectually and physically, but you will not find them in luxurious nests; they flourish best in out-of-the-way places that the world does not know much of, and in pleasant villages and unpretentious country homes, these rare plants may be found. Have you not met them in the street, and looked into their sweet faces—faces which seem crowned like, a saint, with a halo of light, of whose subtle irradiation the heart is alone sensible? The lips and the eyes are genial with a tenderness which the realities of every-day life have imparted. Don't forget how dear the whiteness of the lily is to the heart, because it emblems meek purity. Don't forget, amid the glitter of gold and diamonds, purple and fine linen, which cannot bring happiness, but, far oftener, a starvation of heart and soul. Unlike her "poor rich sisters," she dresses neatly but plainly; her small but capable hands are unadorned with diamond rings. But can we ever forget those little busy hands when prostrated with sickness? Their gentle touch seemed to us good, for we knew our ministering angel was watching over us. I would like to write in letters of fire, that would never die out before the eyes of every young man and woman contemplating marriage: In all things beware of superficiality.—Grandma Thoughtful.

"That Mischievous Young Brother."

The moral to the following, told by the sufferer, is too apparent to mention. Young ladies will hereafter run their brothers out when gentlemen call:

I'm certain I wished somebody would spank the young rascal. We talked of hills, mountains, valleys and cataracts (I believe I said water-falls), when the boy spoke up and said:

"Why, sister's got a trunk full of them up-stairs; pa says they are made of horse-hair."

The revelation struck terror into me, and blushes into the cheeks of my fair companion.

It began to be very apparent to me that I must be very guarded in what I said, lest the boy might slip in his remarks at uncalled-for places; in fact I turned my conversation to him, and told him he ought to go home with me and see what nice chickens we had in the country. Unluckily, I mentioned a yoke of calves my brother owned. The little one looked up and said:

"Sister's got a dozen pair of them, but she don't wear 'em only when she goes up town on windy days.

"Leave the room, you unmannerly wretch!" cried Emily; "leave quick!"

"I know what you want me to leave the room for," he replied; "you can't fool me. You want to set on that man's lap and kiss him like you did Bill Jones the other day, you can't fool me; I jes tell you. Gem me some candy like he did, and I'll go. You think because you've got the Grecian bend you're smart. Guess I know a thing or two. I'm mad at you, anyhow, because papa would have bought me a top yesterday if it hadn't been for getting them curls, dog yer! You needn't turn so red in the face, 'cause I can see the paint. There ain't no use winking with that glass-eye of yourn, for I ain't going out o' here, now that's what's the matter with the purps. I don't care if you are twenty-eight years, you ain't no boss o' me."

A Sailor's Trick.—Three men-of-war ships, Dutch, French and English—while anchored in port, were contending with each other for the best display of sailorship; so the Captain of each vessel determined to send aloft an active sailor to perform some deed of grace and daring. The Dutch Captain sent a Dutchman, the French a Frenchman and the English an Irishman. The Dutchman stood on the top of the mainmast with his arm extended. The Frenchman then went aloft and extended both hands.

Now the Irishman thought if he could stand on the top of the mainmast with a leg and an arm extended, he would be declared the most daring sailor. Nimbly he clambered aloft until he reached the highest point; thence he carefully balanced himself upon both feet, extending his right hand with a graceful motion. Then he threw out his left leg until it came in line with his right arm. In doing this he ingloriously lost his balance, and fell from the masthead, crashing through the rigging toward the deck. The various ropes against which he came in contact broke his fall, and his velocity was not too great to prevent his grasping a rope attached to the mainyard. To this he hung for two seconds, then dropped lightly to the deck, landing safely on his feet. Folding his arms triumphantly, as if fall and all was in the programme, he glanced toward the rival ships and joyously exclaimed:

"There, ye frog-ating and sausage-stuffed furriners, bate that if you can!"

Clean Teeth.—If you will only keep your teeth clean they won't decay. The wonderful dentifrices which are sold at fabulous prices are greatly inferior to a simple mixture of soap and prepared chalk, with a little something like orris root; but the essential articles are soap and chalk. The druggist will prepare you enough for a quarter of a dollar to last a long time. When you go to bed, with a broad, soft tooth-brush go through the mouth thoroughly. If disposed to a bad mouth, you may repeat the dose in the morning. But the principle article for keeping the teeth clean is a toothpick, a soft goose quill, which you must use after eating, no matter though it is a piece of apple, and, if convenient, after the pick use a mouthful of water to rinse from the teeth what the toothpick may have left.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Farmers' Girls.

Up in the early morning,
Just at the peep of day,
Straining the milk in the dairy,
Turning the cows away—
Sweeping the floor in the kitchen,
Making the beds up-stairs,
Washing the breakfast dishes,
Dusting the parlor chairs.

Brushing the crumbs from the pantry,
Hunting for eggs at the barn,
Roasting the meat for dinner,
Spinning the stocking yarn,
Spreading the snow-white linen
Down on the bushes below,
Ransacking every meadow
Where the red strawberries grow.

Starching their ruffles for Sunday,
Churning the snowy cream,
Rinsing the pails and strainer,
Down in the running stream,
Feeding the geese and poultry,
Making the puddings and pies,
Jogging the little one's cradle,
Driving away the flies.

Grace in every motion,
Music in every tone,
Beauty of form and feature,
Thousands might covet to own.
Cheeks that rival the roses,
Teeth the whitest of pearls;
One of the country maidens is worth
A score of your giddy girls.

Farm Talk.

Sour milk, butter-milk and whey, are excellent for poultry of all ages, and at all seasons, especially in winter.

To destroy worms in flower pots take a thin layer of sharp silver sand and spread over the earth in pots of plants; it is a specific against worms in the soil.

Keep an eye on the tent-caterpillar, and as soon as the prepares his foundation, go for him with a brush or broom dipped in coal oil; a solution of carbolic soap also has a demoralizing effect.

A side window in a stable makes a horse's eye weak on that side; a window in front hurts his eyes by the glare; a window behind makes him squint-eyed; a window on a diagonal line makes him shy when he travels; a stable without windows makes him blind.

Hen manure, where only a small quantity is gathered, is better adapted to the growth of onions than anything ever tried. When large quantities are saved, it should be made fine, mixed with two or three times its bulk of gypsum, and applied to the corn-hills at planting time.

A writer in Les Mondes says that he is enabled to materially reduce the number of insects which prey upon the flowers and fruits of his garden, by covering the inside of an old tub with liquid tar, and at twilight putting a lighted lantern within, leaving the whole over night. The bugs, attracted by the light, try to reach the lantern and are caught and held fast by the tar.

A farmer who had a calf of value and no milk to give it was advised to give it hay tea. He did so, and the calf is reported as doing finely, though it has neither received hay nor meal since he got it. He cuts the best and finest hay he has, about two inches long, and pours boiling water over it; lets it stand until cooled to about the heat of milk from the cow, when the tea is given to the calf and hay to the cow. Both calf and cow thrive on their feed.

A standing antidote for poison by oak, ivy, etc., is to take a handful of quick-lime, dissolve it in water, let it stand half an hour, then paint the poisoned parts with it. Three or four applications will never fail to cure the most aggravated case. Poison from bees, hornets, spider bites, etc., is instantly arrested by the application of equal parts of common salt and bicarbonate of soda, well rubbed in on the places bitten or stung.

A Maryland farmer dissolved 1½ pounds of copperas in water and soaked a bushel of seed corn in it for twelve hours. The corn was then rolled in plaster and planted across a large field. On each side of this soaked seed was planted corn that had not been thus medicated. The cut worms did a great deal of damage to the unsoaked corn, but did not trouble that to which copperas had been applied.

The following is said to be an efficacious method of cleaning rusty plows. Take a quart of water and pour slowly into a pint of sulphuric acid. (The mixture will become quite warm from chemical action, and this is the reason why the acid should be poured slowly into the water, rather than the water into the acid). Wash the mold-board, or any other iron that is rusty, with this weak acid, and let it remain on the iron until it evaporates, and then wash it again. The object is to give time for the acid to dissolve the rust. Then wash with water, and you can see where the worst rusty spots are. Apply some more acid, and rub those spots with a brick. The acid and scouring will remove most of the rust. Then wash the mold-board thoroughly with water to remove all the acid, and rub it dry. Brush it over with petroleum or other oil, and let it be until spring. When you go to plow take a bottle of acid to the field and apply it to any spots that may remain. The acid and the scouring of the earth will soon make it bright and smooth. If all iron work be washed over with petroleum as soon as you put the tools, machines and implements, aside for winter, it will keep them from rusting, and save a great deal of trouble and annoyance to say nothing of depreciation and loss.

Household Helps.

The best thing for cleaning tinware is common soda. Dampen a cloth and dip in the soda, and rub the ware briskly, after which wipe dry. Any blackened or dirty ware can be made to look as well as new.

To Wash Hair-Brushes.—Do not use soap. Dissolve a teaspoonful of salaratus in tepid water, and dip the brush up and down in it till it is white and clean. Place it in the warm air to dry, with the bristles down, and it will be as firm as a new brush. Hartshorn in tepid water is quite as efficacious, but not quite as convenient.

Chicken Bean-Soup.—Stew a fat hen till ready to drop to pieces. Have a quart of beans soaked over night; in the morning parboil them till soft in rain-water. Drain off and put them with the chicken. Stew slowly half an hour; add butter and salt to suit the taste and fill up with boiling water, enough to suit the number that is to eat. This will be enough for six to ten persons. Try it, farmers' wives.

Fried Eggs.—The association of eggs with ham is of such honored antiquity, that it would be unwise to disturb it. Break eggs, then, one by one, into a pan in which ham has been light and quickly browned (not dried up), and fry them a light brown on the under side; by this time they will have assumed a consistency on the top, and must be taken up carefully with a fish slice or skimmer, without turning, and placed round the edge of the dish, the ham occupying the center.

To Clean Floor Oilcloths.—Soap should not be used in cleaning oilcloths. To half a pail of hot soft water add half a cup of washing fluid, or a piece of sal soda half the size of an egg; with a scrubbing-brush or broom rub hard, putting on only sufficient water so that it will not run off; wipe dry with a soft cloth; it will look as bright and shining as when new. This is a good way to clean common paint, as it easily removes smoke, grease or dust, and does not destroy the gloss of varnish. It is also useful in washing windows.

How to Cook Corned-Beef.—The Boston Journal of Chemistry says: Don't boil it, for corned-beef should never be boiled. It should only simmer, being placed on a part of the range or stove where this process may go on uninterruptedly from four to six hours, according to the size of the piece. If it is to be served, let the meat remain in the liquor until cold. Tough meat can be made tender by letting it remain in the liquor until the next day, and then bring it to the boiling point just before serving.

To Dye Black.—For four pounds of rags take two ounces of blue vitriol, and eight of extract of logwood, or three pounds of logwood-chips. Put each separately in twelve quarts of water, the logwood in an iron vessel, the vitriol in brass; bring both to a boiling heat; dip the cloth into the vitriol-water first, then into the logwood water, and alternately from one to the other till it has been dipped in each three times. Then dry, wash in strong suds, rinse in soft, cold water, and press when damp. This coloring is proper for lace, silk, worsted and cotton, and does not fade.

House-Cleaning Soap.—The following is commended by those who have tried it for scrubbing and cleansing floors, washing dishes and other household purposes: Take two pounds of white olive soap and shave it in thin slices; add two ounces of borax and two quarts of cold water; stir all together in a stone or earthen jar, and let it set upon the back of the stove until the mass is dissolved. A very little heat is required, as the liquid need not simmer. When thoroughly mixed and cooled it becomes of the consistence of a thick jelly, and a piece the size of a cubic inch will make a lather for a gallon of water.

A City That Was To Be.

I love to overhaul old letters; and I love to read the records of the fathers which are written in cherished folios, and have not been given to the world through printers' ink. Not long since I had access to the diaries and letters of one of these fathers, and from them I gleaned a bit of information which interested me, though not important. The father in question had been one of the anticipants. He had invested in the enterprise, and from letters announcing to him the final result, I gather my information. Thus it was:

Somewhere about the year 1835, a company of New York gentlemen, mostly merchants, surveyed the flat land on the west side of the Potomac, and laid down the plans for a new city. It was very nearly opposite the city of Washington, and they meant that it should be the great commercial city of the country. On paper it was called Jackson City, in honor of the old War-horse then occupying the Presidential chair.

The projectors evidently foresaw that the energies of the great Yankee nation must spread; but they did not foresee the opening-up of the Western empire. The main channel of the river passed nearer to their shore than to the other, and upon that circumstance they placed much reliance. "We will have the produce of the world poured into our granaries," wrote an enthusiastic projector, "and the wealth of nations shall be ours." They did not seriously consider that Alexandria lay on the same side of the river seven miles lower down, and that Georgetown lay between them and the interior. They considered only the bright dream imaged on their paper.

Jackson City was founded and christened with much pomp and ceremony. The corner-stone of what was to be the first public edifice was laid by President Jackson, and a brilliant oration was delivered by G. W. P. Custis, in the presence of a large assemblage of people.

The last paper in the father's budget touching upon this matter was a letter bearing date June, 1845, written about twelve years after the laying of this corner-stone. The correspondent writes that not a single house has been erected in Jackson City since its foundation; not a street laid out; not a lot improved. On the other hand, the corner-stone of the city had been sacrilegiously upturned and plundered of its deposited treasures, and the stone itself had been carried off into Fairfax county, where, when last heard from, an old negro was pounding hominy in its treasure-cavity. And that was the end of the dream. The coming city is to be nearer to the setting of the sun.—New York Ledger.

Scionry of a Scientist.—Dr. Brown-Sequard, the justly celebrated authority in medical and physiological science, is half Yankee and half French, as his hyphenated name indicates. His father was Capt. Edward Brown, a shipmaster of Philadelphia, and his mother a Frenchwoman. His birth, however, occurred in Mauritius, in 1817, and his chief fame has been attained in France, where the prize of the Academy of Sciences has been his no less than five times.

REFORM OR REVOLUTION.

Meeting of the Independent Conventions in Illinois and Indiana.

Full State Tickets Nominated—Declaration of Principles.

ILLINOIS.

THE INDEPENDENTS IN COUNCIL.

The Illinois Independent State Convention assembled at Springfield on Wednesday, the 10th inst., and was called to order by W. C. Flagg, who nominated the Hon. J. M. Allen, of Henry county, as temporary Chairman. Mr. Allen was unanimously elected, and returned thanks very briefly.

Mr. C. G. Schuler, of Stephenson county, was elected temporary Secretary. Mr. Thomas Wolfe, of Ford county, was elected Assistant-Secretary.

The Secretary, on motion, called the delegates by districts.

When the motion was about to be put appointing the Committee on Resolutions, Jere G. Pattison, of Stephenson, moved that the committee be instructed to have 500 copies of the resolutions, to be reported, printed for the members. Carried.

Gen. W. B. Anderson, of Jefferson, moved that all resolutions be referred to the Committee on resolutions without debate. This was adopted.

S. P. Tuft, of Marion, moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Committee on Resolutions the favorable consideration of the Decatur platform.

Adopted.

The Convention than adjourned for dinner.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

In the absence of the reports of the committees appointed in the morning, ex-Gov. Palmer, at the solicitation of the convention, addressed the delegates upon questions of the day.

The Chairman called the Convention to order once more, and announced that a telegram had been received from the Indiana State Convention, which was read as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, June 10, 1874.

To the President of the Farmers' Convention:

The brethren in council here, on behalf of the independent voters of Indiana, send greeting to their brethren in Illinois, and ask a word of cheer. They are firm and mean business. Every county is represented, and the Exposition Building crowded with delegates and friends.

INDIANA CONVENTION.

A reply was sent as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 10, 1874.

To the President of the Indiana Farmers' Convention:

Your message received, and read amid cheers. Every district in Illinois fully represented, and the greatest enthusiasm and harmony prevailing. We have struck out for ourselves, and we shall fight it out on this line, with glorious prospects of success. All hail!

(Signed) JAMES ALLEN, President.

A State Central Committee, consisting of one member of each Congressional District, was appointed.

Mr. Charles Shackelford, of McLean county, offered the following resolution, which was adopted, the rules having been suspended for that purpose:

Resolved, That this convention send greeting to the Governor of Wisconsin for the manly and noble stand he has taken in protecting the people of his State from the oppression and dictation of corporations.

Resolved, That we hope two years hence to have a Governor of this State who will, with equal vigor, assert and maintain the sovereignty of the people over the railroad and other corporations, which have thus far defied the law and insulted as well as robbed the people.

A. C. Hesing, of Chicago, being in the hall, was loudly called for. He said he was much obliged by being called on to address the convention, but, as he knew he differed from many of the delegates, he would prefer not to speak until he knew what platform the convention would adopt.

The Committee on Credentials then reported, by reading a list of the delegates, representing 68 counties, there being 259 delegates in actual attendance. It was claimed that Logan, Clark, Cumberland and other counties had delegates present, and that the Thirteenth district was entirely omitted. The report was amended by counties. The only representation from Cook county was those from the Workingmen's Association, who were admitted without question.

The Committee on Resolutions made their report. The Chairman, Prof. Turner, stated that an immense mass of papers had been laid before them. By courtesy they read them all, but judgment compelled them to fall back upon the Decatur platform. [Loud and repeated cheering.] The ideas embraced in the document were the same, although the language was somewhat different. He called upon the Secretary of the Committee, Mr. Clumpitt, of Lake county, to read the document, which he did, as follows:

We, the farmers, mechanics, laboring men and other citizens of Illinois in convention assembled, deeming it needful for the best interests of this State and nation that independent political action be taken by and in behalf of the producing, industrial and other business claims, and in opposition to the corporate monopolies that are influencing and controlling our Legislatures, courts and Executives and oppressing our citizens, appealing to the great fundamental principles of American liberty, and inviting the favorable judgment of our countrymen, do hereby Resolve, That the preservation of our national life imperatively demands that every American voter should attend with care at the primary nominations and elections, so as to insure the election of competent and honest men to all offices in the government of the people.

2. That the recent record of the political parties of this country was such as to forfeit the confidence and respect of the people, and that we are therefore absolved from all allegiance to them, and will act no longer with them.

3. That we insist upon severe retrenchment, reform and economy in all branches of our public affairs, and believe that with such economy the tax now collected from the people might be reduced at least one-half without impairing the efficiency of any branch of the public service, State or national.

4. That we demand the immediate reform of abuses in the civil service through which the patronage of the Government is dispensed, as a reward for partisan service rather than with regard to the public necessity.

5. That we are in favor of improving and perfecting the navigation of our lakes and rivers and water connections as soon as it can be properly done.

6. That we are opposed to any further grants of public land or loans of the public credit and of national, State or local subscriptions in aid of corporations.

7. That we demand the repeal of our National Banking law, and that the Government should issue a legal-tender currency direct from the Treasury, interchangeable for Government bonds, bearing the lowest possible rate of interest.

8. That we hold our patent laws are too often made to subserve the interests of monopolists, and that they should be carefully revised and restricted.

9. That we are opposed to any construction of the State Constitution which will justify, under any pretext whatever, annual instead of biennial sessions of our State Legislature.

10. That the existing railroad legislation of this State should be sustained and enforced until thoroughly tested before the courts; that we oppose any legislation by Congress under plea of regulating commerce between the States, which shall deprive the people of their present control and influence through State legislation, and that the claim of railroad companies to the right to fix their freights and fares independent of the people involves the highest attribute of sovereignty, the right of a conqueror to levy contributions at will upon a subjugated people or State, and, as this power cannot co-exist with a government of the people, it must be resisted.

11. That the right of the Legislature to regulate and control the railroads of the State must be vindicated, established and maintained as an essential attribute of State government, and that those holding the doctrine that railroad charters are contracts in the sense that they are not subject to legislative supervision and control, have not a just appreciation of the necessary powers and rights of a free Government, and we will agree to no truce, submit to no compromise short of complete supremacy of the State Government in its right, through its Legislature, to supervise and control the railroads of the State in such manner as the public interest may demand.

12. That we uncompromisingly condemn the practice of our public officials in receiving free passes from railroad monopolies.

13. That the principle of protection as applied to duties on foreign imports is contrary to the spirit and intent of the Constitution, as it creates privileged classes, levying taxes of the large majority for the benefit of the favored few. We are therefore opposed to all duties levied with this end in view, and we insist upon the repeal of all laws laying such duties, and that taxes shall be levied for revenue, and that only.

14. That this Convention earnestly recommend to the independent voters of the various Congressional and Legislative Districts and counties of the State, to put in nomination at an early day, and use their best effort to elect, candidates who support the principles herein enunciated.

15. That the contract system practiced in the construction of our public works, national, State, and municipal, has been a fruitful source of corruption and fraud, at the expense of the laboring and mechanical class, as well as against public interest, and such system should be revised and reformed.

16. That we, the Independent Reform party of the State of Illinois, invite the people of the State, regardless of past political affiliations, to unite with us in the support of the platform and ticket of this Convention, and we appeal to the better judgment of all our business and professional men to lend us their aid and sympathy, remembering, as they well may, that upon our prosperity and happiness depends their success in business.

Mr. R. Bowett, of Macoupin, moved the following amendment, which, on motion of Mr. Shackelford, of McLean, was laid upon the table:

Resolved, That we are uncompromisingly opposed to any further expansion of irredeemable paper currency, and demand a return to a uniform standard of values.

The Secretary, on motion of Gen. Anderson, read the resolution and platform seriatim and they were adopted in that form, after which they were adopted as a whole.

Adjourned for supper.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention, on reassembling, proceeded to nominate candidates for State offices.

The first informal ballot for State Treasurer resulted as follows: Pickerell, 74 votes; Wilkinson, 3; Gore, 57; McWhorter, 10; McConnell, 62; Miles, 14; Bryant, 36; total, 256; necessary to choice, 128.

The first formal vote resulted as follows: Pickerell, 68; Gore, 73; McConnell, 68; Bryant, 42; Miles, 2.

The second ballot resulted in: Gore, 99; Pickerell, 82; McConnell, 89. No choice.

The third ballot was, Pickerell, 67; Gore 124; McConnell, 57; necessary to a choice, 125.

The fourth ballot resulted in the choice of David Gore, of Carlinville, as candidate, by 154 votes, Mr. Pickerell receiving 95. The nomination was then made unanimous.

The nomination of a candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, resulted, after three ballots, in the election of Mr. S. M. Etter, of McLean county, an old Republican of high ability. He received 131 votes, and the choice was made unanimous amid great cheering.

Mr. Shackelford, of McLean, offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That our State Central Committee be hereby instructed to join with like committees in other States in issuing a call for a National Delegate Convention to meet in Chicago, Indianapolis, or some other central city in the West in January, 1875, for the purpose of taking into consideration the means and measures necessary to the protection of the citizen from the oppressions of aggregate capital, and for the further purpose of consolidating the various political elements in the nation opposed to the present corrupt practices of the old party leaders into a National organization representing the people pledged to reform.

Mr. Flagg offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the indebtedness of the country must be met and paid in good faith as the pledges of the nation require, and that we scorn and repudiate the idea that the industrial population of the country desire to avoid the payment of its just debts.

After considerable discussion, it was referred to the Committee on Resolutions, who reported as follows:

The Committee objects to the passage of the resolution because it is well known that we scorn the idea of repudiating any of our just debts, and any one insinuation to the contrary is an insult to the Convention.

The report was unanimously indorsed, and, after a few speeches, the Convention adjourned sine die.

INDIANA.

THE FARMERS' CONVENTION.

Farmers from every Congressional District of Indiana, and from nearly every county, assembled at Indianapolis on the 10th inst., for the purpose of nominating candidates for State officers. The following declaration of principles was adopted amid cheers:

In making this call and presuming to enter into complete competition with both parties, we should give to the world our reasons as well as the remedies we propose for the wrongs of which we complain. Starting then with the maxim that our Government is founded on the sovereignty and consent of the governed, and its purpose to protect property and enforce natural rights, we acknowledge the broad principle that difference of opinion is no crime, and hold that progress toward truth is made by differences of opinion, while fault lies in bitterness of controversy. We desire a proper equality for farmers, protection for the weak, and restraint upon the strong; in short, justly-distributed burdens and justly-attributed powers. These are American ideas, the very essence of American independence, and to advocate the contrary is unworthy of the sons and daughters of an American Republic.

For our business interests we desire to bring producers and consumers, farmers and manufacturers, into the most direct and friendly relations possible. We urge no aggressive war against any other interest whatever; on the contrary, all our acts and all our efforts, so far as business is concerned, are not only for the benefit of producer and consumer, but also for all other legitimate orders that tend to bring these two parties into speedy and economical contact.

Hence we hold that transportation companies of every kind are necessary to our success, that their interests are intimately connected with our interests, and harmonious action is mutually advantageous. We still, therefore, advocate for every State an increase in every practical way of all facilities for transporting cheaply to the seaboard, as between home producers and consumers, all the productions of our country. We adopt it as our fixed purpose to open out the channels in nature's great arteries, that the life-blood of commerce may flow freely. We are not enemies of railroads, navigation, irrigating canals, nor of any corporation that will advance our industrial interests, but are friendly to all laboring classes.

We shall advocate all legislation whereby these original and common elements, or the proceeds of the same, are enhanced by intelligent labor, and shall hold all measures whereby they are perverted from their original design and made to inure to the benefit of non-producers and to the injury of producers as wrong and subversive of the purposes of good government.

We hold that able-bodied, intelligent persons should contribute to the common stock, by useful industry, a sum and quantity equal to their own support, and legislation should lend, as far as possible, to the equitable distribution of the surplus products; as, if these propositions are not true and our Government is wholly perverted from its true design, the sacred names Democracy and Republicanism become the synonym of despotism, and the parties represented thereby, as now organized, are made the engines of oppression, crushing out the lives of the people.

We need only to point to the fact that, in this beneficent country of unlimited resources, with the land annually groaning beneath the products of human effort, the mass of the people have no supply beyond their daily wants, and are compelled, from unjust conditions, in sickness and misfortune, to become paupers. Pauperism and crime are the perplexing questions of all modern statesmanship, and it is with these we have to deal. How far these evils are connected with the abuses inflicted on labor, a superficial statesmanship seems not to perceive.

Chattel-slavery has been abolished, but the rights and relations of labor stand just where they did before the emancipation, in respect to the divisions of its products. The difference lies only in the methods of abstracting the results and concentrating them in the hands of a few capitalists. Capital is now the master, and dictates the terms, and thus all laborers are practically placed in the same condition of the slave before his emancipation. In thus placing them, the interests of all laborers become common, and they must fight the battle in unity if they would succeed.

What, then, are the instrumentalities by which these wrongs are inflicted? First, banking and monopolies, by which, through ruinous rates of interest, the products of human labor are concentrated in the hands of non-producers. This is the great central source of these wrongs, in and through which all other monopolies exist and operate. Second, consolidated railroads, and other transit monopolies, whereby all industries are taxed to the last mill they will bear for the benefit of the stockholders and stockjobbers. Third, manufacturing monopolies, whereby all small operators are crushed out and the prices of labor and products are determined with mathematical certainty in the interest of the capitalists. Fourth, land monopolies, by which the public domain is absorbed by a few corporations and speculators. Fifth, commercial and grain monopolies, speculation, and enriching the bloated corporations on human necessities.

We propose to restore the Government to its original purpose, and, as far as possible, to remedy these evils and remove their results: first, by abandoning the gold basis fallacy and establishing a monetary system based on the faith and resources of the Government of the nation, in harmony with the genius of the Government, and adapted to the exigencies of legitimate commerce. To this end, the circulating notes of the National and State Banks, as well as all local currency, must be withdrawn from circulation, and paper currency be issued by the Government, which shall be a legal-tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, duties on imports included, and be declared, equal with gold the lawful money of the United States. This currency, or money is to be interchangeable at the pleasure of the holders, for Government bonds, bearing a low rate of interest, say 3.65 per cent., the Government creditors to have the privilege of taking the money or bonds at their election, reserving to Congress the right to regulate the rate of interest on bonds, and the volume of the currency, so as to effect the equitable distribution of the products of labor between money, or non-producing capital, and productive industry, and we advocate paying the national debt in strict accordance with the laws under which it was originally contracted, in gold where specifically promised, but all other forms of indebtedness, including the principal of the 5-20 bonds, should be discharged at the earliest option of the Government in the legal-tender currency of the United States without funding it in long bonds, or in any way increasing the gold paying and untaxed obligations of the Government.

Resolved, That we are in favor of the office seeking the man, and not the man the office.

That we will endeavor to select men to fill the various offices who are honest and capable, without regard to former political opinions.

That we detest bribery, corruption and fraud in obtaining votes, either by the use of money or whisky, and will not support any man for office known to be guilty of the same; and

That we are opposed to electing any man to fill the same office for more than one term in succession, from the President down.

That we uncompromisingly condemn the practice of our public officials in receiving free passes from railroad managers.

That we denounce the action of our Legislature and Representatives in Congress and in the Senate for the increase of taxes, fees and salaries, and we will use all honorable means in our power to reduce the taxes, fees and salaries of all to a reasonable basis.

That we demand a reduction of all public expenditure, to the end that taxation may be reduced to the lowest possible limit.

That it is contrary to the policy of good government to encourage litigation, and that the allowing 10 per cent on judgments and the collecting of attorney's fees off of the defendant encourages litigation and favors capital, is a source of corruption, subserves no good purpose, and, therefore, ought to be remedied by appropriate legislation.

That the present Assessment law of real estate imposes unequal and unjust burdens on the producing class, and favors capital and corporate wealth, and we demand its speedy amendment.

That we demand in our Grand Jury system that their jurisdiction extend to felonies only.

That no party is worthy our confidence which denies the right of the people to restrict the abuses of the liquor traffic.

The Committee on Selection of a State Ticket submitted the following which was adopted unanimously:

For Secretary of State—Noyes S. White, of Vigo county.

For Auditor of State—Ebenezer Henderson, of Morgan county.

For Treasurer of State—Morris C. Bennett, of Steuben county.

For Attorney-General—James S. Mitchell, of Elkhart county.

For Judge of Supreme Court—Horace P. Biddle, of Cass county.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction—Clarkson Davis, of Henry county.

The following resolution was presented and adopted:

Resolved, That we, the farmers and workingmen of Indiana, fully determined to command due recognition, adopt as an expression of our sentiment and purposes the name of Independent.

Marriage of Blood Relations.

Statistics presented to the French Academy show that the marriages of blood relations form about two per cent. of all the marriages in France; and that the deaf and dumb offspring, at birth, of consanguineous marriages in France, and that the deaf and dumb born in ordinary wedlock, at Lyons, from full twenty-five per cent.; at least twenty-five per cent. in Paris, and thirty per cent. in Bordeaux—the proportions of the deaf and dumb, by birth, increasing with the degree of blood relationship. The data obtained show that, if the danger of having a deaf and dumb child in ordinary marriage, represented by figures, is one, there will be eighteen in marriages between first cousins, thirty-seven in marriages between uncles and nieces, and seventy in marriages between nephews and aunts. It appears, too, that the most healthy parents, if related in blood, may have deaf and dumb children.

THE DYING WIFE.

Lay the babe upon my bosom, let me feel her sweet, warm breath
For a strange chill o'er me passes, and I know that it is death,
I would gaze upon the treasure—scarcely given ere I go—
Feel her rosy, dimpled fingers wander o'er my cheek of snow.

I am passing through the waters, but a blessed shore appears—
Kneel beside me, husband, dearest, let me kiss away thy tears,
Wrestle with thy grief, as Jacob strove from midnight until day;
It may leave an angel's blessing, when it vanishes away.

Lay the babe upon my bosom, 'tis not long she can be there—
See! how to my heart she nestles—'tis the pearl I love to wear—
If, in after years beside thee sits another in my chair,
Though her voice be sweeter music, and my face than hers less fair;

If a cherub call thee father, far more beautiful than this,
Love thy first-born, O my husband! turn not from the motherless.
Tell her sometimes of her mother—you will call her by my name—
Shield her from the winds of sorrow—if she errs, oh, gently blame.

Lead her sometimes where I'm sleeping; I will answer if she calls,
And my breath will stir her ringlets, when my voice in blessing falls.
Her soft blue eyes will brighten with a wonder whence it came—
In her heart, when years pass o'er her, she will find her mother's name.

It is said that every mortal walks between two angels here—
One records the ill, but blots it if before the midnight drear
Man repenteth; if uncanceled, then he seals it for the skies,
And the right-hand angel weepeth, bowing low with veiled eyes.

I will be her right-hand angel, sealing up the good for Heaven,
Striving that the midnight watches find no misdeed unforgiven.
You will not forget me, darling, when I'm sleeping 'neath the sod?
Love the babe upon my bosom as I love thee—next to God.

The Dubuque Times is responsible for this: "Phebe Couzins doesn't dress like her brothers of the bar," says the Chicago Tribune of Thursday, by way of commencing an item. That's undoubtedly true; she dresses by putting her clothes over her head, while they don't—and what's more, they can't. But what business is it to the Tribune, anyhow?"

Death.

There is no subject upon which the human mind can dwell that is invested with such sober surroundings as death. What is it? This question has been asked billions of times; everybody asks it, because everbody feels interested in its deep mysteries. The subject is not a pleasant one to contemplate; the best of the race regard it with dread, all classes put it away from them as far as possible; not like to commune with the great Terror King; but no answer comes back to the question: What is death? We have seen its effect upon our families, friends and acquaintances; we are painfully conscious that it destroys life, transforms beings of beauty, activity and affection into lumps of inanimate clay; that the damask cheeks, the sparkling eyes, the athletic frames, are rendered food for the charnel-house worms, after death has placed the signet of mortality upon the living. Of the nature of this great scytheman of our race we know absolutely nothing; of the universality of his away we know all, but finite minds cannot fathom the immensity of this change from life to death.

Is death the bridge between the present and the unexplored future, between earth and heaven? Is it possible for mortals, after they have lost their vitality, to walk safely over the bridge that spans the two worlds? Is death an unbridged chasm which separates the finite from the infinite? If so, may we not bridge it by a life devoted to the right? May not virtuous actions erect a safe structure over this dark and forbidding chasm? We are told that faith can explain all these things, but we have not that faith, in the orthodox sense.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, June 25th, 1874

The Chicago Times, with its usual calmness and sobriety, thus refers to the press muzzler:

"That Mr. 'Matt' Carpenter is a villain, and the senate of United State contains among its members some other villains, was made manifest on Monday by the passage of a bill for an act to restrain and punish the freedom of the press in criticising Congressional thieves and office-holding rascals."

Republican State Convention

The Grant party held their State Convention last week and renominated their old officers and put forward several new ones. The Platform compliments Grant and recommends him to the people. It also compliments Morton, while these two men stand opposed to each other on the great question of the day, that of finance. It also endorses the Baxter bill in full.

The currency bill, passed by Congress last week, was finally voted for by several Senators who have been well-known advocates of the hard money party. But just hear their reasons for so voting. Simply that it could do no harm and might please the people. Just the same old ground that henpecked husband did not resist his wife when she whipped him. "It pleases her, and don't hurt me." Truly we live in a great age, when dignified Senators can satisfy their consciences with such frivolous excuses.

The Boston Post indulges high hopes of a Democrat victory in Massachusetts this year, and says:

If the Democrats are sagacious, ready resolute, and energetic, they may carry the State with the support of the people, change the character of the Legislature, elect a liberal and unpartisan Governor, and work a much-needed revolution in a number of Congressional districts. The Boston, Essex, and Middlesex districts are far from being as reliable for the Republican aspirants as they could wish. Superior nomination made in the most popular spirit by the Democrat may avail to snatch them from their present possessors, and give them to the people again.

John Sherman's Spite-Work.

[From Yesterday's Times.]

Sherman's postage amendment is bad enough as it passed the Senate yesterday, but the fangs were taken out of it by postponing the date of taking effect until the 1st of January next. Our amiable Senator wanted it to take effect on the 30th inst., thereby mulcting the publishers of several newspapers $10,000 or more, according to their circulation—the amount of six months' postage at four cents per pound. The Post-office Committee had agreed on one cent and a half, to take effect on the 1st of January next, the time when subscription generally commence. The sweet revenge thus contrived against newspapers which denounced the salary-grab and other jobs for enriching Congressmen has already been partly foiled. It remains to be seen whether the House will concur in the remaining part of the Sherman amendment. It is one of the best tests yet offered of the animus of Senators, Representatives grown restive and malignant under the efforts of the press to protect the interests of the people. One thing is certain, neither this nor any other measure of revenge will silence the press in its exposures of congressional corruption, or in its demand for thorough reform.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

New York, June 14, 1874.

Dear Courier.—Yesterday was sailing day for several transatlantic steamers. Having nothing particularly on the tapis, concluded to go down to pier No. 45 North River and see the city of Brussels of the Inman line, leave for her long and perilous journey over the trackless deep. The usual scenes of sorrow and distress surrounded me on every hand, as friend bade adieu to friend to separate for months, perhaps for years, perhaps for ever. Stout hearts quailed, and orbs unused to weeping shed copiously their lachrymal juice as wife and husband, father and child took their last long embrace, and gave and received the warm parting kiss of affection and love. Such scenes of woe are anything but pleasant, yet there are parties who with a fiendish delight gather frequently at the Piers on sailing day to witness the sorrow of their fellow creatures, and enjoy it all. Among the many in tribulation yesterday I particularly noticed two, who, to all appearances were lovers and evidently loved truly, and I trust wisely. He of the pair was to board the craft for Europe, she to remain on this side.—Poor girl; I thought from the wrought up tension of her heart strings, they would break, she wept aloud and refused to be comforted, her roving lover felt the sad importance of the occasion and his leaked as again and again he pressed her to his bosom and kissed her oft and passionately. They were so completeyl absorbed in their own distress as to be totally oblivious to the fact that hundreds of rude eyes were up on them. They seemed not to care for the outside world, there was no world outside of themselves to them; the orders were given all aboard he rushed up the gang plank and took his position at the ship's side railing where he could catch the last glimpse of her he loved so well, finding he still had five minutes to spare strode hastily down the plank to the Pier, again he clasped the almost fainting form of his inamorata to his heart, again their lips met and once more they swapped spit. The only words I heard were "And Charles you will not forget me, will you?" To which he replied "Forget thee darling, sooner would the moon forget her infant stars than I forget thee." It was a scene well calculated to stir up the finer feelings of the soul and one that appeal'd to our better nature and convinced us in our silent sympathy that our heart was not of adamant, but still susceptible of feeling and we rather prided ourself on the undidden tear that we foundun consciously stealing down our brazen-cheek, for tears have been strangers to us for lo, these many years, but the fountain head had by some potent unseen influence been tapped and a tear, a real live tear warm and sincere was dropped for the thoroughly distressed couple whose young lives were seemingly intertwined in one another. The vessel cast off her moorings, the Pilot and Capt mounted the bridge of the noble boat and the cruel mandate went forth to "cast loose," the gang plank was hauled ashore severing the last link that connected him with terra firma and soon he and his craft were lost to view in the hazy distance. "May they meet again," were the kind words of a tearful old lady by my side, to which I mentally responded a hearty amen.

Leaving this place I walked leisurely down West st. in the direction of Washington Market. At the foot of Canal st. noticed a score of apparently idle men and boys gazing listlessly in the muddy waters below; my curiosity directed my steps to the spot where to my horror I discovered a female form floating at will, a Policeman soon arrived anchoring the body to the pier; she was richly dressed, her left hand encased in a lavender kid, while jewelled fingers upon the other hand indicated anything but poverty. From the evening papers I learned it was a case of suicide. Just five lines were devoted to the tragic event, only "one more unfortunate, rashly importunate gone to her death," only this and nothing more, thousands just like her were left, she would not be missed, no newspaper space to chronicle the particulars and details of the affair but entire columns and pages to spare for Commercial reports, sporting intelligence &c So it is over here in this busy bustling, heartless city, a simple soul going forth to judgment is an hourly occurrence and evokes no special comment; simply a passing notice, unless wealth and position step in to the rescue and with gold ofttimes the ill-gotten gains of others industries, brilliant eulogies are penned and flattering encomiums go forth to the world emblazoning the virtues of deceased. This is New York all over, Money is the God whom they worship here, with it you command respect often adoration, obsequious servants flock about you smirking and smiling and strewing garlands in your path, but let it be known that in some unlucky speculation in stocks or by other means fair or foul your wallet has lost its jolly rotundity and in mockery fairly laughs at its own gaunt lean sides, your friends cut you, society ignores you, your attendants desert you, even thieves look upon you as beneath their consideration and you are left alone with your God and your conscience. N. Y. is the worst city in the world for a poor man he has no business here, he must be fortified by an almost inexhaustible exchequer or possessed of an indomitable will to look for his money where he loses it, to recover his lost fortune and prestage, and regain what he has lost by victimizing some other, as he himself has been victimized, Many men are paupers one day and millionaires the next through capricious stock operations. Historic Black Friday of Sept 1869 gave the most convincing evidence of this fact and last September too, when Banks and old established commercial houses crumbled into bankruptcy the fact was again forcibly demonstrated to the sorrow of thousands, to the gain of a few. If God was as devoutly, earnestly worshipped here as is gold, there would be a halo of glory from his throne whose genial rays could not be mistaken as the smiles of an appreciative Saviour, which would light up this sin cursed city as brilliantly at night as the sun now does that at the meridian hour of day.

Fashion goes hand in hand with wealth; I mean genuine fashion; For the benefit of Auburn's fair maids who are seldom behind the styles, I would fain give them the latest dodge in dress and toilettes generally, but my descriptive powers of ladies fashions can scarcely be relied upon, for I pay but little attention to the outer adornments when the inner sanctuary is pure and chaste. To me this is the grand requisite, some newspaper correspondents can go into ecstasies over the latest cuts from Mlle Demorest and explain quite scientifically how this bosom is cut pompadour and that dress gored or cut on the bias but my tastes have been allowed to drift in other and less important channels and today I find myself compelled to disappoint your lady readers as to the prevailing styles, promising however in my next if I can secure the services of a lady friend to assist me, thoroughly posted in this eminently important feminine matter to faithfully write it up for the benefit of the tasty ladies of DeKalb's Capital. Au Revoir.

We Retail all goods at Wholesale Prices, all our Teas, Coffees, Sugars, Spices, &c., are purchased direct of the Manufactures and Importers and as we sell direct to the consumers, whereas Middlemen add 50 per cent. to the cost. Some goods, say tea, the Importer sells to the Jobber at 10c per lb profit, the Jobber sells to the wholesale merchants 15c per lb profit, the wholesale merchant resells to the retail merchant at 20c per lb profit then then the retail merchant sells to the consumer at 25 to 50c per lb profit Just as he gets it. All these intermediate profits we give our customers, and this is the secret of our immense tea trade. so with all goods we handle. We sell goods to save the profits of Middlemen

NUMBER 17.

They had to hold by stumps to keep from being blown away. In the hurry of the moment, one child and the young woman had been left in the house, and fortunately, by some means fell through the floor. The wind lifted the door from its hinges and threw it over them, and then the logs came tumbling in upon them until the house was leveled; and even the foundation logs turned over, yet the young woman and child were uninjured! Those in the field did not all escape so well.—The cabin of Mr. Karper was leveled to the ground, and the weight poles were blown beyond Mr. Brown's house, (some forty rods or more.) One of the knees from the roof of this cabin, it is supposed struck Leander Brown, a boy of Henry Brown's, making a dreadful gash in his head, which became a running sore for months. He is now a young man, and for years has been nearly blind from the effects of the wound, as is supposed. The storm having thus demolished these houses, and scattered the fences like feathers over Mr. Brown's improvement,—rushed on like a demon, tearing the heavy forst to shivers in its course, and carryng away the upper part of Wm. and M. George's dwellings; and totally demolishing, all their fences, —again it struck the forest beyond these farms, leveled it totally in its course, as before, until it reached the tract of land now owned by James Draggoo, where he formerly lived in Concord Township—when, either exhausting its force, or rising higher in the air,—it ceased its work of terrific distruction.—Articles of bed clothing from Mr. Brown's house were carried more than two miles by the Tornado.

The width of its path of destruction was about half a mile, and its length three miles.

After the fury of the storm was over, Mrs. William George started to Mr. Brown, (about half a mile west-ward with a plain road, before the storm,) but was so bewildered by the wild confusion of fallen timber, that she lost her way, and, after exerting herself to the utmost of her strength—doubled by her terrible excitement finally arrived at Geo. Moores, one mile south of her residence. On reaching this house she swooned away. Though much of this fallen timber has been cleared up on the farms of Mr. Woolsey, Mr. Brown; Karpar, the Messrs Georges, Isaac Culbertson, &c.; and though much of it has been rotted or burnt, where the land has not been cleared up; and though a new growth of timber has arisen to hide the desolation—yet the pathway of this storm is still very plainly to be seen on the road from Auburn to Spencerville.

Jackson Township, has rapidly improved since its first settlement. Large farms are seen in every part of it. Good buildings have been erected as fast as could be expected.

Butler is the south-western corner township of the county. It is six miles square and was organized as a civil township, Septembea 5th, 1837. It has cedar creek (the largest stream, except St. Joseph river in the county) running across the north east corner of Little Cedar from the north down through the center; and Black creek, a smaller, but never failing stream through the west part; so that it is well supplied with living water. The land in this township is generally rich, and, along the stream, pleasantly undulating. Between the streams there is some flat, wet land. Taken altogether however it is quite a good township of land.

First settlers were Peter Fair, and his sons, Abram and Charles; F. C. Crouse, George DeLong, and Andrew, Jacob and John Surface.—These eight came into the township first in October, 1834, with a four horse team and wagon. They had to cut their own road from Squire Caswell's, in Allen county, beyond Huntertown—five miles to the place where they settled and also a considerable part of the way from Fort Wayne, as the tract was too narrow and crooked for a four horse team. Abram Fair, one of the eight is our informant "Our plan," says he was to come out—build cabins—make a little beginning, and then return to our old homes. in Montgomery county, Ohio, to winter the family and in the spring we brought provisions enough with us to last till our return, excepting meat—calculating to kill deer enough to supply that. In this, however, we were mistaken We found deer quite scarce in those woods that fall. One day Andrew Surface found a hollow tree, filled with honey into which a bear had gnawed a hole and helped himself to as much as he wanted. On cutting the tree we found what was left of Bruin's dinner, six gallons of honey.

The Band have been at great expense in getting new uniforms and as a means of working out of debt they propose to give a social dance, Friday evening before the Fourth, at Ensly's Hall. Every body should take a ticket whether they go or not, and thus help in a worthy cause.

Don't forget that there has opened in Auburn a new Boot and Shoe store where an entire new stock is now on exhibition, and for sale at the lowest prices. Mr. Woodford, the proprietor, has a large experience in this line, and knows what to select to suit the trade. Store next door to Hebel's corner, Main-st.

We saw a sweet sixteen the other evening sitting in the front yard smoothing her Auburn locks (everyone in town has that kind of hair) preparatory to the arrival of a young gentleman of the period who was expected that evening to see—another young lady in the same house. Yell, vot of it.

The indiscriminate use of fire works in town should be suppressed. The Town Board should pass an ordinance prohibiting the use of fire arms or fire works within the corporation, except on the 4th. A number of accidents have already occured We like to see the boys have their fun, when not inconsistant with public safety.

Capt Mitchell, of Goshen, is the nominee on the Independent ticket for Attorney general. While we believe he has ability, fitness and experience sufficient to discharge the duties of that office, we also believe he has the foresight, and good sense to decline because of the want of enthusiasm, unity and strength in the so-called party.

The order of Odd Fellows, in this State paid in relief and charity last year, $35-558.76. A reverend gentleman, at Ligonier, a few weeks since, prayed that such secret society fellows might be sent to "their native hell." It may be that when the brethren get there they will be a little warmer hearted, but that is doing very well for this cold world.

AUBURN SCENE—Little dove in the parlor awaiting her fellow, little boy outside rapped on the door just to fool her, she with the annoyance and anxiety hears another rap, and she innocently says, "Go away, I don't want to see you any more; you need'nt think you can fool me any more." Exit young gent on his ear; think he don't love that little Dove ever so much.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT—Mr. S. W. Ralston met with a serious accident last Friday evening. He went up stairs in his store to put down the windows, fearing that fire from the rockets the boys were shooting off that evening might be thrown inside, and as he was going down stairs he missed his footing and fell ten feet to the bottom, breaking his collar bone and inflicting other injuries. He is recovering very slowly, and has suffered great pain.

At Auburn they trade horses for dogs. It occurs to us that the curs there must be unusually valuable or the horses unusually poor. Brother Thomas Mays, you should discourage this practice by using all honorable means to curtail it.—Logansport Journal.

Not any. Its of great utility for we get rid of two unprofitable items, poor horses and worse dogs, by trading one away and shooting the other.

SPENCERVILLE.—Rumor has it that one of the venerable citizens of Spencerville paid $3.50. Keep still money—and it won't keep still either.

Geo Howey and Chauncy Skinmer angrily debated the responsibility of a job of poor coopering.

Some of our Concord politicians are looking for a place on the slate for the fall election.

Growing crops are very promising in this neighborhood, and business in its various departments very lively.

Grand Celebration !

OF THE 4TH OF JULY!

In Auburn

There will be an old fashioned celebration at this place the coming Fourth, and a good time is expected.

Hon John McSweeny,

AND

Gen. BILL GIBSON

of Ohio, and

HON. R. C. BELL,

of Fort Wayne, have been invited as the Orators of the day.

SPEECHES, MUSIC, FUN

A grand Parade by the SPANISH BANDITS will take place during the day.

A large amount of

Fire Works

have been procured for the evening

There will be a Foot Race, Wheelbarrow Race and other amusing features.

Music by the Auburn Cornet Band !

AND THE

GLEE CLUB!

A DANCE will be given at Ensly's hall Friday and Saturday evenings.

DR. J. H. FORD,
President of the day.
CAPT. H. E. ALTENBURG,
Marshal of the day.

A young lady dying, fully determined said to her lover—

O, William ! strew no blossoms of spring
For the new apparatus might rust ;
But say that a handful of shavings you'll bring
And linger to see me combust.

Yes, promise me, love, while the seasons revolve
On their noiseless axles, the years,
You will visit the kiln—you saw me resolve,
And leach my pale ashes with tears.

FIRE.—Last Thursday afternoon the residence of Mr. James Potter took fire from a defective flue, and a great deal of hard labor was required to extinguish the flames. It commenced burning in an old building used for a kitchen and reached the main building. Had this been plastered up-stairs the "bucket engine" would have done but little good. Several strangers looking on were surprised at so large a place not having a fire engine, and remarked that their fire company would put it out in 10 minutes. The loss is estimated at about $500.

FEATHER RENOVATER.—Those who have feather beds and pillows, can now have them thoroughly renovated and cleaned at little cost, by Benny's steam process. Mr. J. C. Maxwell, is now at Waterloo, with one of these Renovaters and now is the time to attend to this matter. We know that this process accomplishes all that is claimed for it. By this process all moth are destroyed and the feathers cleansed, the fibers relieved from their curled and matted condition, giving to a bed astonishing increase in the size, nearly doubling, and often more than doubling their original bulk.

Go to Beard's for fruit Jars, jelly cups and glass ware.

To the Citizens of Auburn and Vicinity.

It is with pleasure that we can announce to our many patrons and friends that at last we have solved the great secret of advantage to our customers and success to ourselves, namely:

We have an entire new stock, fresh and clean.
Bought strictly for cash; for money.
Selected by the best buyer in Indiana.
The discount obtained by buying for cach pays all our expences.
We pay three-fourths less rent than any clothing house in the city
The expense incurred by judicious advertising.
We give to our customers by selling cheap.
Our entire expenses three-fourths less than any house in Wayne.
We can fit children, boys, youths, men and extra sized men.
Suits for children from $2 up; for boys from $3 up.
Men, from $5.50 a suit upward.
The largest, most complete and fashionable stock of furnishing goods, hats, caps, &c., in Fort Wayne.
We sell strictly for cash, and at one price.
Every article marked in plain selling figures.
The only place where all are treated alike.
We have a buyer constantly in the eastern markets, shipping us the latest novelties. The expense saved, coming to the Star, by our low prices!
10 per cent discount to the clergy and their families.
Good brown duck overalls only 50 cents.
Three boxes of good collars (ten in a box) 25 cents.

SAM & PETE, and MAX NIRDLINGER, Managers.
SAMUEL F. NIRDLINGER, Proprietor.
April 16, 4-m
Fort Wayne, Indiana.

A little incident occurred the other day before a justice at Leo. A brilliant lawyer from Fort Wayne had talked about three hours until the patience of everybody present was exhausted. A dog lay on the floor, and one of the opposing counsel hit him a tap with his cane and he howled. This interrupted the orator and he ordered the dog put out. The owner of the dog, an old man, said on the ground that as the lawyer had sung him to sleep, the dog should finish his nap.—The argument of counsel closed soon after.

HAD HE LIVED NOW.—A certain King once ordered a pair of brogans with which to ornament his feet. In due time they were made, but lo and behold when his majesty came to try them on, he found them too small. He tried the maker again and found the boots the next time the other extreme—too big. An order was promptly given to execute the shoemaker if the next time the boots failed to fit.—Whether they suited upon the third occasion, history does not relate, but had this magnate lived in our time, and had called upon Vordermark & Sons he could have been accommodated at the first trial and would undoubtedly have been well fitted, without having to experience a delay, waiting for the boots to be made

The Press gives another growl over the bond case, and insinuates that the county is responsible for all this delay, when Republican Judges have had entire control of the matter. It seems to be one of the special features of that paper to create many impressions. Here is another:

Republican LaGrange county only levies 15 cents on the each $100 for county purposes, but then it has no bond case to prosecute.

Now will the Press state how much more is levied for bridge purposes and for the poor. In some counties the levy is divided into three parts, but the Press wishes it understood that 15 cents is all the levy in LaGrange county. Will our very fair and honorable neighbor correct this impression. Of course, this is an oversight upon its part, as a party that will accept $50 from a prominent candidate for his support and then go right back on him because another pays more and decline paying it back, certainly has no guilt in his heart.

THE COMET—Another comet is now visible, called the Coggia Comet. The most feasible method of finding it among the dim and widespread stars of the Camelopard is to draw an imaginary line from Gamma to Alpha of the dipper and from Gamma to Beta of the lesser bear, prolonging it downwards. At or near the inter section of these lines, at about 30 degrees above the horizon at 9 p. m. the comet will be found. Its place or Proctor's man is just above the small arrow next west of the stars 42 and 43 of the Camelopard (Camelus).

As there may be some who do not undestand this mixture of menagerie and tinshop with starry orbs, and who know neither the nose of the great bear nor the small arrow in the Camelopard when they see them, Prof. Gaileo, gives the following directions and diagram to bring about the same result:

* North Star

* The Comet

The..................Horizon

Let the observer look the polar star square in the face, drop a line straight to the horizon, and then, midway between the earth and the polar state, and a little to the right of the line, he will find the Coggia Comet.

THE AUTHOR OF "BEAUTIFUL SNOW."

RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO THE MANY CLAIMING THE TITLE.

As a poet I've never been famous,
Which I think at a glance you will see,
But for [illegible] up words altogether,
I doubt if my beat there can be.

I once wrote a piece for a paper
Entitled the "Beautiful Snow,"
And the [illegible] who acted as carrier
Now sleeps in the valley below.

'Twas caused by the editor's anger
Upon being presented, you know,
With a poem of forty-two verses—
All ending with "Beautiful Snow,"

He was kicked from the sanctum instanter,
Then down two or three flights of stairs,
And the pavement impeding his progress
Put an end to his worldly affairs.

The spot where his bones lie reposing
Is marked by a plain-looking stone,
Which [illegible] all juvenile poets
To let snow and its beauty alone.

Or it may [illegible] death of another,
[illegible] for you to relate,
And [illegible]
[illegible]

So, when [illegible] asked for a poem,
I think of that boy's sad demise,
And never put "Beautiful Snow" in
When it's possible to do otherwise.

But how can a person avoid it?
When one's been accustomed, you know,
To read every day in the papers
A poem on the "Beautiful Snow."

The name of the author is doubted—
Some say it was written by Poe,
While others say that it wasn't;
So how's a poor fellow to know?

Then again the credit is given
To one who had fallen from grace,
Who once was as pure as the snow-flake,
And was sought for the charms of her face.

Who died in a charity hospital
From the effects of her terrible woe,
And 'tis said that they found on her person,
The poem on the "Beautiful Snow."

But rumor more recently has it—
'Twas written by one of the "Reds,"
Who was known as Chief of the Modocs
And King of the Lava Beds.

Now, who ever the author may be,
I think it is time to come out
And enlighten an anxious public
By telling us what he's about—

The cause of his quiet seclusion,
And the whereabouts of his home;
And whether he's married or single,
Or lives, like a hermit, alone.

Whether he's man born of a woman,
Inhabiting this world below,
Or whether he's only a spirit
In the form of the "Beautiful Snow."

If a being, he ought to be knighted,
And his head with thorns should be crown'd,
Made King of the Cannibal Islands,
Or some country that's not yet found;

And when he tires of his glory,
And votes it decidedly stale,
He should be given in charge of the Kuklux,
And escorted around on a rail;

And then, on some cold winter's evening,
When the snow has covered the ground,
In a coat of coal-tar and feathers,
They should lower him gently down

To a sleep of peace and quiet,
Away from this world of show,
With naught but the heavens above him,
In a bed of his "Beautiful Snow."

BETSEY BOBBETT.

My! but Mrs. Betsey Bobbett was a spry little widow. She walked as though she was moved by steel springs, especially if 'Squire Wilkins happened to be passing her house. If she saw him tilting by in his gig, she was sure to be busy at the front window, picking an imaginary dead leaf off the rose-geranium, or culling spray of mignonette to fasten among her bonny brown curls. Sometimes she would be coming round the house from the cistern-pump, and she would flirt her ruffles in a way to show the 'broidered hems of her marvelously dainty skirts and the trimmest of all prettily-arched ankles.

She was as artful as a mink, Betsey was, and it was very certain that she had laid her plans to captivate the village 'Squire. Her brother thought so—he was an old bachelor who lived with her—and all the trouble Ira knew was the fear that Betsey would marry and his cozy relations be broken up. He embraced every opportunity to say something against every marriageable widower or susceptible bachelor in the neighborhood.

"No, I don't like the looks o' 'Squire Wilkins, nohow," he said one evening, as he leaned back in his chair at the tea-table and picked his teeth leisurely. "Them deep, up-and-down wrinkles 'tween his eyebrows are enough for me; when you see them on anybody's face you may look out for ill-natur' and a cross, fault-finding disposition. But where they run this way," and he arched his eyebrows up, until his skinny-looking forehead lay all in deep furrows plowed horizontally, "why, then you may expect a good-natured man, not fault-finding nor hard to please."

"It's nothing to me who's ill-tempered or who has wrinkles, I'm sure," said Betsey, smiling demurely; "but I never believed much in signs. You know our old Grandmother Tresway was as full of contrariness as the old fellow himself, and people looked in her smooth face, as placid as a china doll's, and they called her a saint, and a mother in Israel, and all such holy, significant titles. You remember how she used to throw the tea-pot, or the press-board, or the boot-jack, or anything that came in her way, at us young ones."

And so the talk of the brother and sister drifted on until it ran into the past, and they both talked of old times and half-forgotten adventures, and they spent a very pleasant evening together, as they usually did.

The next evening, just after dusk, the 'Squire called and stayed an hour or so. He had not intended stopping long—just ran in to see how Ira managed to keep his sweet potatoes all winter—he'd never had luck keeping his, somehow. Ira hurried and told him, secretly hoping that he'd go home immediately, but the 'Squire was in no hurry.

They talked election news and discussed the candidates for Governor, and for Lieutenant-Governor, and Congress; and yet the 'Squire lingered. He was building a new house, frame, story-and-a-half, with two dormer windows, that cost fifty dollars each. He said "dormer windows were so charming to sit in and watch the sun set in the summer evenings when the mellar light fringed all the hills with glory;" here he ran his spongy hands into his pockets and then plowed his fingers through his well-dyed, ambrosial locks, and then fell to milking his sooty black beard, while he glanced over at the widow, whose eyes spake again.

"Or," he continued, "it is pleasan to sit in a dormer winder in the full o' the moon and watch him sailin' among the clouds in all his evangelical majesty. One knows how to vally a friend at such a time;" and he rolled up his eyes and milked on leisurely, while he sighed.

"That's so," said Ira, thinking that he ought to say something to show himself an appreciative listener.

"I've not planned yet how I'll have my upper rooms divided off; I want them handy and to be as large as possible," and he cast his round, white orbs up to the ceiling, thinking that he looked like a poet whose eyes were in a "fine frenzy rolling."

"This is fine October weather," said the widow, tossing back her curls and rocking gently to and fro, giving her head just motion enough to swing the glittering pendants in her ears and make them catch the light of the lamp and sparkle there most bewitchingly. Oh, it was a captivating little dodge, and it worked like a charm. The 'Squire's heart melted like a roll of July butter.

Her hands lay prettily in her lap; she continued: "I always think of what the poet sung of October. He says:

> "'There is a vigor in the air
> That brings such light to heart and eye
> As came not with the summer glow
> Of days gone by.'"

She recited it rather mournfully, and raised her voice at the end of each line until she came to the last, and she gradually let it die away in a whisper.

That was artful dodge number two.

Ira was growing uneasy at the sentimental turn matters were taking, and thinking of hospitality, he said: "'Squire, s'posin' we have a basket o' walnuts to eat—some o' them boosters that growed down on the bottom?"

"No, I believe not; I ate a hearty supper this evening, thank you," said the 'Squire. "Now my family room is a trifle larger than this," he continued, and he looked all around the room, scrutinizingly.

The widow was glad that she had swept down the cobwebs that very morning, and that Ira had whitewashed overhead the week before the State Fair. To all outside appearances she was a tip-top housekeeper. But, sometimes, if she was in a hurry, she did not make her bed more than three times in one week. Nobody knew it but Ira, and he didn't care a cent.

Ira stood his ground and managed to say something every time the 'Squire spoke; he was determined that he shouldn't have an opportunity to talk sentiment to Betsey, for if he did, dear knows where it would end. There was the 'Squire, a well-to-do widower, a good provider, only two children, rich and looking about for a partner to share his joys and his sorrows. There was his sister, Betsey Bobbett, only turned of thirty-three, neat, handsome, smart as a cricket, and her husband dead as a door-nail, this eighteen months over, and why shouldn't she marry if she took a notion? But he couldn't live in the same house with the 'Squire and Betsey, even if they wanted him to. He thought, and thought, and scratched his head over the problem, and his lower jaw fell, and for two days he pondered sorrowfully over this new dilemma.

One day Betsey was going over to her cousin's to a quilting, and Ira was to keep house and have the tea-kettle boiling at five o'clock in the evening.

Now, nobody would guess what an ugly thing old Brother Ira did in her absence. Oh, the selfish old churl was driven to it! He knew it wasn't manly or kind, but how could he give up his cozy quarters and see Betsey's smiles lavished upon another?

Poor fellow, he arraigned himself, and while under indictment he said: "Now, Ira Josephus Barnabee, you know very well that you are the viciousest mortal that ever lived, but something must be done. You don't want to be set adrift and be compelled to try the realities of a cruel world that always was hard on orphans and poor folks!"

Ira often dwelt with pathos on the fact of his being an orphan. He was not a very tender orphan, being in his forty-seventh year; but that is the way with some people, they will howl over one old-time, by-gone sorrow all through their lives.

Ira knew that Madame Wilkins, deceased, had been a very pink of a housekeeper, and the bereft 'Squire thought this requirement the one thing needful in a wife. She must mop all the floors every Saturday, sweep down the cobwebs, polish the tinware, and do all the little things that his mother used to do. Of course her successor must be all she had been.

After Betsey had been gone an hour or two, Ira walked leisurely over to the new story-and-a-half frame house of 'Squire Wilkins, and seated himself on the work-bench and commenced playing with the little curly shavings.

The 'Squire came in and began showing him round through the house very courteously. When they were up-stairs Ira said: "You'd ought to have your rooms divided off like my sister Betsey has; I think hers are very convenient."

"I wish I had the plan of her rooms," said the 'Squire, brightening up as though the idea tantalized him.

"Get your rule and come right over along with me; there's nobody at home to-day, and we'll have full possession ourselves."

So the two men trudged off together to Widow Betsey Bobbett's little rose-covered cottage in the edge of the village.

Now I don't want to insinuate, but I verily believe that Ira Josephus, the selfish old bachelor brother, had been all through Rose Cottage, just trying how badly he could tumble together the contents, and what a suspicion he could cast upon that little housekeeper, Betsey Bobbett. In the pantry the doors of the cupboard stood staring wide open, showing a heterogeneous mess of cold boiled cabbage, pork, fish, turnips, pickles, buttermilk and meat-fryings, with nut-cakes, broken pies, dry bread, etc. The doors of the clothes-press stood ajar, and bonnets, hats, hose, gaiters, gowns and slippers were thrown promiscuously together in tumbled heaps—dirty and clean, broken and whole, all just as though tumbled out of a rag-peddler's wagon in a hurricane. The sitting-room was in prime disorder; a basket of walnuts and a plate of apples with peelings and cores among them, occupied a place in the middle of the floor. But her bed-room was the worst. The bed was not made; on one post hung a nightcap (it wasn't hers, Ira must have put his there); it was made of red flannel, without a hem or binding, the back part of it was puckered all up by a string run round in it. On another post hung an old hoop-skirt that looked as if it had come out of Noah's ark after doing good service for Noah's wife and his sons' wives. Stockings lay scattered about and shoes just as they had been kicked off, corsets, bustles, underclothing, and all the et cetera of a bed-room, in a dilapidated condition. Ira acted very naturally, just as if everything was right and not unusual.

"Now, 'Squire, this bed-room is a good-size, 'bout square, I should think," said the unimpressible Ira, taking the rule and beginning to measure from the wall right opposite the bed; "take the measure and see for yourself;" and he handed it to the bereft widower.

He took it and continued on with the same measurement that Ira had commenced. Of course it ran right under the bed. Now beds will get dirty under them. I don't know what's the reason, but the first sign of disorder in a bedroom begins with a fluffness on the carpet under it. Then we women all know what a glorious receptacle "under yon bed" is for shoes, boxes, dirty clothes, cast-off duds, and anything one wants to put out of sight "just for a little while." Good housekeepers sometimes so far depart from their integrity as to let things get in a muss in their bedrooms. It is not for us to say whether Betsey Bobbett's bed-room was generally tidy or not.

Dreadful, wasn't it? that just while the immaculate 'Squire was down on all fours, away back under the bed, among feathers, and straw, and boxes, and bundles, and other things, a patting little trip was heard running up the stairs, as light as a kitten's springy step, and who should come bounding into the room, curls a-flying, and eyes sparkling, and cheeks aglow, but Betsey Bobbett herself!

"Oh, good heavens!" she screamed, as one glance of her eye took in the whole scene.

Ira was standing leaning over, anxiously watching the 'Squire, who was under the bed, save that his legs were visible, or as much of them as were boots.

"What does this mean? I'd like to know," she said, in a shrill voice, holding up both trembling hands as though aghast with horror.

The 'Squire came a-hustling out, crab-style, from among the debris, with his hair all pushed the wrong way, and the tails of his coat turned up over his back. He made a great clang and clatter and noise, and disarranged the hidden things generally; but he got out at last and tried to look like a man who had been following a legitimate calling.

"Now, I say no gentleman will enter a lady's private room under such circumstances," said she, looking at the measuring-rule; "and especially in her absence! It's horrible! it's awful!" and the poor little thing clapped her hands up to her face and sobbed hysterically.

"He only wanted to measure the rooms afore he planned his'n," said the brother, in a cringing voice, looking at his sister, and feeling really sorry that matters had taken such an unfavorable turn. His plan had worked well, but hadn't stopped there; it had gone on working; and he couldn't see, as he stood there scratching his head, where the mischief would end.

"I regret exceedingly, Mrs. Bobbett, that I have subjected myself to your displeasure," said the discomfited 'Squire, twisting his fingers together, and looking very miserable and red-faced.

"Well, don't stand here, then! Go home, where you belong; and you needn't be a bit surprised, sir, if I have you up before the sessions at their next meeting," said the incensed widow, her eyes flashing fire. Both men were so scared that they stood like petrified men.

"Where in the world did this old thing come from, I'd like to know?" she shrieked out, seizing hold of the funny flannel night-cap that was perched up on top of the foot-post, and she gave it a vicious jerk, breaking the string that held in pucker the back part of it, and it slipped down over the post. Enraged, she pulled at it violently, tore it off and twisting it up in a little wad, threw it at the 'Squire's head. "Clear out, I say, both of you prowling dogs;" and she stamped her little foot very much in earnest, and followed them to the head of the stairs.

"Mrs. Bobbett, my dear woman," began the 'Squire, apologetically.

"Away with you, don't you go to Mrs. Bobbetting me!" said she, and she made the dearest little fist, which she extended in the direction of his face. He dodged his head, as if a wasp was coming that way, and the two men shambled off down-stairs. She lay prone on the floor, in her dire distress, and cried "rivers of tears," tears of sorrow and mortification, and anger, and spite, and grief, and disappointment. But time brought an end to her agony—she grew calm and her sorrow was of the subdued kind. While she lay on the floor sobbing, her brother Ira was lying on the floor too, down in the sitting-room, and he was giving expression to the exaltation that lifted him higher than he'd ever been before.

No danger now, he thought, of the poor orphan, Ira Josephus, being turned out of house and home, to make room for 'Squire Wilkins. "Sold! sold!" he ejaculated, as he lay on his broad back and kicked his heels up in the air, and gesticulated with his brawny fists. "Oh, that was rich! but my! didn't her eyes blaze, and her cheeks glow! she looked like a harnsom fury," and in his inexpressible exuberance of joy, he beat his breast and shook his head and acted like a crazy man.

We don't know how the brother and sister settled the affair and became good friends again, but we know it to be the case, and that they live together as snug as two chatty little mice, and she "smiles again," and swings her bonny curls bewitchingly, and is as happy as the days are long.

'Squire Wilkins married that red-headed widow, with the lame boy, who used to live on the farm he sold, after he came to the village. She and Widow Bobbett are firm friends, and they gossip and sip tea together in the summer evenings, and see a great deal of comfort. We don't know whether the 'Squire planned his room after those in Rose Cottage, or not, but we guess by the twinkle in his gray eyes, that he often laughs over the ridiculous figure he cut, crawling around under the bed of the Widow Betsey Bobbett.—Arthur's Magazine.

A Hunter's Parrot.

A correspondent of the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette sends that paper the following account of a common poll-parrot, which, it is claimed, has not only been trained to hunt, but which has learned to take a great delight in the chase. The owner and trainer of this hunting parrot is a boatman, who formerly plied between Little Rock and New Orleans, but who some years since gave up the business of boating, and has since led the life of a hunter, living in a snug cabin at the junction of Big Mammelle creek with the Arkansas river. This hunter-hermit, whose name is Nathan Lusk, brought with him from New Orleans, on making his last trip to that city, a fine young parrot, to which he soon became more attached than any other thing on earth. Seated upon his shoulders, the parrot attended him in all his walks. To train the bird and talk to it was almost his sole occupation. With the careful training of so loving a master added to its great natural talent for imitating all manner of cries of birds and animals, this bird had become a marvel of cunning, and a great wonder in its way. Taken into the hills bordering Big Mammelle creek, and the signal being given at intervals, it utters the cry of the turkey so perfectly as to deceive the oldest and most astute gobbler that ever strutted. On being answered by a gobbler, the parrot proceeds to lure him to death in the most fiendishly-coquettish manner imaginable. Seated on his master's shoulders, charily and coyly the parrot replies. Once he has fully attracted the attention of the vain and anxious gobbler, often allowing him to call in a fretful tone twice or thrice before deigning to answer, he then, in a few low and tender notes, lures the proud bird of the forest within range of the hunter's deadly rifle. Seeing the turkey struggling in the agonies of death fills the parrot with the most fiendish delight, to which he gives utterance in a succession of blood-chilling "ha, ha's," in all manner of diabolical tones and keys. Should the hunter miss his aim, however, the parrot ruffles his feathers, croaks and scolds, pulls his master's hair, and long refuses to be pacified. Duck-hunting in Forche and Meto bayous is, however, the parrot's chief delight. Seated in the bow of his master's boat, snugly ensconced in a patch of tall bulrushes, the parrot bursts forth into such a "quack, quacking," and general duck gabble that there seems to be in the vicinity a whole flock of these birds, all enjoying themselves immensely. Thus are many passing flocks of ducks lured within range of the gun of the hunter. Geese are in the same way called up by this wonderful parrot; also many other wild fowl, and even deer, as the bird imitates the plaintive bleating of a fawn or doe to a nicety. No money would buy the bird, and Nat Lusk, seen strolling through the woods gun in hand, and with his almost inseparable companion seated on his left shoulder, seems a second Robinson Crusoe. Although so perfect in his imitations of all manner of birds and animals, the parrot is not a great talker; indeed, his vocabulary is limited to a few words and one or two short phrases. He will sometimes sing out, "Nat, you lubber," and when Dan Lanagan (a brother boatman of Nat's living at the head of Bayou Forche, and almost his only visitor), in his dug-out, is seen paddling in toward the mouth of Big Mammelle creek, the parrot—whose name, we forgot to say, is Bobby—will shout, "Lanagan, ahoy! Lanagan, a-a-hoy!" The moment Bobby sees his master take down his gun he is in a great flutter. He cocks his head on one side, his great red eyes sparkling with delight, and in a low, inquiring tone says: "Turkey, turkey?" "No, Bobby," Nat will perhaps say, "not turkey to-day." Bobby cocks his head the other way, and softly says, "Quack, quack, quack?" "Yes, Bobby," says Nat, "quack, quack!" Bobby then burts into a loud "ha, ha, ha!" and cries, "Nat, you lubber, quack, quack!" Then he ha ha's till the whole cabin rings again.

How to Succeed.

The young man who thinks he can carry his boyish pranks into the serious business of life is not a man, and defrauds himself and his employer. "After work, play." That should satisfy the most sanguine. "Business before pleasure" is the motto of the prudent man whose guide is experience, and it is sufficient for the novitiate in active life.

But it is despicable to see the young man just starting in life so wedded to his former enjoyments as to place them above present duties. Yet this is often the case. The young man, who, to steer his own bark, launches forth on the sea of life, too often looks back on the pleasures he leaves behind, and, forgetful of present duties, steers back to past enjoyments.

There is no royal road to success any more than to knowledge. He who would succeed must work; and after all there is more real enjoyment in work, which has a worthy object, than in play or pleasure, intended to kill time. We remarked a few days ago to a business man whose present means are amply sufficient, but who worked really harder than any of his numerous employes, that he "ought to take it easy." Said he, "I am never so happy as when I have more than I can do. I may wear out in working, but I dread to rust out in idling." He was right. His work was a part of himself, a part of his life, and it was always faithfully done. To apprentices especially this earnestness and interest in their work is necessary if success is ever to be obtained.

PINS.—A school-boy, being requested to write a composition upon the subject of "Pins," produced the following: "Pins are very useful. They have saved the lives of a great many men, women and children—in fact, whole families." "How so," asked the puzzled teacher. And the boy replied, "Why, by not swallowing them." This matches the story of the other boy, who defined salt as "the stuff that makes potatoes taste bad when you don't put on any."

Colorado.

Colorado to-day is the center of the best as well as the largest emigration from the United States. And with reason, for both in the way of geographical position, internal resources and capacity for diversified industry, it stands at the head of all the Territories.

Geographically, Colorado is in the very van of the column of solid migration, being the westward front of that great tier of prosperous commonwealths which belt the Union—Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado. Emigration always moves in straight lines—the population of any one climate, soil or temperature following its parallel of latitude. This has been the uniform history of settlement in this country.

Colorado, however, will have the advantage of her older sisters, in that while their settlement was slow, fortuitous and disintegrated, hers is rapid, organized and systematic—while theirs was the work of individuals, hers is the work of great organizations, supported by experience, capital and combination. She begins at a point the others only reached after a generation.

Already her condition reveals her vantage-ground and demonstrates her position as the leader of the great column of the Middle States.

Colorado is [illegible] vored territory for any one thinking of going West to settle. Society is already established there; railway communication with the Atlantic and Pacific States is direct and good; the Territorial Government economically organized and honestly administered, exempting the settlers from onerous taxation. Witness the following items:

TAXES.—There were no territorial taxes laid in 1873.

PUBLIC DEBT.—There is no territorial debt, and a balance of $18,172.19 in the Treasury.

SCHOOLS.—The educational facilities of the Territory are first-class. The common-school system is well organized. There are good ladies' theological, conventual and boys' schools. There is a college at Colorado Springs.

THE PRESS.—There are 7 daily and 36 other papers published in Colorado.

BANKS.—There are 27 banks.

TELEGRAPH.—There are 1,018 miles.

SOUTHERN COLORADO.

Southern Colorado is the richest, most fertile, and mildest-tempered section of the great Territory of Colorado. It is a State within itself of magnificent proportions, incalculable natural resources, and a diversity of soil and climate, and a capacity for agricultural, pastoral, mining, manufacturing and commercial development which render it self-supporting.

Lying south of the Great Divide it is the most genial climate of all Colorado.

The Arkansas, the greatest river running from the Rocky Mountains, gives it the richest valley and strongest water-power in Colorado.

Embracing in its limits the South Park and San Juan country, it covers the richest mining districts of the Territory, its minerals being not merely gold and silver, but coal, iron, copper, marble and petroleum.

PUEBLO.

The capital city of this great region is Pueblo, located on the old trading route of the Santa Fe trail, just where that ancient highway crossed and the trunk-line of railway now crosses the Arkansas river.

Pueblo is an old, well-established point. It has been a missionary station, a trading post, a military fort, and is now a thriving Western town. Its location has been determined by the established routes of travel for over a century. It has therefore a solid foundation. It is now a railway center. Five roads, two built and three building, converge here. At this point will stand the GREAT CENTRAL CITY OF THE FAR WEST.

In every respect of centrality, climate, local situation, position with reference to North, South, East and West, Pueblo is destined to become the great commercial city of the Rocky Mountains. For one thousand miles along the base of the mountain range there is no point equal to it as a commercial center.

SOUTH PUEBLO.

The systematic development of Pueblo toward this, its own proper position, is now going on under the auspices of the Denver and Rio Grande railway, which has opened to colony settlement and improvement the land on the south bank of the Arkansas, heretofore unoccupied by reason of the want of capital in Colorado to construct the great irrigating canal necessary to supply water.

South Pueblo has been regularly laid out and platted, streets opened and graded, 10,000 trees planted along the avenues and public squares, a large park laid out and planted, bridges built, and all the foundations for a prosperous town broadly and intelligently laid. The streets are 100 feet wide, the central boulevard 150 feet. Acequias, or miniature canals, run along the front of each sidewalk.

The main work, however, is the great irrigating canal, 20 miles in length, which has already been built at a cost of $90,000.

This canal covers and waters a tract of 10,000 acres, and this tract constitutes the colony settlement of South Pueblo.

South Pueblo differs from the generality of towns just starting in having already established railway, telegraph and express and postal connections with the entire country.

The old town of Pueblo is located on the north bank of the river, and just opposite South Pueblo, being connected by four completed bridges and a horse-railway.

Colonists, in addition to the facilities of the new town, will have all the advantages in the way of markets, society, etc., afforded by the old town.

South Pueblo is not an experiment. One thousand people are now on the colony grounds.

The title is clear and simple, confirmed by a recent act of Congress, and now in the trustees of the company.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, ETC.—Large reservations have been and will be made for school, church, park and other public purposes.

EXPENSES OF EMIGRATION.—Persons holding certificates of membership, who apply at an early date, will secure passage and freights on household goods, from the East to South Pueblo, at greatly reduced rates.

These prices now are about as follows for first-class tickets:

From Philadelphia to South Pueblo	$66
From Cincinnati to South Pueblo	48
From Chicago to South Pueblo	45
From Omaha to South Pueblo	32
From St. Louis to South Pueblo	40
From Liverpool to South Pueblo	£25

These rates are a per centum reduction on the full fares, and will change from time to time as these fares change.

HEALTH.—All the world now visit Colorado to find health. Health is the poor man's capital.

SCENERY.—The scenery is the grandest and most beautiful on the continent.

SOIL.—The valley of the Arkansas raises 50 bushels of wheat to the acre.

SOCIAL CHANCES.—Every man's children start equal and with even chances in the West.

COLONY PLAN.—South Pueblo is being settled by the Denver and Rio Grande railway, in regular course of their plan for the systematic development of the country along the line of their route, under the same plan of colony which has proved so successful in the case of Colorado Springs, the great pleasure and health resort.

This plan secures to the individual settler all the advantages and reductions of colony emigration without subjecting him to the ordinary limitations of colonial enterprise, i. e., moving with a large body, or at a given time.

Full details of this plan, with pamphlet and map, will be furnished by either

ASTONISHING.—Few persons are aware of the time, talent and expense necessary to develop and perfect an invention. The new Wheeler & Wilson No. 6 Sewing Machine, advertised in our columns, has already cost that company over $300,000, and to bring it well before the public will require $200,000 more. It costs as much to design, construct and introduce a perfect sewing machine as to launch a first-class ocean steamship.

"THE COMMON SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, in Plain English, for all People, or Medicine Simplified," is the comprehensive and expressive title of a forthcoming work of from seven to nine hundred large pages, bound in cloth, from the pen of Dr. R. V. PIERCE, of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y. Price $1.50, postpaid, to any address within the United States. To all those who subscribe for the work now, and send the money with their subscription, the price will be but $1. The latter price scarcely covers the cost of publication, and at $1.50 it will be the cheapest book ever published, and the author can only hope for compensation for his labor in the immense sale which the work must have. The author's name is a household work throughout America, and his fame as a physician is not unknown in other lands. His reputation, coupled with the cheapness of the work, insures for it in our opinion a sale surpassing that of any book that has ever been published in the English language. The book will be illustrated with numerous original wood engravings, will contain a fine steel portrait and autograph of the author, and altogether will be the most comprehensive, plainly written and practical medical adviser for both young and old, male and female, single and married, ever published. We advise each of our readers to send the subscription price to the author immediately and thus encourage him in his labors and secure the work at the reduced price. The author will acknowledge the receipt of all subscriptions and send the book as soon as out.

WILHOFT'S TONIC is not a panacea—is not a cure for everything, but is a catholicon for malarious diseases, and day by day adds fresh laurels to its crown of glorious success. Engorged Livers and Spleens, along the shady banks of our lakes and rivers, are restored to their healthy and normal secretions. Health and vigor follow its use, and Chills have taken their departure from every household where Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic is kept and taken. Don't fail to try it. Facts Worth Remembering.

It is death to breathe steel-dust.

Goats' milk ruddifies the complexion.

Dark rooms are unfit for the dwellings of human beings.

Cayenne pepper is death to bed-bugs. Dust the bedsteads, crevices and niches well with the condiment.

To sweeten a tainted meat-barrel, after washing and scalding to remove grease, fill with fresh soil and let it remain a week or ten days.

To clean black silk, cashmere or alpaca, take a teaspoonful of borax to a quart of tepid water and apply with a black woolen rag or nail-brush.

A very good paste is made by taking three ounces soft water, one ounce gum arabic, and one-fourth ounce glycerine. Dissolve by heat, and bottle for use. The glycerine prevents it from spoiling.

Someone asks, what will remove and prevent dandruff from coming in a lady's head? A friend of mine says she takes a little borax added to a pint of rain-water, and washes her head occasionally with it. I often add a little borax or cooking soda to the rain-water when I wash my hair-brushes. It cleanses them nicely.—Ruth, in Country Gentleman.

The method employed to make hair curl by professional workers in hair is as follows: Wet the hair to be curled, wrap it smoothly around a cylindrical stick or tube of proper size, tie it in place, then put it in water and boil it two or three hours, remove it from the boiler, wrap it carefully in newspaper, and bake it in a moderate oven for an hour. Thus treated it will stay in curl permanently.

In kerosene lamps the light often is unsatisfactory, while all is apparently in good order. It should be borne in mind that, though the wick is but very gradually burned, it is constantly becoming less able to conduct the oil. The result is that the wick, though it is of sufficient length and looks as good as ever, has its conducting power greatly impaired, as its pores, so to speak, or the minute channels by which the oil reaches the place to be burned, become gradually obstructed. It is often economy to substitute a new wick for an old one, even if that be plenty long enough to serve for some time to come.

Life Among the Spanish Peasantry.

I took refuge in a farmhouse on the river's bank, out of range of the firing. I had often wished to to see how the people lived, and was glad that the opportunity presented itself of so doing. The only living-room was the kitchen, so black with smoke that it was difficult to see across it; there was no chimney and the only exit for the smoke was the window. Seated at the fire, made from logs of wood on the stone floor, was the hostess, a wrinkled old woman, with her hair tied up in a handkerchief, as is the invariable case with old women of all ages, here, attending to the preparation of supper. The only light was that given be the fire. The whole scene was worthy of Rembrandt. The meal was now served. The host was seated on a bench, and at the back of him was hung a board with a handle just like that which the advertising men carry in the streets of London. All of a sudden he took it down, and it formed our table as if by magic, for it had two legs which in the darkness I did not perceive, the handle resting on the bench serving for the others.

Two strapping wenches, daughters of the house, joined us, and the business of the evening commenced, after each had repeated a sort of litany, our host leading. The first dish was an omelet, with lumps of ham. No plates were put on the table, but wooden spoons supplied their places. Having the advantage of the first dip into the dish, I secured enough to avoid the necessity of repetition. Next followed a sort of milk soup and roasted apples. Cider was the only beverage. Frugal was the meal, and early was the time for retiring to rest.

It was past seven, and the inmates, not being able to read or write did not waste candle-light, but made ready for bed, after feeding the cows, who had watched us having supper through holes made in the wooden partition so as to fit their necks. The sleeping arrangements were as simple as those for eating. My bedroom was on the first floor, adjoining the loft, and from it opened different cupboards without windows, in which host, hostess and daughters took rest. Such is the domestic comfort of the Spanish peasantry.

Reading People by their Hair—No Bald Heads Need Apply.

[From Mr. Creer's "Secrets of Beauty."]

Coarse black hair and dark skin signify great power of character, with a tendency to sensuality. Fine black hair and dark skin indicate strength of character, along with purity and goodness. Stiff, straight black hair and beard indicates a coarse, strong, rigid straightford character. Fine dark brown hair signifies the combination of exquisite sensibility with great strength of character. Flat clinging, straight hair, a melancholy, but extremely constant character. Coarse red hair indicates powerful animal passions, together with a corresponding strength of character. Auburn hair, with florid countenance, denotes the higher order of sentiment, intensity of feeling and purity of character, with the higher capacity for enjoyment or suffering. Straight, even, smooth and glossy hair denotes strength, harmony and evenness of character, hearty affections, a clear head and superior talents. Fine, silky, supple hair is a mark of delicate and sensitive temperament and speaks in favor of the mind and character. White hair denotes a lymphatic and indolent constitution. And we may add that, besides all these qualities, there are chemical properties residing in the coloring matter which undoubtedly have some effect upon the disposition. Thus, red-haired people are notoriously passionate. Now, red hair is proved by analysis to contain a large amount of sulphur, while very black hair is colored with pure carbon. The presence of these matters in the blood points peculiarities of temperament and feeling which are almost universally associated with them. The very way in which the hair flows is strongly indicative of the ruling passions and inclinations, and perhaps a clever person could give a shrewd guess at the manner of a man or woman's disposition by only seeing the back of their hair.

A Goat Story.

George W. Peck, of the La Cross Sun, is responsible for the following good one:

There is a pretty good story being retailed up and down the Mississippi river at the expense of a well-known and popular steamboat clerk, whose name the Sun will not mention, though it is no breach of confidence to say that the clerk is not wholly unconnected with the Belle of La Crosse. A year or so ago the clerk, who had previously been a well regulated bachelor, married one of the fairest daughters of the Mississippi valley. Time, which makes all things even, at length completed the happiness of the couple by sending down from the angel pasture, a lovely little daughter. It was the sweetest piece of furniture that ever was put in a house, anyway, and throve remarkably well, until the severe illness of the mother made it necessary to use another kind of milk for the sustenance of the child, than that which nature had laid out in the programme. Then it was that the doctor prescribed a "goat," to furnish milk. The happy father was intrusted with a commission as purchasing agent. He was a Granger, and opposed to the odious middle man, so he hied himself to the goat market, to inspect the stock. Several inferior-looking goats were recommended to our clerk, by the unscrupulous dealers in animated lacteal nourishment, but they couldn't fool the clerk. He knew an able goat when he saw one, and they couldn't palm off on him anything but a good looking goat, one that would reflect credit on the neighborhood. So he picked out the largest and finest specimen in the market, paid him ten dollars, and with a rope on the horns of the milk producer, he started home. Those who saw the clerk leading that goat through the busy streets of St. Louis will never forget the scene. Arriving home, the goat was tied in the back yard, and proceeded to eat a portion of an iron picket fence, while the servant girl was instructed to go out and milk the gort. In about seven minutes—some say it was not more than two minutes, but that is neither here nor there—the girl returned, her hair disheveled, and with her hand on her heart. The girl spoke thus:

"Arrah and is it yerself Mister Pohatcher that wud be thrifling wid the tinder falings of a poor orphan gurrul? the murdherin goat is a Billy goat, and he nare kicked the life out of me wid his head, and all the time he was blatting 'm-m-m-a' and he shmells like a nager funeral. Go off wid yer goat Misther Pohatcher."

And now, all along the raging Mississippi people go into the office of the good steamer Belle of La Crosse, and ask the clerk if he wants to buy a go it.

Courtesy.

Nowhere is well-bred courtesy, or the lack of it, more observable than in traveling. On the steamboat and in the cars, the quiet observer readily detects those who have been educated under refined influences, or those, who, without special cultivation, are possessed of native politeness. It is not education alone, nor high social position, nor costly trappings, that make one a pleasant traveling companion. There must exist a kindness of feeling toward strangers, a general recognition of equal rights in the comforts and conveniences provided for the public, and a quickened discernment for the needs of others. The gentleman who spreads out his luggage on a couple of seats in the cars, and persistently reads his newspaper, determinately unconscious that others who have paid as much as he has are looking in vain for a seat, is as truly ill-bred as the country girl who noiselessly eats her pint of peanuts, scattering the shells on seats and floor, regardless of the annoyance she gives her neighbors. In this democratic country we travel in public conveyances too much as though they were our own private carriages. How often the eleventh and twelfth passengers in a city omnibus, who know that they have full claim to a seat, are discomforted by the outspread garments, the immovable attitudes and black faces of those who happen to have entered the stage before them. Common civility demands that a movement be made to give room until the complement is filled out; afterward, courtesy and generosity will often prompt to attentions which justice may not require. It is surprising how much the comfort and pleasure of any journey, whether long or short is enhanced by those little nameless courtesies which are offered instinctively and unofficially to strangers, by refined, well-bred travelers, and persons in whom native tact and delicacy almost make up for the lack of the educating and refining influences of good society.

Unthinkable Mechanics.

By means of a tiny diamond point at the end of a machine, composed of exquisitely graduated systems of lessening wheels, a Mr. William Web, of London, is able to write upon glass the whole of the Lord's prayer within the space of a two-hundred-and-ninety-fourth of an inch in length and one four-hundred-and-fortieth part of an inch in breadth—the measurement of the dot over an "i" in print! He could write the whole 3,566,480 letters of the Old and New Testament eight times over in the space of one square inch of glass; and, when this wonderful microscopic writing is enlarged by photography, every letter and point are perfect and can be read. Amazing as this is, however, a wealthy banker at London, named Peters, invented a machine in 1855 that could write three times as finely as Mr. Webb's.

Temperance Cake.—Two pounds of flour, three-quarters of a pound of butter, one pound of granulated sugar, one grated nutmeg, and six well-beaten eggs. After the flour and butter have been thoroughly rubbed together, lay the sugar in and pour upon it a teaspoonful of soda, dissolved, then add the eggs. Mix well together until it can be molded in the hands. Roll thin, cut into cakes and bake in a quick oven.

The Cost of War to France.

A clever statistician in Paris has summed up the pecuniary results to France of the late war with Germany as follows: War indemnity, 5,000,000,000 francs; interest on the same for two years, 300,000,000 francs; the keep of the German troops, 273,637,000 francs; requisition, 327,581,000 francs; value of objects taken without requisitions, 204,172,000 francs; war contributions levied on Paris, 200,000,000 francs, and so on till the account forms a total of 6,673,811,000 francs (£266,952,440). But this enormous sum is exclusive of pensions to the army, the damage done to material, and the expense of reorganization, which swell the total to 13,000,000,000 francs (£520,000,000). The average value of a day's work in France is one franc and a quarter; and thus it would take one million of men thirty years to work it out.

One Man With Two Skulls.—A stranger in Paris visited a shop, where a variety of "relics" were kept on exhibition, and among them a number of skulls purporting to be those of various historical notabilities. The stranger asked, "Whose skull is in that large box on the shelf?" "Napeleon Bonaparte's," said the shop-keeper. The stranger paid the required fee; examined the skull; commented upon its extraordinary size, and then asked, "Whose skull is in that little box?" "That also is Napoleon's," said the showman. "Pshaw!" said the visitor, "Do you mean to tell me that one man had two skulls?" "Why, certainly," said the Frenchman; "this large skull is Napoleon's at the time of his death; and this little one is his skull when he was only fifteen years of age." "Sure enough," said the stranger; "I really did not think of that;" and he paid the fee, and examined the little skull too.—Biblical Record.

A Novel Railway Suit of $500,000.—In 1866 a sleepy traveler on the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad was carried by his point of debarkation, owing to the station not being called. He was a member of the Legislature, and introduced a bill where it is provided that conductors of passenger trains shall call out at each station, in a loud voice, its name and length of time the train is to stop. For each failure to do so the road must pay a penalty of $100. His declarations are printed, and consist of 2,500 counts, the aggregate of penalty amounting to $250,000. This is the amount claimed for failure to call the names of the stations, and $250,000 more is claimed for the failure to call the stopping time, making in all half a million dollars. The law is very distinct, and it is not easy to see how the road can escape the penalty. The law provides that half the penalty shall go to the complainant.

If you want to make a bustle in the world take five newspapers and a piece of tape.

The Secret of Captivation.—Features of Grecian mold, a well-turned neck, and beautifully rounded arms, are no doubt very nice things to have, and ladies who possess these charms have reason to be thankful to Mother Nature; yet, after all, the most captivating of all womanly charms is a pure, fresh and brilliant complexion. This superlative fascination any lady may secure by using Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

Ye Old Mexican Mustang Liniment has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, sprains, scalds, burns, salt rheum, sore nipples, swelling, lameness, chapped hands, poisonous bites, stings, bruises, &c., &c., on men, women and children, and sprains, strains, galls, stiff joints, inflammation, &c., in beasts, than all other liniments put together. It will do what is promised of it [illegible]

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that Plantation Bitters is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

Reanimating the Hair.—When the hair ceases to draw from the scalp the natural lubricant which is its sustenance, its vitality is, as it were, suspended, and, if not promptly attended to, baldness will be the certain result. The one sure method of avoiding such an unpleasant catastrophe is to use Lyon's Kathairon, which, when well rubbed into the scalp, will speedily reanimate the hair and prevent it from falling out.

HOUSEHOLD PANACEA AND FAMILY LINIMENT. HOUSEHOLD PANACEA AND FAMILY LINIMENT.	Why will You Suffer? To all persons suffering from Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cramps in the limbs or stomach, Bilious Colic, Pain in the back, bowels or side, we would say The Household Panacea and Family Liniment is of all others the remedy you want for internal and external use. It has cured the above complaints in thousands of cases. There is no mistake about it. Try it. Sold by all Druggists.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR
To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. AYER & CO. Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

BU-Q AND DANDELION is the best BLOOD PURIFIER of the age, because it stimulates to healthy action the organs which nature has appointed to carry out of the system the impurities of the blood; Buchu touches the Kidneys—Dandelion wakes up the Liver and stimulates the Bowels to regular action. These organs acting jointly, clear the system and carry away the germs of disease.—Get it. Kress Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati, O.

PHYSICIANS are the best JUDGES of a GOOD MEDICINE AFTER ALL. They use HAMILTON'S BUCHU & DANDELION. In all diseases of the Urinary Organs and Liver. It cures Gravel, Diabetes, Brick Dust Deposit, Rheumatism, Jaundice, &c. Try it! Kress Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati, O.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

What will it do? is the first inquiry the sick make concerning a medicine. Suppose TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT is the subject of the interrogatory, what then? Simply this reply: It will relieve and cure headache, nausea, flatulence, nervousness, costiveness, debility, biliousness and indigestion. Sold by druggists everywhere.

RADWAY'S
Ready Relief,
The Cheapest and Best Medicine for Family Use in the World!
One 50-Cent Bottle

WILL CURE MORE COMPLAINTS AND PREVENT THE SYSTEM AGAINST SUDDEN ATTACKS OF EPIDEMICS AND CONTAGIOUS DISEASES THAN ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS EXPENDED FOR OTHER MEDICINES OR MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

THE MOMENT RADWAY'S READY RELIEF IS APPLIED EXTERNALLY—OR TAKEN INTERNALLY ACCORDING TO DIRECTIONS—PAIN, FROM WHATEVER CAUSE, CEASES TO EXIST.

IMPORTANT.—Miners, Farmers, and others residing in sparsely-settled districts, where it is difficult to secure the services of a physician, RADWAY'S READY RELIEF is invaluable. It can be used with positive assurance of doing good in all cases where pain or discomfort is experienced; or if seized with Influenza, Diphtheria, Sore Throat, Bad Coughs, Hoarseness, Bilious Colic, Inflammation of the Bowels, Stomach, Lungs, Liver, Kidneys; or with Croup, Quinsy, Fever and Ague; or with Neuralgia, Headache, Tic Doloreux, Toothache, Earache, or with Lumbago, Pain in the Back, or Rheumatism; or with Diarrhea, Cholera Morbus, or Dysentery; or with Burns, Scalds, or Bruises; or with Strains, Cramps, or Spasms. The application of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF will cure you of the worst of these complaints in a few hours.

Twenty drops in half a tumbler of water will in a few moments cure CRAMPS, SPASMS, SOUR STOMACH, HEARTBURN, SICK HEADACHE, DIARRHEA, DYSENTERY, COLIC, WIND IN THE BOWELS, and all INTERNAL PAINS.

Travelers should always carry a bottle of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF with them. A few drops in water will prevent sickness or pains from change of water. It is better than French Brandy or Bitters as a stimulant.

Sold by Druggists. Price 50 Cents.

DR. RADWAY'S
Regulating Pills,

Perfectly tasteless, elegantly coated with sweet gum, purge, regulate, purify, cleanse and strengthen. RADWAY'S PILLS, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys, Bladder, Nervous Diseases, Headache, Constipation, Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Bilious Fever, Inflammation of the Bowels, Piles, and all Derangements of the Internal Viscera. Warranted to effect a positive cure. Purely Vegetable, containing no mercury, minerals, or deleterious drugs.

☞ Observe the following symptoms resulting from Disorders of the Digestive Organs:

Constipation, Inward Piles, Fullness of the Blood in the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust of Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and Difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a Lying Posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or Webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull Pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Chest, Limbs, and sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh.

A few doses of RADWAY'S PILLS will free the system from all the above-named disorders.

F. R. MYERS,

General Passenger and Ticket Agent

[From our Own Correspondent.]

NEW YORK, June 18, 1874.

Dear Courier:—Were you ever in a New York court? and what are your Western ideas of Eastern justice? It has been my privilege to pass many leisure hours in the courts of Oyer and Terminer and in the general sessions anxiously watching the proceedings in such important criminal trials as those of Stokes for the murder of Fisk, the car-hook murderer Foster for the heartless and unprovoked murder of Putnam and other less interesting trials. But one yesterday attracted my attention and held me within the court room for hours. It was a civil suit which in your country might have been construed into a criminal action yclept bigamy. The facts briefly stated are these, which I give for the benefit of the Auburn bar. A shoemaker married a woman here, lived with her six months, left her alone, and went to California, again married, lived with his second wife about the same period when he deserted her too, returning to N. Y. and resuming his marital relations with his first love. No. 2 came on from Cal, claimed the unfortunate shoemaker as her own No. 1 interposed her objections, and the matter went into the courts, the Judge deciding that the Cal. wife was the legal one as the "Shoemaker was bound to stick to his last."

In my last I promised your lady readers some hints on fashion; have gathered a few ideas which must answer until further and better facilities are afforded me for more extended research into the misterious labyrinth of the difficult subject. For afternoon wear, out door the tunique tablier with its long ends in front, and handsome plaited short basque at the back, will bear the palm from all tight fitting harness. It is admirably contrived not only to improve the figure, but display the trimmings on the skirt. Some silk skirts are made without even a pouff at the back and look very stylish. A dagger of torquoise is the latest substitute for steel arrows, jet and steel blue buckles and the like. The new shade called Russian gray is most in vogue this season. It is a dark blue-gray and more distinct than any other shades seen.—Lace jackets will be very largely worn this summer; they are rather closer fitting than the sacques and give a more graceful outline to the figure. Embroidered linens are altogether popular for summer suits. It is amazing to notice the endless variety of trimming put upon these dresses, and the variety of ways this is put on. A style of dress which is coming into vogue is made with long deep pleats on the hips, and increasing in length towards the back. The fronts will not be pleated, but will be kept perfectly plain. Handkerchiefs with the ecru center and the white border, or the white center with the ecru border either plain, embroidered, or trimmed with lace; and handkerdhiefs with a border in printed colors are very much used. Flounces are still worn in great variety of arrangement; for summer materials their vaporous character renders them very suitable. Lace, especially that in which the pattern is outlined with jet beads, will be most elegantly worn. Various styles of broad brimmed hats are for country wear, the handsomest being a leghorn, trimmed with black velvet and full blown roses For the Seaside are Sailor hats with brims turned up as if blown by a stiff breeze. These are to be worn in true Sailor fashion, placed back upon the head; they can hardly be suspected of affording any protection to the face—

A peculiarity of N. Y. business houses both wise and commendable is the large proportion of female clerks and assistants; in every department of business this pleasing fact is noticed, and why should not this be so, especially in Dry goods houses whose principal patrons are ladies, and who would feel at ease in the purchase of their delicate underwear from clerks of their own sex rather than be compelled to deal with men who by nature and physical construction would be better suited to the more manly labor of mauling rails or cutting cord wood than measuring tape and selling to their customers ready made chemise, drawers and hose that fasten above the knee. Male clerks are in many of the large houses, being rapidly supplanted by female clerks and it is a noticeable fact, that where these changes are already made an increasing patronage follows. There are some departments in which females are useless, for instance, they would make poor Rail Road Conductors, their trains would always be behind. I have seen some rough uncouth specimens of male cleeks, better calculated for wet nurses than the position they so shabbily occupied, without any idea of courtesy, accomodation or any of the finer qualities of true gentlemen.

I had the pleasure of a seat beside you at Barnum's Aippodrome, Mr. Editor some three or four weeks since, I again attended this grand place of amusement on Monday evening last and was tan unwilling witness of an acciden that in all probability will result fatally to he beautiful Miss Lewis. A half dozen lines from the Sun tells the story in these words: "At the closet of the chariot race in the Hippodrome last evening, as Miss Lewis, who had won the race, was riding off the track, her competitor's horses started on a run and jumped into Miss Lewis' chariot, the pole striking her and pinning her to the front and breaking her ribs"—The excitement was great—a thrill of horror running thro' that immense audience, who could not be quieted until the unfortunate girl was brought out to bow her thanks in response to the unearthly dim and clamor of the multitude; more dead than alive she appeared, supported on either side by attendants—her still beautiful face pale as in death. She was suffering the torture of jagged broken ribs, whose sharp points seemed piercing her vitals. There is a cruel custom in the public places of amusement here, and making it imperatively necessary for all actors to come out and show themselves to their audence, thus releiving the management of censure by a quasi assurance to the public that the injured is not much hurt.

Since I have been seated at my desk inditing this hurried scrawl to you, 3 regiments, numbering 2000 men with bands discoursing most ravishing music have passed our residence; their truly martial bearing elegant uniforms, reaching in section from curb to curb, and all surrounding and appointments of the parade was a grand sight to western eyes unused to scenes so brilliant as these. No city of America can turn out so many well disciplined citizen troups. On Independence day next 15 000 of the National Guard will constitute the column that will move down Broadway, to honor "the day we celebrate." On Tuesday next the famous 7th, the crack regiment of N. Y. is to have a gala day, the chief object being the unveiling of a statue in Central Park erected by them.—Other of the National Guard will assist, and if the weather be fine a high old time may be expected.

The belligerent propensities of Eastern people are more marked and prominent than among the Hoosiers, or in the west generally, where society pretends to any sort of regulation. To call a man a liar here is to imperil your earthly existence and invite your own destruction; for the insult is promptly and properly rebuked vi et armis, not so in Indiana, misunderstandings are usually settled in windy wordy arguments and much jaw. A highly ludicrous incident, attended however with fatal results, came under my own personal observation one day last week, which I must not fail to relate in this connection. The altercation occurring between a pair of mokes of splendid physique and abundantly capable of making a very interesting and dignified sett too had they followed the rules of the London Prize Ring more strictly; but it was apparent from the first that each was afraid of the other and consequently an honest manly fight was out of the question. However the lie passed and so were blows. Pompey hit Snow Ball square under the starboard ear spinning him around when by way of reciprocity S. B. let go his mauler taking Pomp a disastrous blow in his eye closing it ad interim; things commenced getting interesting when a blow from S. B. overturned his adversary laying him dead at his feet. The niggers neck being broken by the blow Some of the bystanders gathered up the corpse and carried him to Bellevue

Would you believe it Mr Editor were I to tell you that 33 bodies now lie in the city Morgue awaiting identification and disposition, all having died unnatural and most of them violent deaths.

My pious regards to Jno. L. Davis Esq, my last recollection of him is, as he lay on his bed one Sunday eve last May at the 5th Avenue Hotel sweetly snoring and perchance dreaming of stocks and bonds, his feet up on the dashboard of the bed, his head almost smothered in down. I was disinclined to disturb his slumber and left him without saying adieu. Present him my regards and tell him I love him still.

E. L. C.

How To Make Good Butter.

To the Editor of The Detroit Tribune:

As I am a constant reader of your valuable paper and ever much interested in the domestic department, and having been frequently ask to do so, I thought I would give a little of my experience in butter-making to beginners. There has been so much said on the subject that I do not know as I can offer any thing new, and if I can help any one to a better understanding of the matter I shall feel well repaid. I have made a grate many thousand pounds of butter in the past twenty years, and never had occasion to take up the lament of the correspondent from Lapeer. The only trouble is we cannot make half enough for those that apply, as our old customers that we supplied for years will not give up a bit. They say they had rather pay us any price than to be troubled about it; consequently it is better for them and a grate deal more profitable to us. Western butter-makers themselves are greatly to blame for the difference in the price of Orange county, Western Reserve, and a faint idea of how the flavor is distroyed by the oder that penetrate the milk room. It is not here as the dairy countries, where they have the large airy milk room with a stove for cold days in spring or fall, but most of us have to use the pantry when it is too cold to use the celler, and of course that always opens out of the kitchen, and too little care is taken to keep the door closed while cooking. Any kind of oror arrising from cooking meat or vegetables will penetrate milk, cream or butter.—Smoked meats, fish or streng vegetables, either cooked or raw, should never be kept in the milk room, neither should cheese. Of course, everything that comes in contact with milk should be perfectly sweet, or tasteless. Rusty pans or old earthen should never be used. The skimmer, cream-can or jar should never be used a second time without scalding, particularly in the summer. I do not have the cream so warm as many do for the sake of its coming quicker, for pooly churned butter can never be worked into a good article.

In warm weather milk should be skimmed as [illegible] a carfull hand. Seperate the cream carfully from the edge of pan with a knife kept for the purpose, and only disturb the cream as fast as taken up. There is a good deal of cream lost where the milk is put in motion before it is all off

Skim early in the morning in warm weather, and if need be, at night also, because if kept to "whey off," the whey will eat up the butter, decreace the quantity and delay is its coming.

After skimming, stir up the cream and sprinkle over it a little Ashton salt, which we always use for butter.

I always rinse in pure cold water, to prevent the soured buttermilk from doing injury. Work in the salt thoroughly, and next day work into rolls or pack. Do not work enough to break the grain. When packing, a good way is to sprinkle a little salt between each layer of three inches thickness; then if packed smooth and hard it will cut out nicely for the table and save the trouble of forming into rolls.

The inferior quality of feed in some parts of the west has a grate deal to do with the quality of butter also, as well fed is not as good as red clover and timothy. Every one knows that cows should have a plenty of good clear water; also free access to salt, which should be kept in a box or trough in the yard where they run. And last, but not least, they should have steady, clean milkers, at regular hours, careful treatment. No one should strike or frigten them.

Calhoun Conty. Aunt Peggy

Attention to the rules here given would cause poor butter to be rare commodity in the market. This article seems to cover the whole ground in a masterly manner. There are some persons, however, who, all the needed instruction and appliances can never get the knack of making good butter. We would be glad to hear from other good butter makers.

A Troublesome Verb.

I begin to understand your language better,' said my French friend, Mr. Aymont to me 'but your verbs trouble me still, you mix me them up so with your prepositions.

I am sorry you find them so troublesome," was all I could say.

I saw our friend, Mrs. James, just now," he continued: "she says she intends to break down housekeeping.

Am I right there?'

Break up house-keeping, she must have said.'

O, yes, I remember break up housekeeping."

Why does she do that?" I asked.

Because her health is so broken into."

Broken down, you should say.'

Broken down; oh! yes. And indeed, since the small-pox has broken up our city—'

Broken out—'

She thinks she will leave it for a few weeks.'

Will she leave her house alone?'

No; she is afraid it will be broken—broken—how do I say that?'

Broken into?'

Certainly; that is what I meant to say,'

Is her son to be married soon?"

No; the engagement is broken — —broken —"

Broken off.'

Yes broken off.'

Ah I had not heard that.'

She is very sorry about it. Her son only broke the news down to her last weak. Am I right? I am so anxous to speak English well.'

He merely broke the news; no preposition this time.'

It is hard to understand. That young man, her son, is a fine fellow a breaker, I think.'

A broker, and a very fine fellow. Good day.'

So much for the verb" to break.

KLEPTOMANIACS.—Noah Webster knew nothing about kelptomaniacs. In old times a thief was a thief. Our grandfather didnt bother their brains with new-fangled terms for well dressed theives. In their simplicity they exercised some charity toward a poor, miserable, ignorant man or woman who was tempted to steal bread for starving children, but to their grandsons was left the distinguished honor of coining a word to apply to silk and satin thieves.

To judge impartially requires the exercise of more than human wisdom. God like charity may envelope the base born thief, who, from the hour of his birth, has breathed an atmosphere of want, distrust and shame. But kleptomaniacs are not reared in hovels. They do not go hungry to bed. They do not dwell with outcasts. They do not go through life without a kind word or an encourging look. They are not educated in the school of vice. They are not taught to look upon mankind as their natural enemies.

God alone, pities the shivering, famishing thief. Men hate the poor outcast who steals bread for his starving children; but they excuse the well clad, well fed "kleptomaniac. Clothed in purple and fine linen one may appropriate the property of another with impunity; but rage will not hide the deformity of vice.

Stealing is not only crime that is rendered less hideous by one's surroundings. The rich man, who staggers to his brown-stone front, is simply "intoxicated.' The laborer who seek his hovel with unsteady foot-steps is drunk.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1874.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE White Stockings Base-Ball Club, of Chicago, was defeated by the Mutuals, of New York, at the latter city, on the 18th. Score, 38 to 1.

AT Pittsburgh, Pa., June 19, Ernest Ortwein was found guilty of the murder of the Hamnett family. The defense admitted the killing, but endeavored to show emotional insanity....There was considerable excitement created in the Court-House in New York the other day, by the appearance of William M. Tweed, who had been subpœnaed as a witness. The ex-chief of the defunct ring was dressed, as in old times, in a dark suit and white necktie. He is described as much thinner than of yore, and his face bears evident traces of mental anxiety.

A NEW YORK telegram of the 23d June says: "The announcement on the Stock Exchange of the signing of the Currency bill by the President, caused great buoyancy in the market. The passage of the Tariff bill without the clause taxing sales of stocks and gold, coupled with the above, made the recent downward tendency of the market give place to a most sanguine upward movement. There was an advance of from 1 to 5¼ per cent. in the speculative share list, and of ⅛ per cent. in gold."

THE Liquor-License bill has passed both branches of the Massachusetts Legislature....The Beecher-Tilton-Woodhull scandal has been again reopened in New York. Tilton publishes in his paper, the Golden Age, a seven-column article defending himself against the charges of Rev. Leonard Bacon and others that he had been a cowardly slanderer of the Plymouth pastor. Having suffered in silence for four years from these misrepresentations, Tilton says that neither patience nor duty will permit him longer to conceal the actual facts from the public. He then goes on to say that he never slandered Henry Ward Beecher, but on the contrary has sacrificed his own reputation to suppress the truth about him, and that he never has refused to appear before the church and answer all questions regarding the scandal that might be put to him. Tilton gives his reasons for severing his connection with the church, as follows: "After I had been for fifteen years a member of Plymouth Church, and had become meanwhile an intimate friend of the pastor, the knowledge came to me in 1870 that he had committed against me an offense which I forbear to name or characterize. Prompted by my self-respect, I immediately and forever ceased my attendance on his ministry." He publishes the following as an extract from a document signed by Mr. Beecher:

> BROOKLYN, Jan. 1, 1871.—I ask Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and humble myself before him as I do before my God. He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been. I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other breasts that would ache. I will not plead for myself. I even wish that I were dead.

The West.

THE Illinois Supreme Court has declared the Railway Aid law of 1869, familiarly known as the "grab law," to be unconstitutional....The Illinois Supreme Court has sustained the Board of Equalization in the assessment of the capital stock of the Rockford, Rock Island and St. Louis railroad....The Missouri State Temperance Convention adjourned at St. Louis on the 18th. Action was had looking toward more effectual work in the direction of prohibition.

A MOB of masked men broke into the Greene county (Ill.) jail early on the morning of the 21st of June, and took possession of a young murderer named Evans, who was afterward found hanging in the outskirts of the town. Evans was a desperate ruffian. He has confessed to crimes that should hang better men than he....A number of fatal cases of trichina spiralis are reported from Toledo, Ohio. They were produced by eating half-cooked sausage....The Chicago Tribune of the 22d of June publishes extended reports of the crops along the lines of the Burlington and Quincy, Alton and St. Louis, Illinois Centeral and Michigan Central railroads, which indicate a large increase in the corn crop over last year. The wheat crop promises well and will probably sustain the average yield. Oats fall slightly below the expected crop. Other grains are doing well, and an early harvest is predicted.

THE Chicago papers announce the death of Samuel Myers, the well-known theatrical manager, for many years connected with McVicker's theater.

THE corner-stone of the new Government building in Chicago was laid on the 24th of June under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity. The ceremonies were very imposing, and were witnessed by a vast concourse. The procession was one of the largest and finest ever seen in the West, and occupied two hours in passing a given point.

The South.

A LARGE portion of the business part of Richmond, Ky., was recently destroyed by fire.

Washington.

THE President has sent to the Senate the new reciprocity treaty with Canada.

APPOINTMENTS by the President: Horace N. Conger, of New Jersey, Consul at Prague; B. F. Potts, of Ohio, Governor of Montana Territory; S. H. Winsor, Register of the Land Office at Cheyenne....The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Gen. McCook as Governor of Colorado....The long-promised speech of Ben Butler in the House on the evening of the 19th of June attracted more than usual attention, the floor and galleries being crowded with members and visitors. He entered into a labored defense of the moiety system, and of Sanborn & Co., and made a terrible onslaught on Phelps, Dodge & Co., whom he accused of perpetrating the most villainous frauds on the Government. The debate was continued till a late hour. His assaults on the Ways and Means Committee had put the members of that organization on their mettle, and others who felt themselves aggrieved by his remarks launched out in bitter invective against him and his theories. Mr. Foster, of Ohio, first gave him a dressing down which is said to have been one of the worst lashings ever administered to a member of Congress. Messrs. Dawes, Hoar and Tremaine followed up the attack, and before the debate closed Butler was the worst used up man that ever held a seat in the House of Representatives.

BLUFORD WILSON, of Illinois, succeeds Banfield as Solicitor of the Treasury.

THE Comptroller of the Currency gives notice that he is prepared to receive applications for the organization of national banks in all the Western and Southern States. Applications may be made by letter, giving the names of not less than —— shareholders of the proposed organization, which should be accompanied with the indorsement of the Senator or Representative of the district where the bank is to be located, giving satisfactory information in reference to the character and means of applicants. Applications will be considered immediately upon their receipt, and, if approved, the necessary forms for the organization of new banks will be at once transmitted. Under the new apportionment all the Western and Southern States and Territories, with the exception of Colorado, Montana and Wyoming, will be entitled to additional circulation. The State of Indiana will be entitled to about $280,000, Ohio to about $600,000, Minnesota $660,000, and Nebraska $300,000. The other Western and Southern States will be entitled to much larger amounts....Lyman K. Bass, of Buffalo, has been appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, vice Sawyer....The bill passed by Congress for the distribution of the Geneva award provides for the auditing of all undisputed claims of the owners of vessels destroyed by the Confederate cruisers by a commission to sit in Washington, and for the payment of the losses of insurance companies over and above the premiums received. No provision is made for the allowance of war premiums, and this part of the battle will have to be fought over again. The balance remaining after the payment of these claims will be subject to the order of Congress.

THE work of the late session of Congress in the matter of public appropriations, as compared with that of last year, sums up as follows:

	Last year.	This year.
Navy	$22,250,000	$16,750,000
Army	31,730,000	27,780,000
Legislative	23,750,000	20,500,000
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Indians	4,500,000	5,000,000
Military Academy	344,000	339,000
Deficiency	11,126,000	4,000,000

....William A. Dennison, of Ohio; Henry T. Blow, of Missouri, and ex-Senator A. G. Cattell, of New Jersey, were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, on the last day of the session, as a Commission to govern the District of Columbia until a new form of government is adopted. The name of Alexander R. Shepherd was mentioned by the President as one of the Commission, but he was rejected by the decisive vote of 36 against 6....Nothing whatever is said in the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill passed by Congress about "civil service reform," and no appropriation was made for carrying it out. Thus, as Ben Butler remarked, "Civil service reform dies instead of being killed."....The new Postal law makes the postage on daily and weekly newspapers three cents per pound, prepaid. Newspapers in county where published go free. Public documents may be sent through the mails at ten cents a volume, prepaid. The postage of the Congressional Record is fixed at one cent. The law does not take effect until Juanary next, by which time a new one may possibly have been passed and the present one repealed....The President having approved of the bill for the distribution of the Geneva award, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Judges of the Court of Commissions of Alabama Claims; Hezekiah Wells, Michigan; Martin Ryerson, New Jersey; Kenneth Raynor, Mississippi; Wm. A. Porter, Pennsylvania; and Caleb Baldwin, Iowa.

LYMAN K. BASS refuses to accept the office of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury on account of the inadequacy of the salary....Postmaster-General Creswell tendered his resignation on the 24th of June. The President immediately accepted it, and named Hon. Eugene Hale, of Maine, as his successor....The grand jury of the United States Circuit Court for the District of Columbia has found an indictment against A. C. Full Text of the Currency Bill as Passed by Congress.

The following is the Compromise Currency bill as it passed Congress. It is now a law, having received the signature of the President:

SECTION 1. The act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, shall be hereafter known as the National Bank act.

SEC. 2. That Sec. 31 of the National Bank act be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever by reason of the amount of their respective circulations; but the moneys required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits, in all respects as provided for in the said section.

SEC. 3. That every association organized or to be organized under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts amendatory thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to 5 per centum of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of such circulation, which sum shall be counted as a part of its lawful reserve, as provided in section 2 of this act, and when the circulating notes of any such associations, assorted or unassorted, shall be presented for redemption in sums of $1,000 or any multiple thereof to the Treasurer of the United States, the same shall be redeemed in United States notes. All notes so redeemed shall be charged by the Treasurer of the United States to the respective associations issuing the same, and he shall notify them severally on the first day of each month or oftener, at his discretion, of the amount of such redemptions, and whenever such redemptions of any associations shall amount to the sum of $500 such associations so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed; and all notes of national banks worn, defaced, mutilated, or otherwise unfit for circulation shall, when received by any Assistant Treasurer, or at any designated depository of the United States, be forwarded to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption, as provided herein; and when such redemptions have been so reimbursed the circulating notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the respective associations by which they were issued; but if any such notes are worn, mutilated, defaced, or rendered otherwise unfit for use, they shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency and destroyed and replaced as now provided by law. Provided that each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the charges for transportation and the costs for assorting such notes, and the association hereafter organized shall also generally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving such plates as shall be ordered by each association respectively, and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer; and, provided further, that so much of Sec. 32 of said National Bank act recognizing or permitting the redemption of its circulating notes elsewhere than at its own counter, except as provided for in this section, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That any Association organized under this act, or any of the acts to which this is an amendment, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, in whole or in part, may, upon the deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States, in sums of not less than $9,000, take up the bonds which said Association has on deposit with the Treasurer for the security of such circulating notes, which bonds shall be assigned to the banks in the manner specified in the nineteenth section of the National Bank act, and the outstanding notes of said Association to an amount equal to the legal-tender notes deposited, shall be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States and destroyed, as now provided that the amount of the bonds of deposit for circulation shall not be reduced below $50,000.

SEC. 5. That the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, cause the charter numbers of the Association to be printed upon all National Bank notes which may be hereafter issued by him.

SEC. 6. That the amount of the United States notes outstanding, and to be issued as a part of the circulating medium, shall not exceed the sum of $382,000,000, which said sum shall appear in each monthly statement of the public debt, and no part thereof shall be held or used as a reserve.

SEC. 7. That so much of the act entitled, "an act to provide for the redemption of the 3-per-centum temporary loan certificates, and for an increase of national bank notes," as provides that no circulation shall be withdrawn under the provisions of Sec. 6 of said act until after the $54,000,000 granted in Sec. 1 of said act shall have been taken up, is hereby repealed; and it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to proceed forthwith, and he is hereby authorized and required, from time to time, as application shall be only made therefor, and until the full amount of the $54,000,000 shall be withdrawn, to make a requisition on each of the national banks described in said section, and in the manner therein provided organized in States having an excess of circulation, to withdraw and return so much of this circulation as by said act may be appointed to be withdrawn from them, or, in lieu thereof, to deposit in the Treasury of the United States lawful money sufficient to redeem such circulation, and, upon the return of the circulation required, or the deposit of lawful money, as herein provided, a proportionate amount of the bonds held to secure the circulation of such association as shall make such return or deposit shall be surrendered to it.

SEC. 8. That upon the failure of the national banks upon which requisitions for circulation shall be made, or of any of them, to return the amount required, or to deposit in the Treasury lawful money to redeem the circulation required within thirty days, the Comptroller of the Currency shall at once sell, as provided in section 49 of the National Currency act, approved June 3, 1864, bonds held to secure the redemption of the circulation of the association or associations which shall so fail to an amount sufficient to redeem the circulation required of such association or associations, and with the proceeds which shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States so much of the circulation of said association or associations shall be redeemed as will equal the amount required and not returned, and if there be any excess of proceeds over the amount required for such redemption, it shall be returned to the association or associations whose bonds shall have been sold; and it shall be the duty of the Treasurer, Assistant Treasurers, designated depositories and national bank depositories of the United States, who shall be kept informed by the Comptroller of the Currency of such associations as shall fail to return circulation as required, to assort and return to the Treasurer for redemption the notes of such associations as shall come into their hands until the amount required shall be redeemed, and in like manner to assort and return to the Treasury for redemption the notes of such national banks as have failed or gone into voluntary liquidation, for the purpose of winding up the affairs of such as shall hereafter so fail or go into liquidation.

SEC. 9. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the Comptroller of the Currency, and he is hereby ordered, to issue circulating notes without delay as applications therefor are made, not to exceed the sum of $55,000,000, to associations organized, or to be organized, in those States and Territories having less than their proportion of circulation under an apportionment made on the basis of population and of wealth as shown by the returns of the census of 1870, and every association hereafter organized shall be subject to and be governed by the rules, restrictions and limitations, and possess the rights, privileges and franchises, now or hereafter to be prescribed by law as national banking associations, with the same power to amend, alter and repeal, provided by the National Bank act, provided that the whole amount of circulation withdrawn and removed from the banks transacting business shall not exceed $55,000,000, and that such circulation shall be withdrawn and redeemed as shall be necessary to supply the circulation previously issued to the banks in those States having less than their apportionment; and provided further, that not more than $30,000,000 shall be withdrawn and redeemed, as herein contemplated, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

Sad End of a Strawberry Festival.

An appalling catastrophe occurred in Syracuse, N. Y., on the night of the 23d of June, the sad particulars of which are thus chronicled by the telegraph: A strawberry festival was being held at the parlors of the Central Baptist Church when, without any premonition, the floor gave way, precipitating the roomful into the story below. The parlor was on the second floor, and the room underneath was also full. A fire alarm was immediately given, and the firemen hurried to the scene. Soon 15,000 people were there, and tremendous excitement prevailed. The following were taken out dead: Dr. O. W. Wainwright, Mrs. E. Austin Barnes, Mrs. James M. Crow, Mrs. J. E. Karr, Miss Gussie Carpenter, Mrs. Abijah Vieder, of Utica; Miss Gracie Holmes, Miss Winnie Collins, aged 13 to-day; Hattie Leonard, 5 or 6 years old; John Austin Ostrander, a boy about 9 years old; Miss Minnie Thomas; Frank Collins, aged 14; Lulu Horton, aged 12.

Mrs. Dr. Wainwright will undoubtedly die. Ex-Ald. Austrian Barnes is very seriously injured. The Rev. Dr. H. J. Eddy is slightly injured. The bodies are supposed to be all recovered now. It is impossible to get the names of the injured to-night.

The city is filled with lamentations. The scene in the streets around the church baffles description. Thousands gathered there asking after friends, waiting for the dead and attending to the injured. The entire police force and fire department of the city were called out, and took charge of the work of recovering the dead and wounded. The broken timbers were hoisted up with difficulty. The walls of the church did not fall in, but are seriously damaged. The church is comparatively a new one. A few minutes before the floor gave way, it trembled so that many persons left the room, fearing an accident, which had been predicted by many. The accident was caused by the giving way of a joist that supported the floor. The joist ran from both sides of the room to a cross-stringer, the middle of which was supported by iron rods from the roof. The stringer gave way, pulling the ceiling and roof down upon the people and precipitating them into the room below. The work of recovery was exceedingly slow, as it had to be done in the dark, and it was feared every moment that the walls would fall.

CONGRESS.

THURSDAY, June 18.—Senate.—Mr. Chandler presented a memorial of citizens of Michigan against any reciprocity treaty with Canada. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The report of the conference committee on the Moiety bill was adopted....The bill to pay the awards made by the Southern Claims Commission was passed....Pratt introduced a bill to charter a double-track railroad from the Atlantic to the Missouri river and to limit the rate of freight charges thereon....Wright, from the conference committee on the Currency bill, announced that the committee had unanimously agreed upon a report, but he would not ask for its consideration until the following day....The amendment of the House to the bill to encourage the establishment of public marine schools, was concurred in, and the bill passed....The bill abolishing the Territorial Government in the District of Columbia, and providing for the appointment of three Commissioners to administer its affairs was passed, Sargent alone voting in the negative.

House.—Bills passed: Fixing the limits of the cost of the public building at Covington, Ky., at $250,000, and removing the restrictions as to the material, to be employed; granting the right of way through the public lands to the Arkansas Valley railroad, in Colorado; appointing a commission of three to investigate the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and to enter into an agreement with them relative to the status of the colored people there; amending the mining law of the 10th of May, 1872; authorizing the transfer of gold mint-bars from the Assay Office in New York to the Sub-Treasury. E. H. Roberts presented the report of the conference committee on the Moiety bill, which was adopted.

FRIDAY, June 19.—Senate.—A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to provide a government for the District of Columbia was passed was tabled....The report of the Conference Committee on the Currency bill was called up, and after a lengthy discussion a vote was reached, which resulted in the adoption of the report by 43 to 19....The Senate insisted on its amendments to the Postoffice Appropriation bill, and a conference committee was agreed to.

House.—A resolution was adopted appropriating $300 for the purchase and restoration to the family of Gen. Lafayette of the watch presented by Gen. Washington to Lafayette....A number of the Senate amendments to the Postoffice Appropriation bill were non-concurred in, and the bill was sent to a conference committee....An evening session was held, at which Ben Butler delivered his promised speech in defense of Sanborn & Co.

SATURDAY, June 20.—Senate.—The second section of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, as it came from the House, which abolishes the Civil Service Commission, and prescribes rules for the appointment of officers under the Government, was stricken out by the committee, and a new section reported, continuing the Commission and appropriating $150,000 therefor. The report was agreed to—yeas, 32; nays, 16....The Judiciary Committee made an adverse report upon the petition of Susan B. Anthony for the remission of the fine imposed upon her in the United States District Court of the Northern District of New York....An amendment repealing so much of the Civil Appropriation bill for this year ending June 30, 1874, as appropriated $600,000 to replace worn and mutilated national bank notes was agreed to....A message from the President relative to the affairs of the District of Columbia was referred to the Investigating Committee on District Affairs, and the Committee subsequently reported that its views on the subject of the rate of interest on the District bonds were unchanged.

House.—The powers of the Committee on Arkansas Affairs were continued during vacation—yeas, 139; nays, 74....The report of the conference committee on the Currency bill was presented by Mr. Dawes. After an extended discussion the report of the committee was agreed to—yeas, 221; nays, 40....The Judiciary Committee reported a resolution for the impeachment of Judge Busteed, of Alabama....The Joint Investigating Committee on the Affairs of the District of Columbia, to which was referred the President's message, reported that the opinion of the committee remained unchanged, and the committee was discharged from further consideration of the subject....The Supplementary Civil-Rights bill was then taken up and failed to pass—yeas, 140; nays, 91—there not being two-thirds in its favor, as required under the rule.

MONDAY, June 22.—Senate.—The Tariff bill was read a third time and passed....The conference report on the Postoffice Appropriation bill was disagreed to—the point of difference being the rate of newspaper postage—and a new committee was ordered....House bill granting the right of way to Arkansas Valley railroad was passed. The conference report on the Geneva Award bill was agreed to.

House.—The conference report on the bill for the distribution of the Geneva award was presented and concurred in....A lengthy debate sprang up on the report of the Committee on Appropriations recommending non-concurrence in the Senate amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill by which an item of $25,000 was inserted for the benefit of an organization in Washington known as the Little Sisters of the Poor. The amendment was finally concurred in....A motion to insert in the Civil Appropriation bill an item of $7,000 to reimburse Gen. O. O. Howard for the expense of his defense before the late court of inquiry was defeated....The bill to prevent hazing at the Naval Academies was passed....The bill creating a national park on the Island of Mackinac was tabled.

TUESDAY, June 23.—Senate.—A resolution was adopted authorizing the Appropriation Committees of both houses to sit at the capital during the recess, to inquire what reforms can be made in the civil service....The Tariff bill was killed by postponing it to the next session, the two houses failing to agree on several items....The bills for the admission of Colorado and New Mexico were laid on the table....The bill in relation to courts and judicial officers in Utah was passed....Bills were also passed authorizing the coinage of a 20-cent piece of silver, and removing the political disabilities of John Forsythe and J. L. Pugh, of Alabama....The Senate, at 6:15 p. m., adjourned. So ends the first session of the Forty-third Congress.

House.—Averill, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made a report in the matter of the investigation of alleged frauds in making contracts and furnishing supplies in the Indian office, with the volume of testimony. The report exonerates the Commissioners and Interior Department....The Senate resolution authorizing the Appropriation Committee to sit during the recess was agreed to....All the appropriation bills having been disposed of, the Speaker, at precisely 6 o'clock, pronounced the first session of the Forty-third Congress adjourned sine die.

The Rotundity of the Earth.

One of those people with whom "seeing is believing," and the deductions of logic and mathematics go for nothing—an Englishman bearing the immortal name of Hampden—recently risked five hundred pounds on the assertion that the earth could not be proved to him by ocular demonstration to be round—or more precisely, that the surface of a sheet of quiet water was flat, not curved. The bet was accepted by a Mr. A. R. Wallace (presumably the eminent naturalist of that name), and the experiment was tried on the "Bedford Level," where a line of six miles could be obtained. Three disks were placed, one at each end of this line and one at the center, each disk being exactly 42 feet above the surface of the water immediately under it. The three were then observed through a selected and approved telescope, and the central one was found to be about five feet above the line joining the two others. That rise of five feet forced Mr. Hampden to come down with five hundred pounds. It is to be hoped that he paid his water-money. Any surveyor could have told him that in running levels over any considerable distance it is necessary to make correction for the curvature of the earth, as well as for refraction. These corrections become very important when it is desired to survey a line for the construction of a ditch or canal. A man sighting through a telescope at an object ten miles' distant, and apparently on the same level, would be really looking at a point nearly fifty-seven feet higher in true altitude than his eye; and if he made no allowance for this fact, it might happen to him, as it happened to rude surveyors and constructors before now, that when his ditch was done, the water could not run in it. At this distance the positive error in curvature is nearly sixty-seven feet; but there is a partial offset in the opposite or negative error of refraction.

A New Gun.

A gunmaker, of Limoges, France, has submitted to the military commission at Vincennes a rifle of a very novel construction. It is thus described in a Paris journal, La Liberte: The new gun presents nothing remarkable exteriorly, but the lock is so arranged that the breech is opened by cocking the piece, and the charge being introduced, the breech is closed and the gun fired by touching the trigger. The cartridge consists of a hollow leaden cone filled with powder and closed at the base by means of a cork. At the moment the cartridge is introduced into the breech the powder escapes by a small hole in the cork, and an imperceptible ball of fulminating powder which forms the priming takes its proper position. The triple action of cocking, loading and firing is thus effected simultaneously, so that a man with very little experience can fire twenty rounds a minute. The cartriges are stored in an iron tube, which is placed parallel with the barrel, and contains thirty balls, so that the piece may be fired as many times almost without any interval, and without removing the stock from the shoulder, as there is nothing to be done but cock and pull the trigger. There may be occasions when such rapid firing may be of use, but it is pretty generally admitted that soldiers with the present arms fire away most of their ammunition uselessly.

Articles Four Thousand Years Old.

[Bayard Taylor's account of the Museum at Boolak, Egypt, in the New York Tribune.]

Of even greater interest are the household articles, implements of trade, food, etc., which, like the spoils of Pompeii, restore for us, the domestic life of the people. Here, for instance, are stools, cane-bottomed chairs, and work-boxes 4,000 years old, yet no more dilapidated than if they came out of a garret of the last century; nets, knives, needles, and toilet ornaments; glass bottles and drinking-cups as clear as if just blown; earthenware, glazed in blue and yellow patterns, the very counterpart of old Majolica; seeds, eggs, and bread; straw-baskets and a child's ball for playing; paint-boxes with colors and brushes, and boards for games of draughts—in short, a collection almost as varied and complete as the ashes of Vesuvius preserved for us of the Græco-Roman life of the year 79 of our era. But these Egyptian relics date from 1,000 to 3,000 years before our era began.

A Transaction in Oats.

In Massachusetts, where prohibition is in force, and where it is popularly believed men grow up, live to good old ages and die without ever seeing, smelling, tasting, or handling intoxicating liquors, the following scene recently took place, according to a writer in the Boston Gazette:

We at length reached the hotel again, and I proposed a glass of brandy and water. My friend looked at me and then at the landlord; and then the landlord looked at me and then at my friend. Perplexity overspread the countenance of both. "Such a thing as a drop of liquor is not to be had in the place," said the landlord.

"Bought, you mean," retorted my friend.

"Bought, I mean," was the answer. Then [illegible] eyed me significantly. I could not explain how badly I needed it, and could only give vent to my feelings in a sigh.

Without a word the landlord disappeared within the recesses of a small room behind the office desk, and presently came forth with two empty tumblers in his hand. These he placed upon the desk.

"But where is the liquor?" I inquired.

"The law forbids me to sell it," he said, "and I dare not disobey the law. If you can find any here you are welcome to it," saying which he accidentally turned back the breast of his coat. The neck of a bottle peeped forth from the inside pocket. He winked his eye at me, and I winked my eye at him, after which I drew forth the bottle. He faintly struggled to prevent the daring robbery upon which I was bent, but I proved inexorable.

"My private bottle kept for medicinal purposes, and not for sale," he moaned, as he poured out the liquor for myself and the worthy Chairman of the Parish Committee. "Have some water, gentlemen?" he added with alacrity.

We drank, and I replaced the bottle in the repository whence I had taken it. Then I put a dollar in his hand.

"What is this for?" he asked, as he deposited it in his waistcoat pocket, and gave me a half dollar in change.

"For a bushel of oats," I answered. "Keep them until I send for them."

"Ah, sir," said the landlord, with an air of virtuous resignation, "the prohibitory law has done a world of good in stopping the sale of liquors. It's a severe law on us, but it's a good one.

How Mules Came Into Fashion.

Few of the farmers of this country are aware what a depth of gratitude they owe George Washington for the introduction of mules into general use for farm purposes.

Previous to 1783, there were very few, and those of such an inferior order as to prejudice farmers against them as unfit to compete with horses in work upon the road or farm. Consequently there were no jacks, and no disposition to increase the stock; but Washington became convinced that the introduction of mules generally among Southern planters would prove to them a great blessing, as they are less liable to be injured than horses by careless servants.

As soon as it became known abroad that the illustrious Washington desired to stock his Mount Vernon estate with mules, the King of Spain sent him a jack and two jennets, from the Royal stables, and Lafayette sent another jack and two jenuets from the Island of Malta.

The first was a gray color, 16 hands high, heavily made, and of sluggish nature. He was named the Royal Gift. The other was called the Knight of Malta; he was about as high—lithe, fiery, even to ferocity.

The two different sets of animals gave him the most favorable opportunity of making improvements by cross-breeding, the result of which was the favorite jack, Compound, because he partook of the best point in both the original. The General bred his blooded mares to these jacks, even taking those from his family coach for that purpose, and produced such superb mules that the country was all agog to breed some of the sort, and they soon became quite common. This was the origin of improved mules in the United States. There are now some of the third and fourth generation of Knight and Malta and Royal Gift to be found in Virginia, and the great benefits arising from their introduction to the country are to be seen upon every cultivated acre in the Southern States.

Mark Twain's Adventure.

I got into the cars, took a seat in juxtaposition to a female. The female's face was a perfect life insurance company to her. It insured her against ever getting married to any person except a blind man. Her mouth looked like a crack in a dried lemon, and there was no more expression in her face than there is in a cup of cold custard. She appeared as if she had been to one famine and got two-thirds of the way through another. She was old enough to be a great-grandmother to Mary who had a little lamb. She was chewing prize popcorn, and carried in her hand a yellow rose, while a band-box and cotton umbrella nestled by her side. I couldn't guess whether she was on a mission of charity or going West to start a sawmill. I was full of curiosity to hear her speak so I said: "The exigencies of time require circumspection in a person who is traveling." "What?" says she. "The orb of the day shines resplendent in the vault above," says I. She twisted around uneasily, and then raised her umbrella and said: "I don't want any of your sass—git out!" And I did get out.

Saved From Drowning by Chloroform.

Well, here is chloroform administered under entirly novel circumstances. A gentleman crossing the bridge at Fultonville, Montgomery county, saw a small boy struggling in the river below. Down went the philanthropist to the rescue, but the small boy struggled so that both were in danger of watery death. Just then the gentleman remembered that he had a bottle of chloroform in his pocket. To take it out and administer the anæsthetic to the wiggling lad was the work of a moment; and then the unconscious form was towed safely to the shore.

COMMON salt is a valuable manure for most crops, and has been used from ancient times. Near the sea it is of no use, as the spray from the sea is carried inland and falls upon the soil; but out of the reach of sea vapor it is a useful application and ingredient of composts.

CLEAN the harness. Unbuckle all the parts and wash well with soft water. Turpentine or benzine will remove gummy substances. Warm the leather and then oil well with a paint-brush or swab. Neat's-foot oil is the best. Hang the harness up until dry.

PLANT a sunflower in each hill of beans and you will get suitable bean-poles. The stock grows in advance of the vine and makes an excellent support. You not only obtain a good bean-pole gratis, but you have a large amount of valuable seed for your fowls in the fall.

LIME should be applied when dry-slaked and caustic, on a dry day, when the land is dry enough not to lump it, and be well worked in with a fine harrow. If there are many lumps, from the size of a pea to a walnut, those lumps will rapidly disappear by exposure to the sun and air.

THE best method of controlling cows inclined to kick while handling or milking them is to pass a broad strap just in front of the bag and around over the back of the animal; draw the strap tight and buckle it. This prevents all play of the cords and renders the animal incapable of kicking, and she can then be handled without difficulty. A few applications will cure the worst cases.

TIN watering-pots much used in the garden often become rusted at the lower corners, and begin to leak. It is not necessary yet to throw them aside, as the holes may be effectually stopped without going to the tinker's, by covering them inside with a small piece of linen dipped in copal varnish, the tin being previously thoroughly dried. When the varnish hardens by drying they are perfectly air-tight.

THROUGHOUT the entire country there is almost entire freedom from disease among horned animals. A little murrain in the South; in one town in England a slight disease prevails among calves. The foot-rot seems to be prevailing all over the country among sheep, and many flocks have been thinned by it, where it has not received a prompt check by paring the hoofs and applying thorough remedies.

MANY valuable animals are lost by hoven or bloat, which might be prevented with a little care. In the first place no creature should be allowed to fill the stomach with new grass when first turned out, but should be allowed a slight feed each day until fully accustomed to it. Second, every animal when turned to grass should have a constant supply of salt in some place easily accessible. These precautions will save a great deal of trouble, and often the lives of valuable animals.

MANY persons who would like to have hay for their stock have no land set in grass fit for mowing. Sow millet. The best variety for this purpose is what is known as Hungarian grass. The ground for this crop should be naturally good, or very heavily manured. It should be nicely prepared. Sow one-half bushel of seed per acre, and cover by passing a roller over it. If the season is favorable, from one and a half to two and a half tons of good hay may be cut from an acre.

AN inexpensive but durable method of painting old buildings is as follows: First give them a coat of crude petroleum, which is the oil as it comes from the wells, and can be procured for about $4 to $5 a barrel in almost any town or city. Then mix one pound of "metallic paint," which is brown or red hematite iron ore finely ground, to one quart of linseed oil, and apply this over the petroleum coat. The petroleum sinks into the wood and makes a good ground-work for the iron and oil paint. The color of the iron paint is a dark reddish brown, and is not at all disagreeable; it is a color not readily soiled, very durable, and is fire-proof.

BY the following methods I have successfully destroyed the currant worm: Spread from a gill to half a pint of carbolate of lime around the currant bush, near the stock; then jar off the worms. They will immediately attempt to return, but unless a branch touches the ground beyond the barrier, as a bridge for them, not a worm will get back, but they will perish in their attempts to pass through the lime. Care should be taken to obtain the article in its full strength, which can be bought for about ten cents per pound, by the ten or fifteen pounds. Much of the carbolate of lime sold for destroying insects is weakened by mixture with common air-slacked lime.

EPICUREAN COFFEE.—There is such a [illegible] mak[illegible] it bet[illegible] people in the [illegible] different [illegible]cences, like the perfume of [illegible] wine, produce certain rare bouquets or aromas for the epicure. Not more than half a pound of coffee should be roasted at a time for domestic use; it should be ground ju[illegible] [illegible] white of egg to clear it there should be some warmth before the water is added, and it should never be allowed to reach a boil. Observe these rules, which are based upon scientific reasons, and you may make from an inferior coffee-bean a beverage far superior to what generally goes by that name.

Europe—A Mighty War Imminent.

[London (June 1) Cor. New York World.]

The leading article in the Times of yesterday is one well worthy of the attention which it will everywhere receive. It was a plain warning that Europe is on the eve of a mighty war. Affairs have come to such a pass that the burden of maintaining the armies which all the nations have prepared for the coming war is too great long to be endured. But still these armies are constantly increased. "The process of turning citizens into soldiers," says the Times, "goes on all over Europe without any apparent limit." The German army is more than half as large again as it was fifteen years ago, and still is not large enough to satisfy Bismarck and Moltke. France, Austria, Italy, Russia, Belgium and Sweden are all following Germany's example, and are increasing their armies. Each is afraid of all the others, and "Europe is returning to the traditions of an earlier age, when every free man was a soldier, and the pursuits of industry were wholly subordinate to the claims of military service." Each nation says it is arming only for defense—but some of them have already armies of defense more numerous than any offensive army that can be brought against them. For, says the Times:

"Germany has a total army of 1,261,000 men, and this is very nearly as large as the entire offensive army of European and Asiatic Russia, and falls very little short of the combined offensive forces of France and Austria and Italy. The French army, again, is much larger than the army with which Germany could make the attack. Nor is Italy less well defended against all possible assailants. Within the last fifteen years she has almost doubled her standing army, and has increased the available offensive part of it in an even larger proportion. She has now 605,200 soldiers with whom she can defend herself, and 322,000 with whom she can attack her neighbors. If we measure her defensive forces against the offensive forces of any other nation whatever, we shall find that they do not fall short of any, and that they are considerably in excess of the most. The very pretense of reason thus altogether disappears, and the jealousies and suspicions of the nations of Europe with regard to each other's future movements are shown clearly to be as baseless as they are ruinous."

England, for every 1,000 of her population, maintains only three soldiers for offensive purposes; Italy and Belgium maintain twelve; France and Austria fifteen; Germany twenty-one. It is in vain Germany to pretend that she wishes only to defend herself—she means mischief, and the gun which will be the signal of the next great war will be fired by her.

Use of Horse-Flesh in France.

The committee for introducing the use of horse-flesh into France reports that, during the first six months of 1867, 808 horses, asses and mules were sold in Paris, the weight of which amounted to 166,000 kilogrammes. During the first six months of 1870 the number of animals amounted to 1,992, or 360,000 kilogrammes; while in the same period of 1873, [illegible] animals were exposed in the market, the flesh alone weighing 830,840 kilogrammes, not counting the heart, brain, liver, tongue, etc., which were also used like those of beef-cattle. A similar extension of the use of horse-flesh was manifested in the provinces. The usual price paid by the butchers for these horses amounts from $25 to $30 each, the animals being killed only after their period of utility has passed, and when they are worth little or nothing. Allowing $20 as the increased sum realized from each animal in consequence of its conversion into food, we have the food resources of Paris alone increased by the amount of $103,720. A similar estimate, based upon the entire number of horses sold as food in the whole of France, indicates that the food resources of the country during 1873 will have been increased to the amount of amount of $800,000; while the saving to the public by the difference between the cost of horse-flesh and the more expensive kinds is of course much greater.

Alcohol's Army of Death.

There are 140,000 saloons in the country against 128,000 schools, and only 54,000 churches. Manufacturers and sellers of strong drink, 560,000, twelve times the number of clergymen, four times the teachers, nearly double all the lawyers, physicians, teachers and ministers combined. In these saloons there are 5,600,000 daily customers, one in seven of the whole population! Of these 100,000 are annually imprisoned for crime, at an expense of $90,000,000, and 150,000 go down to the drunkard's grave, leaving 200,000 beggared orphans. Grasp these figures: An army of topers, five abreast, 100 miles in length. A rank of beggared widows and children stretching across the State of Massachusetts. A file of men seventy-five miles in length, marching steadily down to the grave, three every minute through the year.—Congregationalist.

DEFENDING THE GRANGE.

Its Purposes Pure and Philanthropic—A Reply to the Speech of Charles W. Green—His Statements Concerning the [illegible] Falsified.

To the Editor of the New York Tribune:

SIR: In one of the issues of your paper of [illegible] was given of a convention which assembled at Syracuse, N. Y., having the two-fold object of opposing all secret organizations and societies, and of organizing a new party which should be established on new principles, and which should be immaculately pure. With several of the officers of this new organization I have been, in the past, intimately acquainted. I esteem them as good, honest and conscientious men, somewhat utopian in their views, and a little prone to forget that human nature is very far from being absolutely perfect. With their projected organization I have no disposition to find fault. I believe it to be impracticable. But they will find that out soon enough. But one thing they did which was sadly out of place, in a body of men professing to be actuated by such high and pure motives. They suffered a Mr. Charles W. Green to utter the grossest slanders and falsehoods against men who were as pure and free from any taint of selfish or mercenary motives as the purest of themselves; they allowed him without rebuke or reproof to make statements which he knew to be false, and which they certainly had no reason for believing to be true, and by implication they indorsed these slanders by their resolutions of the next day. I could not have believed that men like President Blanchard, the Hon. Francis Gillette, H. B. Kellogg, or others who were members of that convention, would have been so unjust or so easily entrapped. Of this man Charles W. Green I only know what he says of himself in this speech. If, as I suspect, he is the same Charles W. Green who in the Farmers' Convention at Indianapolis was one of the orators, then I have only to say that he possesses a most unbounded amount of assurance; for the platform of the Farmers' Convention which, as I understand it, he had a hand in preparing, is about half of it taken verbatim et literatim from the "Declaration of Principles" put forth by the National Grange at St. Louis in February last, and which you have already printed in your columns; and yet he professes the most undying hostility to the grange, whether national, State or subordinate. But my object is not to identify the man—he is not worth the effort—but to traverse his slanders, which only derive importance from having found a place in your columns. His statement of the origin of the "Order of Patrons of Husbandry" is false from beginning to end. The only truth I have been able to find in it is that William Saunders was the founder of the order. The whole North Carolina story is a myth, and had nothing whatever to do with its origin. It was founded Dec. 4, 1867, and like every other organization of the sort, its originators claimed, as they undoubtedly had the right to do, the privilege of issuing dispensations and charters to the granges organized by themselves or under their direction. The order is essentially philanthrophic in its origin and modes of working; its founders, among whom Mr. Saunders is the one most widely known, so far from being, as Green represents them, "digitaries without dignity," "given to vulgarity," and "men who would hardly be received into decent society," are men of refinement, culture and of a most genial and benevolent disposition. So far is it from being true that they have sought to continue themselves in office for the sake of personal gain or honor, that at the expiration of their first term, all of them withdrew from office, and but two, the Secretary and Treasurer, would permit themselves to be re-elected. Mr. Saunders, the first Master of the National Grange, refused absolutely a re-election, and when he was compelled, by the National Grange, to accept the laborious and thankless office of Chairman of the Executive Committee, he put himself under the orders of the other officers. The revenues of the National Grange, under the great but healthy increase of the order, are now of considerable amount, the aggregation of millions of littles; but every dollar of its expenditure is accounted for, and its books are now, as they always have been, open to the inspection of every member of the order. There is no contingent or secret service fund, no money to be used in bribes or to be squandered by pampered officials, or expended for political or other sinister purposes. The salaries of all the officers of the National Grange, though they are the hardest worked men in the United States, are less than those which any wholesale merchant pays to his clerks; and it is true to-day that the salaried officers of the National Grange are poorer than they would have been had they remained in their several previous avocations. The records of any secret society in this or any other country may be searched in vain, for a nobler, purer and more patriotic showing than these earnest and patient men have made and can make of their connection with the National Grange. The whole story of the connection of the Grange with politics and political parties is equally false, and to any member of the order is perfectly absurd. The constitution of the National, State and subordinate Granges requires that no political or partisan topic shall be discussed in the Grange, and no rule is more strictly enforced. The members of the order are from all political parties and from every shade and section of each, and their political views are never questioned or influenced in the Grange. Belonging to the great agricultural class, it is fair to presume that they will seek to have the State and National legislation such as will promote and facilitate, in the highest and widest sense, the interest of agriculture; and as these are affiliated with all others, they will not probably wrong any others. They are, so far as we know, a unit in favor of honesty, capacity and economy in the management of National and State affairs. But even these principles, against which no sincere patriot can raise any objection, cannot be discussed in the Grange. I think it possible that ex-President Johnson may now be a member of the order, though I do not know such to be the fact; but I do know that so far from being consulted in regard to its organization, he was not cognizant of its existence for years, and not until after he had left the Presidency. The admission of professed politicians, or indeed of politicians of any sort, into the order, is strongly discouraged. We do not want them, and have no disposition to be guided or influenced by them. They may scatter hayseed in their hair, wear butternut shirts and stogy boots, with their trowsers tucked in, but they will not be welcomed, and be very likely to meet the fate of the Hon. Sassafras Dodger, whose sore trials in trying to get into the grange have been so touchingly described. Indeed we more than half suspect that Mr. Charles W. Green is no other than the Hon. Sassafras Dodger himself, and that his great grievance is that he could not be fully admitted into the order. We welcome all honest, thoughtful, intelligent and patriotic tillers of the soil to our ranks, and can assure them that they will find nothing but good there; but we have no room for political demagogues.

A NEW YORK GRANGER.

Men as Well as Principles.

Whatever may be the opinion of the enemies of what is known as the farmer's movement, one thing is certain, and that is, the time has at last arrived when the producing classes have determined to measure swords with monopolies which ignore the best interests of the people, and which are governed by the rule or ruin principle.

The masses of the people have now reached a point where protesting is about to be merged into prompt and decisive action. Men as well as principles, is hereafter to be the motto inscribed on the banner of the working-men and women of our great industrial republic.

Every where there is an abiding conviction, and an evidence of a fixed resolve to reform existing abuses of a national or local character. There is being manifested a power that has hitherto patiently submitted to the corrupting influence of gigantic corporations. That power is destined to work a complete reform. It will destroy the hopes of professional office-seekers and wire-pullers that throng our cities and villages, and which are as numerous as the venomous insects on the banks of the Nile.

There is being manifested on the part of the farmers and mechanics a disposition to set aside all the old systems that have culminated in fraud and monopoly, and inaugurated a new era of self-dependence. It is already resolved that they will no longer carelessly cast a single vote for men who have an office-seeking reputation, but for men in the noblest, truest sense of that term—men who can show a clear record, and possess unquestionable integrity, firmness, purity, and integrity. The people are becoming thoughtful, and the country will be saved. They are beginning to inquire who is Col. Tom Scott, that now controls the Legislature of Pennsylvania and New Jersey; or Garrett, who governs Maryland; or Vanderbilt, whose influence penetrates the Legislature of every State through which railroads pass that he controls? It is well that thought is taking the place of the listless indifference that has characterized the masses of the people in reference to these giant monopolies. It is well that they have resolved to insist that their representatives in local, State and national offices shall hereafter be servants and not masters; that they shall possess clean hands and clear heads, and have some sense of the responsibility of the position they occupy, and their obligation to their constituents. It is an alarming condition of things, and shows too plainly to what depths we have fallen, when it is fashionable for the representatives of the people to out-Judas Judas in betraying the trust that is reposed in them, and when retired in the shades of private life are recognized as the equal and fit associate of honest men instead of being regarded and treated as they should be, as citizens of the worst possible character. Away with such sycophancy and fawning. Politics must be purified or the nation is lost. The purchase of votes, directly or indirectly, is an offense that should meet the prompt and unqualified condemnation of all good men of all parties. Let us arouse from the criminal carelessness that has brought us to the very verge of ruin, and resolve that henceforth our watchword shall be, not the fatal dogma of "principles and not men," but that of "men as well as principles."—Coleman's Rural World.

To Avoid Using Spectacles in Old Age.

As mature years approach, the rotund convexity of the eye of childhood becomes flattened, and the lens in front of the pupil—the cornea—requires a change of focus to enable it to perform its accustomed duties. This flattening may be brought about at a comparative early age by the injurious habit of rubbing the eyes with towels, handkerchiefs, &c. Always in washing, compress the ball of the eye together by placing a finger, and thumb at the outside and inside corners of the eye, and gently compress them, and the nuisance of being compelled to use spectacles would be avoided.

Persons who have taken care to do this have been enabled to dispense with glasses at a very advanced age.

Among the devices to prevent flattening of the cornea and sinking of the eyes into their sockets, so usual to old age, are glass eye-cups made to fit the eyes, with a rubber ball attached, which will cause a vacuum to be formed in the eye-cup, and thus draw the eye out slightly.—Prairie Farmer.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.—Nitro-glycerine is composed of glycerine dissolved in a mixture of equal parts of nitric and sulphuric acids. The solution is poured into a large volume of water when the nitro-glycerine is precipitated as colorless heavy oil. The nature of this substance is very peculiar. A drop of the oil placed on an anvil and struck heavily explodes with a loud noise; and if a paper be moistened with it and struck it is blown into fragments. The application of a flame or red-hot iron to the oil, however, only causes it to burn quietly. In closed vessels it explodes at about 360 deg. Fahrenheit. In blasting rocks nitro-glycerine is exploded by a concussion caused by gunpowder. It has about ten times the explosive power of gunpowder.

Worth Remembering.

KEEP soft-soap three months before using.

A WEAK solution of the permanganate of potassa will deodorize your breath.

BAR soap should be kept in a dry place several weeks before using. It will last much longer.

TO TAKE ink out of linen; dip the spot in pure melted tallow; wash and the ink will come out with the tallow.

HERE is a China cement. Take a thick solution of gum arabic (dissolved in soft water) and stir in plaster of Paris, till of the consistency of thick cream; with a brush spread it neatly on the broken edges and stick them together, let them lie for several days.

IN summer milk is apt to have a garlicky or onion-like flavor from some odorous shrub eaten by the cows. To absorb this peculiar taint drop a piece of wood-charcoal, three or four inches square, into each pan of the fluid, or into the milk-pitcher for table. The carbon very quickly deodorizes the milk, leaving it sweet and pure.

STOVE luster, when mixed with turpentine, and applied in the usual manner, is blacker, more glossy and enduring than when mixed with any other liquid. The turpentine prevents rust, and when applied to an old rusty stove will make it look like new.

HEMP, when the blossoms are just opened, is an infallible preservative of textile fabrics and furs against the attacks of moths. The stalk with leaves and flowers is cut when blooming (about July), and dried in the shade. It is said to preserve its properties for several years.

A COMMON cement for marble, porphyry or alabaster is made of two parts of white virgin wax, one part of white resin, with one and a half parts of the same stone, powdered, as the article to be repaired. Marble or albaster dust is found at the stone-cutter's, where it is an article of trade for making fine finish to parlor walls. The wax and resin are melted, the powder sifted in, afterward the whole is well kneaded in water to mix the ingredients thoroughly.

WE give a receipt for making a superior whitewash: Take a clean water-tight cask or barrel, and put into it a half bushel of lime. Slack by pouring water over it, boiling hot and in sufficient quantity to cover it five inches deep, and stir it briskly till thoroughly slacked. When the slacking has been effected, dissolve it in water and add a solution of two pounds of sulphate of zinc and one of common salt. If you want a cream color, add to the above three pounds of yellow ochre. The value of the sulphate of zinc is that it makes the wash harden better after it is put on.

The Mill River Hen.

We know a few details of her history. Biddy, we suppose, was her name, and America her nation; Williamsburg was her dwelling-place, and, as the sequel will show, presence of mind her salvation. She had laid seventeen eggs in a barrel, and having done her level best in that line, she was setting on them when the mill-dam burst. In spite of her teeth the flood bore her along with the awful wreck—with houses and barns, trees and fences, and the bodies of men and beasts—but this steadfast creature never stirred. What outsiders were doing was none of her business. She was too busy keeping the beams out of her own eye to look after the motes in the eyes of other people. What thoughts may have passed through her mind! Perhaps she whistled as she went for want of thought. Who knows? How her mother's heart must have trembled! "What," she cried, "must I lose my chickens by that dam?" If she could have sung no doubt she would have clucked to herself some ancient lay. Until the barrel was stove she would not deny herself the comfort of a stave. "Give me but what that barrel-hoop bound. Take all the rest the sun goes round." Or something else appropriate. Our hen was carried five miles, and at length the Fates, snubbed and disappointed, bumped the barrel ashore and left it high and dry. What did the hen do? Did she jump out, and crow and cackle over her ride like a man? Did she scratch off a letter to Barnum offering to make a show of herself? No, she just went on minding her own business, and in due time hatched out every one of her seventeen eggs. Oh, fowl most fair! How meekly didst thou bear thy yolks! Many hens have done excellently, but thou excellest them all.

THE NEWS OF OLDEN TIME.

We hold a paper in our hands—
"A Journal of To-day"—
So reads its modest title-page,
Now dim with age and gray.
'Tis filled with startling incident,
With essay, tale, and rhyme—
The doings of the long ago—
The news of olden time.

The nimble fingers, deft and spry,
That set this type of yore,
Have mingled with their kindred dust,
Full fifty years or more;
Gone, long ago, the busy scribe
That drove the good quill-pen;
Closed, years agone, the eyes that read
The thoughts of honest men.

And yet, in those time-honored days,
They had their little spites
And jealousies, and quarreled o'er
Their fancied wrongs and rights;
The factions, led to victory,
Or beaten, left the field;
Poor, human hearts!—so much like ours—
They'd rather die than yield.

We run our eye across the page,
And up and down each column
We read the lists of marriages
And births, the deaths, so solemn;
And then we wonder who will read,
When we have passed away,
A hundred years or more to come,
Our "Journal of To-day."

Immigration During 1873.

The immigration to this country from foreign ports last year fell off nearly 70,000 as compared with the return for 1872. The immigration into Canada was, on the contrary, largely increased. The two results are attributed to business depression in this country consequent upon the panic last fall, and to the activity displayed in Canada during the last year or more in stimulating immigration and in opening up her Western possessions to settlers. The immigration into this country was 422,545 persons, of whom nearly one-third were of German birth. Thirty-seven per cent. came from Ireland and Great Britain. Irish immigration seems to have passed its highest point, partly owing to the absence of any great political excitement on the island, and partly to the improved condition of the remaining inhabitants consequent upon the large reduction of the population by the emigration of former years. The immigration from Sweden shows a great falling-off, while that from France, Italy and Russia is increasing. Three-fourths of the immigrants belonged to the Teutonic, Celtic and Anglo-Saxon races. Of over 400,000 immigrants only 2,200 had professions and 46,000 skilled trades, the remainder being laborers, women and children.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, July 2nd 1874

The Republican State Convention met at Indianapolis last Wednesday, adopted a platform and nominated candidates for State offices to be filled in October. The present incumbents were renominated. The platform is a curious piece of political jugglers, and was fashioned by that eminent political juggler, Hon. R. H. Thompson of Terre Haute. It is more remakable for its non-committalism, and evasion than for any other quality.—As we can gather in the platform favors inflation, although it endorses Grant and Senators Pratt and Morton, two violent inflationists. Upon the question of temperence it is in favor of a prohibitory law, although the resolution might have another construction put upon it. It is, however, like attempting to draw sun-rays from the cucumber as to extract light from Republican platforms.—Pharos.

Probable Murder

(Special telegram to the Fort Wayne Gazette)

Waterloo, Ind., June 30—A man named Inman, from Butler, of bad reputation, was arrested on Sunday, 28th ult., and brought here on suspicion of murder. On the 25th, a man from Knox county, Ohio, fell from his buggy, it was supposed, as he was found insensible and died two hours afterward. Physicians were called and appoplexy was given as the cause of his death. It is alleged that Inman, who had been drinking, confessed to the woman of the house where the man was taken and died that he was murdered by him; that he struck him twice on the head with a club, breaking it: and that he then robbed him of $50, leaving fifty-nine cents (the amount found upon him) to quiet suspicion.—A broken club was found near by.

The body was taken up this afternoon and the skull sawed into and examined. No marks of violence were discovered, except a slight scratch upon the forehead. The inquest is to be continued.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

NEW YORK, June 18, 1874.

Dear Courier—If memory serves me rightly, and, I think she do, we, Mr Editor, sat in the immediate vicinity of the Presidential wedding party in the breakfast room of the 5th Avenue Hotel about a month since Of course Editor like, we commented upon the looks of the high contracting parties and exchanged views upon the subject generally, spoke of the high toned affair and its international significance, descanted largely upon many of its more important features and referred to the magnificence of the bridal presents. But did it ever occur to you, that among the brilliant and costly category of kind remembrances sent in by favored guests the paper failed to note a single present given the Bride by her groom or by any member of the Sartoris family? It is said now that the English branch of the house looked with much disfavor on this alliance, and that Miss Nellie has found anything but a hearty reception in her new Brittish home.—What American can sympathize with her if she finds this match an unhappy one, she the daughter of the highest Representative of American blood, to ignore the young men of her own country altogether, to unite herself indissolubly to an unnaturalized foreigner simply because his income was $30,000 a year. There are many young men of America whose income is twice this am't but who claim no noble blood save that of true American nobility. I hope the bride may be happy in her unwise selection, but I can not disabuse my mind of dark forebodings of her future I am led into this channel of thought by the perusal of late English papers, in which no hearty congratulations are expressed, no seeming delight and joy at what should constitute a theme for general praise. They seem rather humiliated than exalted, for one of their noble blood coursing in his veins, has married the daughter of an American Plebian, once a tanner from the obscure walks of humble life, who by a concatenation of circumstances has been temporarily elevated to the Chief Magistracy of our simple Republic, to be soon reduced to that political obscurity where fate found him at the commencement of our civil war. Poor misguided Nellie! may your bright sky (if still it be bright) ne'er be overcast by cloud of disappointment or sorrow, but should it, we trust there may exist for you in your new found home of fogs and royalty, compensating sympathy and abundant Brittish condolence. Ask no American eyes to leak for your sorrows and misfortunes. To you, our fount has dried, We are but simple ignoble Americans. Nellie Au Revoir.

On Friday last I got a glimpse of Boss Tweed, the arch thief of Gotham, now serving out a 12 years sentence on Blackwells Island. He came into court on habeas corpus ad testificandum in a certain suit before Judge Van Vorst wherein one Dewey in a suit against a Mr Colligan claimed $1000 on assumpsit. Dewey was formerly Tweed's private Sec'y. An immense crowd thronged the rooms of the Supreme Court; all anxious to have another look at this grand mogul from the Island; he looked somewhat haggard and chopfallen, gave in his evidence however in a straightforward manner after which Warden Liscomb of the Penitentiary conducted him to a carriage, they were driven to the boat in readiness and the fallen chief remanded to his cell. All large cities have some special peculiarity for which they are noted the world over, Boston is famous for its Bunker Hill, Philadelphia for its Centennial, Chicago for its big fires, St. Louis for its bridge, Baltimore for its monuments, Ft. Wayne for its honest Board of Aldermen, Auburn for its enterprizing Courier, but N. Y. City for its barefaced brazen corruption has a reputation not only coextensive with the confines of the Globe, but Jersey has heard even of the stupendous frauds of this Tweed and his satellites, many of whom now pine within dingy walls with creaking doors to shut them in from what should be an honest world, while others fugitives from outraged justice, are living on their ill gotten gains, under foreign flags, with the mark of thief written upon their consciences, and a domestic record left to their unfortunate posterity, that must like an anchor weigh them down and seriously effect their social relations forever in this their present home, for many of these rascals are respectably connected here.

New York politicians are heartily laughing in their sleeve at the ludicrous dilemma into which the Indiana politicians unconsciously have staggered and the papers independent of partisan proclivities facetiously comment on the sad political plight of their Hoosier friends. A headstrong monomaniac on the subject of temperance yclept Baxter of the Republican household of faith fathers a tyrannical and eminently injudicious temperance law which last spring lost to the party the elections in such Republican strongholds as Richmond, Indianapolis et al while this fall even the Republicans look upon the defeat of their Indiana State ticket as a foregone conclusion and so acknowledge here, they are seemingly at sea upon the vexed and little understood question of currency; they are really uncertain as to whether they are in favor of inflation or contraction and in their blind uncertainty feel that it is safer to espouse the cause of inflation because their man Morton advocates it and he can never err; politically he is infallible. He may err in regard to the laws of nature and health, may be indiscreet in many things necessitating the use of Buchu and a resort to the caustic application of the Moxa, and frequent trips to the Hot Springs, but in politics this demi political God is worshipped and his arguments upon any subject accepted without dispute as gospel truths. Unquestionably Senator Morton is among the ablest men of the U. S. Senate of today but that he is an unconscious demagogue is also unquestionably true, his advocacy of the civil rights bill and then his dodging the vote thereon when brought to the test, his humiliating failure on the inflation bill and obsequious acceptance of the veto, shows too plainly the arch demagogue rather than the sincere friend of either measure as should have been demonstrated in the true and upright statesman. Eastern politicians regard Morton as actuated with but one impulse, that of resting his diseased anatomy in the Presidential chair. He laughs to scorn the third term proposition of Grant's friends and fears only the present speaker Blaine who is eminently and deservedly popular among the schemers and wire workers of the present party in power. The currency question will enter largely into the next presidential campaign. The west with its newborn mystic grange movement will exert an influence independent of party issues and what is to be the result of all these new questions time alone can develop, for the most intelectual far seeing politician dare not prognosticate. And again it is hinted that Grant is gradually slopping over to the democracy and may perchance become the nominee for his present exalted office. Time alone will unravel the mystic uncertain future and for that proper time to arrive we shall await with christian patience and prayerful hearts.

The weather is delightfully cool and pleasant; yesterday being Sunday a general and cheerful holiday was enjoyed by over 20,000 people in Central Park the Park never looked lovelier, or more inviting; there seems to have been a generous spirit of rivalry between art and nature, rather of emulation than opposition, as to which could do the most for this great breathing spot of this overcrowded metropolis. There is no tax levied in N. Y. more cheerfully paid by all classes than the taxes for the support of this truly delightful retreat; here all are on an equality, no reserved seats for jewelled aristocracy no private boxes for pilfering office holders, no invidious distinctions known or recognized here.

Present in conclusion to my old friend of the triped Jno. L. Davis Esq renewed assurances of my regard and esteem, tell him for me I remember well his sweet tooth for squabs on toast and soft shell crabs, that I longed for him yesterday as I saw upon the dinner table before me those two palatable dishes and thought what splendid stuffing they would make for Davis to expand on (or is he opposed to inflation?) I know he is so fond of sustenance. By the way my dear Tom I met our mutual friend Eli Perkins on Saturday last he remembers you with feelings of the liveliest satisfaction and sends you the enclosed plate of his new currency, he is still on the Graphic. When I met him he was unaccompanied by his old Pal the redoubtable Geo. Francis Train who in his unfortunate Semi compos mentis state so honestly and earnestly endeavored to render the late visit of your Hoosier Editorial Hash Hunters pleasant and agreeable. I told Eli you had editorially acknowledged his urbanity in the columns of the COURIER to which he returned a low bow in happy satisfied acknowledgement. I will not strain your columns with more today—when your readers and yourself shall have recovered from the effects of this lengthy and tedious epistle, with a fiendish delight I will inflict another dose upon you Truly E. L. C.

NUMBER 18.

The first fair day after this, we found two bee trees, cut them, and took the honey. We (eight) ate all the honey we wanted for twenty days, (and we had but little to eat except bread and honey) and on returning to Montgomery county, we had twenty one gallons of strained honey left. We will interrupt 'Uncle Abram' in his narrative to remark that when it is remembered that it was in Butler Township that Wesley Park and Joseph Miller, lay out in the woods on a rainy night with "new milk fresh from the cow" for their bill of fare, surely it might have been said that Butler was "a land flowing with milk and honey."

But let us hear Uncle Abram's "coon story"—wish I could tell it on paper as he did orally—with his expressive jovial countenance and an occasional interlude in the form of a hearty laugh—wish I could but I can't. "After finding the bee trees,' says he, " Andrew surface found a hollow log with too 'coons' in, and cutting them out he brought them to our shanty. We took the hides off, and hung the meat out in the frost over night, and in the morning, Charley Crouse, who was our cook, prepared them for our breakfast. Being rather meat hungry, we all ate heartily of them, except, John Surface, who declared he would starve first—though he ate some of the gravy. After breakfast, we all went too cutting and hewing logs making clapboards. John did'nt pull the saw very well "Ah,' said I to him. ,'You dod'nt eat coon or you could have sawed better.'—Presently he thought the saw went too hard and that he must have the iron wedge from the shanty to drive in the kerf.

My father, Peter Fair, was lying in the shanty and John supposed he was a sleep So he went to the skillet where there was a quarter of 'coon' left from breakfast, and taking off the lid, he took up the meat and after smelling it awhile applied his teeth and stripped the bone in short order. All this time my father lay pretending asleep, but struggling to keep from laughing. When John returned and took hold of the saw again, I remarked to him, that he must have either been eating coon or smelling of it he pulled so much the stronger. When Crouse went in to cook dinner my father told the joke and it was sometime before John heard the last of the coon 'story.'

I was 23 years of age," says' uncle Abram,'when I moved into the Township, 24 years ago. I then weight 160 pounds and my wife, 140. Now I weigh, 210 and my wife, 200. We have had 11 children born in the Township, and nine are still living. In the 24 years I have not lost as many hours by sickness I am now six feet 4½ inches high, and there never has been cleared land enough in Dekalb County to throw me down on. I still live on the farm first settled, and have never moved but once— from one part of my farm to another." In 1835, besides the families of the above named eight pioneers the Holbrooks, Louis and Lymon, Joseph Stroup, Henry Miller, Michael Miller, and perhaps some others whose names I have not been fortunate enough to get, moved into the Township. In the spring of 1836' Wm. Surface, John Gragg, and James Bell moved in. The same sprin g, Robert Work, Esq., was married in the Township though a resident of Allen County, at that time. This was the first marriage in the Township, and perhaps the first in the County. Judge McMakin of Fort Wayne officiated, and Abram Fair and wife, were the attendants upon the groom and bride.

Sanford Bassett, moved in 1837; John Neal, John Emory and Henry Fair, in 1839, and George Ensley, in 1841. The Clarks were early settlers in the Township but we have not date of their settlement Two of them Isaac and Stephen, became Methodist preachers in an early day.

Orrin C. Clark, is quite a prominent and influential citizen of the Township, and has filled several township office ably and acceptably. Wm. Day was the first Justice of the Township. He came into Jackson Township in 1736 with his relative William Miller, and afterwards, settled, where Henry Hogue, recently resided, George Ensly was the second.— He was elected in 1843, and resigned in 1844 Wm. McAnnally was elected in his place, and, at the expiration of his term, George R. Huffman succeeded Daniel Moody was an early settler, and succeeded Peter Fair as County commissioners Hon Robert Work has filled several county offices, and was senatorial delegate in the convention that framed the new constitutions of our State.

Everybody should patronize the dance to commence on to-morrow evening and continue until Saturday evening, at Ensley hall.

Croquet season has a poor show for ending in this place. Every commons has a crowd of boys and girls amusing themselves with the cue.

A huge tooth was found on the Brumback farm, near Corunna, while digging a ditch, that weighed 4 pounds and 10 ounces.

If there is any good in Old Settler's Meetings, and they seem to be greatly encouraged in other counties, we don't see why we should not have one here.

Keep the sidewalks clear, on business streets, of all obstructions, and it will help the looks of our town to the eye of the stranger.

The social of the M. E. church will meet at the residence of Mr. Welch, on Wednesday afternoon and evening, July 8th, 1874 All are invited.

A very cheap way to cremate is to bedew a few live coals with coal oil. Those who desire to see the "beautiful gates ajar" are recommended to try this.

It is thought that the wheat harvest will not commence generally until about the 10th of July' but steady hot weather may cause it to be cut before that time.

Our town is crowded with strangers, and you can hear the old tune of, "who's this and who's that," on any corner you may stop.

A number of our readers have complimented the interesting articles from N. Y. in our last weeks issue. We give others this week, and we know all will be much interested in their perusal.

We understand quite a large excursion party will go over the Eel River road to Butler on the Fourth. We hope they will be able to stop off at Auburn a short time on their return.

The Methodist have given up the dinner on the Fourth, and the band will conduct the affair. Everyone in town should patronize this dinner as the money will be used to a good advantage.

Grand Celebration !

OF THE 4TH OF JULY!

In Auburn

There will be an old fashioned celebration at this place the coming Fourth, and a good time is expected.

Hon John McSweeny,

AND

Gen. BILL GIBSON

of Ohio, and

HON. R. C. BELL,

of Fort Wayne, have been invited as the Orators of the day.

SPEECHES, MUSIC, FUN

A grand Parade by the SPANISH BANDITS will take place during the day.

A large amount of

Fire Works

have been procured for the evening

There will be a Foot Race, Wheelbarrow Race and other amusing features.

Music by the Auburn Cornet Band !

AND THE

GLEE CLUB!

A DANCE will be given at Ensly's hall Friday and Saturday evenings.

DR. J. H. FORD,
President of the day.

CAPT. H. E. ALTENBURG,
Marshal of the day.

We have a new tin shop in the building formerly occupied by Joe Link, on Seventh-st.

On to-morrow evening there will be a meeting, at the Court House to make arrangements for the Spanish Bandits on the Fourth.

If you would avoid sun stroke and find greatful relief from the beating rays of 'Old Sol' put handful of fresh leaves in the crown of your hat. Try it and see if you are not paid for your trouble!

Kill all the old potato bugs. One old bug of the proper gender is capable of producing over 300 eggs in a single season, so by killing one old bug, you put a veto on 300 more.

It is announced in other localities that since corn meal and potatoes have reached their present gild-edged condition, the aristocracy consider it vulgar to diet upon any other food.

Tom Mays tells how to find the comet in last evening's two-penny, fourteen by ten Nothing like enterprise, even if you do go twenty miles for it.—Gazette.

The way of the transgressor is hard, and few there be that find it—otherwise.

There is every indication of having a good time here on the Fourth. Hon R. C Bell, of Fort Wayne, will positively deliver an oration, and being a fine speaker it will be an enjoyable feature. Everybody far and near should attend.

Sammy Pomert has prepared ,for the Fourth, and in what way do you suppose. Well sir, he's went off some where or other and got a swan(der), one that is worthy of man's protection. Good luck, Samuel, and may you both live long and prosper is the wish of the COURIER office.

Jason Hubble Esq long a resident of Butler in this county died a few days ago at his residence, at the ripe age of over eighty years.

The political fever boiled and bubbled at Fort Wayne last Saturday. Strange to say that out of the dozen or more candidates for each office only one was nominated There were a few who did not anticipate such a result. A good ticket was nominated.

Persons having in their possession mutilated fractional currency, have, according to the new postal code, only to take it to the postoffice where it will be placed in a registered package and sent to Washington for redemption and return free of charge.

A little boy ran into a house on Jackson street last Saturday, crying at the top of his voice because another boy would not let him put mud on his head with a shingle. Some children are just like their parents—no accommodation about them.

THE BALTIMORE ROAD.—Work is being pushed rapidly on the Baltimore road in this Co. The track will be laid to Avilla th's week, and the bridge across the St. Joe will be finished in the same time. Inside of three weeks we will have a connection east over this road. Regular trains are running to Defiance now. Two trains are employed in ballasting the road and one in laying track.

With all the complaints of hard times, there was never a larger number of people going to Europe in search of pleasure.—Ten steamers loaded down with tourists left New York on Saturday. And yet the laboring classes have to work even harder and pinch themselves in order to get along. What will be the result if things keep on as they have commenced under the Grant party. And yet Grant is endorsed by the Radical party of this State.

The first annual commencement of the Indiana Conservatory of music, was held at Fort Wayne last week. The exercises were of an interesting character, and all present were well pleased. Several of our professors of music were in attendance, among whom was Miss Balcome now teaching here, and giving entire satisfaction. The Gazette says, that Miss Balcome's performance on the piano was very fine and highly praised.

Charles Evans, a youth of twenty one years, who is soon to be executed at Corrollton, Ill., has made a confession, in which he admits that he did the deed for the money. He concludes by the following strange request: "I know I have been guilty of terrible crime, and have no doubt that I will be hung. If so I do not want to be hung in jail, but in public, where everybody can witness it, especially the little boys. I have a little brother at home that I want to have see me hung, and I want my father to bring him. I think it would be an advantage to boys to see such a sight."—Ex

The Hippodrome at New York, of which we gave a discription a short time ago, still turns out its modicum of accidents. We take the following from the New York Sun: "Miss Alice Costineydia was one of the four riders in the hurdle race in Barnum's Hippodrome yesterday afternoon.—She rode the racer named Castor, and the weight of the young lady and equipments was about 170 pounds—too great a burden. She was holding the reins with her left hand and lashing Castor with a whip held in her right, when he leaped for a hurdle too quickly, and struck his knees squarely on it. The rider was thrown on her left side, and the horse rolled over upon her. The following horse stepped on her breast, but not heavily. The employees who ran to her side found her insensible. They carried her to the dressing rooms, where Dr. Buttles dressed her hurts. The horse Castor lived but a few seconds.

The following persons have been chosen Vice Presidents, from the different townships, for the 4th.

C. C. Clark—Butler.
L. D. Britton—Richland.
John Treesh—Fairfield.
John Lease—Smithfield.
T. R. Dickerson—Waterloo
M. Waterman—Franklin

If any body believes that the fools are all dead, all they have to do to dispel the pleasant illusion is to visit some circus and see the swarms of gamblers pluck the unsophisticated greeneys. It is singular that men in this enlightened day, when it is almost impossible to read a newspaper without finding from one to a dozen warnings against bunco games and all kinds of gamblers and dead beats should be so verdant as to bite at the transparent hooks set for them. But the victims play the gamblers' games with the full hope and expectation of getting some thing for nothing, or of beating the dealers, and if they get cleaned out they are not entitled to sympathy.

AT LAST—The buildings which constitute the block on the north side of the Court House, have at last been finished, the plasters closing up the rear on yesterday. It has been so long since the first lick was struck in their construction, that it appears like an age. Chicago and Boston have been rebuilt since that time, and other minor events have transpired, and yet we ought to be proud of this fine structure. There was no premature haste displayed and to this alone are we indebted for the handsomest block in the county. The only one thing that can eclipse this is the erection of a similar block on the west side, where a wooden row now detracts from the general appearance and beauty of the place. We can afford to wait even as long after the first step if the they will but make that.

Rodney B. King, living in the northern part of this village, has been missing since Thursday last. He has for two years or more been at work on the railroad, and recently has been boarding at Ft. Wayne near which place he was working. On Thursday morning he started out with some fellow-workmen, to one of whom, John Price, he gave his dinner pail, saying he had some business to transact in town, and if he did not reach the train in time to start with the other workmen he would go down the road to where they were to work, by passenger train. Since the time nothing has been heard of him, and it is feared that has been foully dealt with.—He had about fifty dollars in his possession. King is about thirty years old, five feet five or six inches in hight, slightly built, dark complexion, black hair and mustache.

His friends are in great distress on account of his absence and his wife, who has been in poor health for some weeks, has been rendered much worse by this trial.—Angola Republican.

NOTICE.

To Contractors.

Pursuant to an order of the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County, Indiana, made at an adjourned session, held on the 19th day of June A. D. 1874, sealed proposals will be received at the Auditor's office in Auburn, in said County, until the 7th day of August, A. D. 1874, for the construction of a bridge across the little St. Joseph River on the Public Highway running south on the section line, between sections thirteen and fourteen, in Concord-tp., in said county. Plans and specifications for said bridge can be seen at the Auditor's office of said county.

THE MYSTERY OF THE HUMAN HEART.

BY OWEN MEREDITH.

Midnight past! Not a sound of aught
  Through the silent house but the wind at his prayers.
I sat by the dying fire and thought
  Of the dear, dead woman up-stairs.

A night of tears; for the gusty rain
  Had ceased, but the eaves were dripping yet;
And the moon looked forth, as though in pain,
  With her face all white and wet.

Nobody with me my watch to keep,
  But the friend of my bosom, the man I love;
And grief has sent him fast asleep
  In the chamber up above.

Nobody else, in the country-place
  All round, that knew of my loss beside,
But the good young priest with the Raphael-face,
  Who confessed her when she died.

That good young priest is of gentle nerve,
  And my grief had moved him beyond control;
For his lip grew white, as I could observe,
  When he speeded her parting soul.

I sat by the dreary hearth alone;
  I thought of the pleasant days of yore;
I said, "The staff of my life is gone;
  The woman I love is no more.

"On her cold, dead bosom my portrait lies,
  Which next to her heart she used to wear,
Haunting it o'er with her tender eyes
  When my face was not there.

"It is set all around with rubies red,
  And pearls which a Peri might have kept;
For each ruby there my heart hath bled—
  For each pearl my eyes have wept."

And I said, "The thing is precious to me;
  They will bury her soon in the churchyard-clay;
It lies on her heart, and lost must be
  If I do not take it away."

I lighted my lamp at the dying flame,
  And crept up the stairs that cracked for fright,
Till into the chamber of death I came
  Where she lay in all her white.

As I stretched my hand I held my breath;
  I turned as I drew the curtain apart;
I dared not look on the face of death,
  I knew where to find her heart.

I thought, at first, as my touch fell there,
  It had warmed that heart to life with love;
For the thing I touched was warm, I swear,
  And I could feel it move.

'Twas the hand of a man, that was moving slow
  O'er the heart of the dead—from the other side;
And at once the sweat broke over my brow—
  "Who is robbing the corpse?" I cried.

Opposite me, by the taper's light,
  The friend of my bosom, the man I loved,
Stood over the corpse, and all as white—
  And neither of us moved.

"What do you here, my friend?" . . The man Looked first at me, and then at the dead.
"There is a portrait here," he began;
  "There is. It is mine!" I said.

Said the friend of my bosom, "Yours, no doubt,
  The portrait was, till a month ago,
When this suffering angel took that out,
  And placed mine here, I know."

"This woman, she loved me well," said I.
  "A month ago," said my friend to me.
"And in your throat," I groaned, "you lie!"
  He answered: . . "Let us see."

"Enough!" I returned; "let the dead decide;
  And, whoever the portrait prove,
His shall it be when the cause is tried
  Where Death is arraigned by Love."

We found the portrait there, in its place;
  We opened it in the taper's shine;
The gems were all unchanged; the face
  Was—neither his nor mine.

"One nail drives out another, at least!
  The face of the portrait there," I cried,
"Is your friend's, the Raphael-faced young priest,
  Who confessed her when she died."

AUNT CHARLOTTE'S YARN.

"Now, Ida, my dear girl, take my advice," said Aunt Charlotte to her young niece, "and don't imperil your own future happiness nor be guilty of injustice by slighting the man to whom you have given your troth, or by foolishly teasing him in order to test his affection. There is a story in my own memory that I have never told you; and I could not now bring myself to do so only that I see you don't like me to lecture you, and I wish you to learn wisdom by an easier method than that of bitter experience.

"When I was a young girl we lived, as you know, in Canada, in one of the small lake-shore towns between Toronto and Kingston. Your grandfather was a man of note in the town, and I was a good deal sought after. I was giddy, too, and selfish, though I did not then consider myself so. I had many admirers and suitors, among whom the one I liked best was Harry Vane. From my very infancy Harry had been my gallant, and though I sometimes pretended to be, and sometimes really was, jealous of him or otherwise offended, and he the same with regard to me, we always made up again and were better friends than ever ever. There was not really any engagement between us, though Harry had asked me to form one; but my parents objected to long engagements, and we were not ready to marry. Matters stood thus when, early one spring, we had an addition to our list of beaux in the form of a dashing young fellow, an Englishman, sent out by a wealthy firm of the mother country for the purpose of establishing an agency in their line of business. His headquarters had been at Montreal, but he now announced his intention of making our town his home during the summer.

"He had a good deal of leisure, and spent no inconsiderable part of it at our house, or in promenading the streets with me. I could scarcely set my feet on the sidewalks without encountering him. His name was Bowns, and he claimed to be of aristocratic parentage. He was handsome and affable, though rather supercilious, withal very distinguished in appearance; so no wonder the girls of our set wished to attract his attention, and were envious of me. Of course I was proud of my conquest, and perhaps carried myself a little haughtily in consequence. For some time Harry pouted, then openly remonstrated, even pleaded; but as I angrily asserted my independence, he finally desisted from all apparent notice of the matter; and whenever we met he treated me with indifferent courtesy, and altogether showed a manly self-command, which I did not fail to note and admire. Still I must confess that at that time I gave very little thought to Harry or to any of my old admirers; it seemed wonderful to me how completely I was fascinated by the prepossessing stranger.

"To be sure he flattered my vanity not a little, and my empty head was turned by his lavish, adulatory style of compliments. He raved about my eyes of heavenly blue, the golden glory of my mermaid locks, my swan-like neck, and an endless flow of bathos that ought to have disgusted me, but did not; and so I listened and he ranted. About the middle of August we made up among our set a picnic party to drive out to Rice Lake Plains and spend the day in boating on the lake, gathering huckleberries, wild flowers, etc., and generally amusing ourselves.

"You must know that there is an irregular chain of small lakes extending transversely from the Bay of Quinte, near the eastern end of Lake Ontario, to the eastern end of Superior. Rice lake is the first of the chain counting from Ontario, and it lies at a distance of from two to four hours' drive from several small towns on the frontier. We had an early breakfast, and set out at 8 o'clock, so that we need not be on the road during the heat of the day. There were several carriages; the one in which I rode was a handsome barouche hired from a livery-stable for the occasion, and by my side sat the all-conquering Mr. Bowns.

"For some unexplained reason Harry Vane did not go in any of the carriages, but was mounted on horseback, and he rode gayly by the side of first one vehicle, then another. When we had gone a little distance out of town the country air, sights and sounds were so exhilarating that we in our carriage began to sing. Harry, hearing us, rode up and joined in the song, he being particularly fond of singing. Shortly we struck off into an old ditty which he and I had sung together countless times when we stood each first in the esteem of the other and no gay stranger had come between us. For a stanza or two Harry sang bravely, but when he came to the refrain suddenly his horse bolted and he rode off, catching at his hat with one hand and seeming to draw rein with the other. The remainder of the party thought his horse had shied and run away with him, but I saw thoroughly the whole maneuver, and a sudden pang shot through my selfish heart.

"On reaching the lake at the point agreed upon, we separated into little companies, and wandered about at will, but keeping within the vicinity of the camp until the horn sounded for dinner. We were all, as is is usual at picnics, in hungry mood, and we did not dine mincingly.

"After dinner we lolled about on the grass for awhile, then formed plans for the afternoon's campaign. There were near by several canoes or row-boats that were kept for hire, and a far proportion of our band decided in favor of an excursion on the lake, some parties going in one direction, some in another. The boats would accommodate only four persons each, the rowers and two others. Three boat-loads, twelve individuals in all, determined to pay a visit to the tower on the opposite shore of the lake, and about three miles farther up. As we divided ourselves into parties of four, I felt an irrepressible desire to have Harry Vane, who had declared for the tower, in our boat, so I called out:

"'Harry, are you coming with us?' meaning by us, Bowns and myself.

"I shall never forget the look of mingled pain and pleasure with which he replied: 'No, Charlotte; George Law is quartered in your boat.'

"It was half-past three o'clock when we landed near the tower and drew the boats up on the beach. This tower was an octagon building three or four stories in height, consisting of only one room to each story, with a narrow spiral staircase leading from base to summit. At the top was an observatory not much larger than a good-sized bird-cage, which had once been furnished with a small telescope mounted on a swivel, but was now reduced to a very commonplace spy-glass. The basement was a deep, dungeon-like hole, with a grated door through which one entered a subterranean passage leading out to the shore of the lake. This tower, with its lean-to kitchen, or, rather, cook-house, was built on a hill at the distance of about two hundred yards from the water's edge, and was the product of a Quixotic Englishman, an old bachelor's fancy. The whimsical man did not carry out his original intention of making a complete miniature castle of the feudal times, but suddenly abandoned the enterprise and went, as he came, nobody knew whither. This odd little tower had been surrounded on all sides, save the deep bank next the water, by a diminutive moat, which was now a dry ditch filled with weeds and wild flowers; there, too, was the wreck of a toy-like drawbridge, and within the inclosure were several quaint-looking garden-chairs cut into the stumps of trees. There was a family residing in the house, at least they made it an occasional residence during the summer, but that day they were absent, and the garrulous old servant in charge showed us over the premises.

"We stole down by the light of a lantern through the underground passages to the opening on the lake; we climbed the steep stairs and peeped through the old spy-glass; sat in the grotesque chairs, and gathered bouquets from the quondam moat. All these vagaries consumed so much time that, before we were aware, the sun was going down the westward slope in a way that, when we noticed it, sent us to our boats with speed. We were soon gliding over the water in jovial spirits and at a fair rate of motion toward the camping place on the shore next home. The three boats kept near together, and as we went we sang Tom Moore's Canadian boat-song. Just as our voices were ringing out

"'Row brothers, row, for the stream runs fast,
The rapids are near and the daylight is past,'

a sudden breeze almost took the light umbrella with which I was screening myself and companion from sun and wind (we had left our bonnets at the camp) out of my hand. The breeze subsided for a moment, then came again more vigorously than before, and held on steadily. Generally or frequently a stiff breeze rises on those lakes about or soon after sunset, but now the sun was certainly half an hour high. Sudden squalls, especially when thunder clouds are hovering near, accompanied by dangerous disturbance of the water, are unpleasantly often the concomitants of boating on those shallow lakes.

"Looking around the horizon we discovered the cause of the suddenly rising wind. A heavy pile of black clouds coming up behind us in the northwest were spreading themselves along the northern horizon and extending upward almost to the zenith; and at the same time we began to hear the thunder mutter and see the lightning play, though not very near. The weather-wise ones of our party said the shower was spending itself north of us, but we might get a sprinkling from its skirts, and the wind was sure to be trouble-some.

"Meanwhile we had crossed the lake and were making our way down to the landing adjoining, which was our camp, keeping close in shore to avoid the commotion of the water.

"There is a peculiarity in that lake. The wild rice, from which it takes its name, grows over almost the entire bottom of the basin, and when at its tallest the grain lies floating on the surface of the water, and the Indians, when it is ripe, paddle round and gather it into their canoes. This, however, makes navigation for ordinary rowers rather difficult; and where the bottom is particularly shallow, when the waters are agitated by storms the passage is perilous.

"I soon perceived that Bowns and George Law were by no means masters of the situation; and oh, how I longed for the steady, trusty arm of Harry Vane to steer our giddy little skiff. Just then Harry, who was ahead, called out to us to make for an islet, a little way out in the lake, on one side of which there was not much rice, and which had been used by the Indians as a landing-place, as it sloped gradually into the water; he said we had better land there and wait for the squall to pass over.

"The rowers turned the boat toward the islet and pushed out vigorously, I meantime holding the umbrella low like a tent or awning over my own head and Nellie Morton's, for now it was raining. Again Harry called to us to shut down the umbrella, lest it should catch the wind and upset our skiff, and the next moment, Bowns, who had not said a word to us girls since the wind sprung up, snapped out, 'Yes, certainly, down with that umbrella!'

"What with a sense of danger, and what with sudden consternation at being spoken to in such a tone and manner, I had no self-command, and in shutting the umbrella I somehow lost my balance, and the next instant I was sinking in the blinding waters.

"I must have risen very quickly, for the boat was there and I laid my hand on its side, but quick as a flash Bown's hand came down on mine, and though he afterward said that he tried to lay hold of me to assist me, I knew that he dislodged my hand. True, I should have upset the boat, and just as true he flung me off to perish. As I sank again, even through the gurgling in my ears, I heard Harry Vane, 'Courage, Charlotte, I'm coming.'

"Again I rose and again sank. Then I ceased to struggle and the pain of suffocation was gone. I knew that I was dying, and like electricity all my past life flashed before me. I had no terror of death, but I longed to ask Harry's pardon. Bowns I seemed to have forgotten. The tall rice was all about me, and I knew no more until a deadly sickness and great pain woke me to consciousness. Was it the gurgling water or human speech that rumbled in my ears? I did not know, I did not care; I only wished not to be disturbed—not to suffer.

"Slowly my comprehension returned and I found myself on a bed in the log-cabin of the man who kept the boats on hire, and it was night, for candles were burning. Some of my companions of the picnic were there, but I was too ill and weary to ask questions.

"When next I opened my eyes it was daylight and my father and mother were bending over me.

"Suddenly I remembered something of the drowning and I cried out, 'Where is Harry? He said he was coming.'

"They hushed and soothed me and I suppose administered a narcotic, for I have only a faint recollection of lying on a bed in a covered conveyance and of being annoyed by the jolting.

"The next time I awoke my mind was clear, I recollected all, and begged to be told how I was saved. My friends evaded this questson, and my suspicions being aroused, I demanded to see Harry Vane. Finding they could no longer put me off, they told me that Harry rescued me and swam with me toward the islet, where one of the boats had just landed. Another gentleman waded out breast high to meet him, and drew me to the shore, supposing that Harry was following. But Harry did not follow, and in the excitement about me he was not missed until too late. Whether he was exhausted or whether he took a cramp no one could tell. This only I know and never shall forget: Harry Vane was drowned in saving my life. This also I know: I shall live and die Charlotte Kemp. As for Bowns, I hated then, I hate still, the sound of his name. He left our town almost immediately after the occurrence; and I never saw his face after the day of the picnic."

Twelve Children in Twenty Months.

The Sharpsville (Penn.) Advertiser quotes the following statement from another paper: "We have before us a clipping from a copy of Liberty Hall, published in this city in 1816, where a most marvelous phenomenon is related—the name of the physician being given—of a Mrs. John Kelly, of Mercer county, Pennsylvania, who had just given birth to five children, that being the second effort of the kind within twelve months, or ten children born within the year." And the Advertiser adds this: "Mrs. Kelly, referred to above, resided in Lackawannock township. Mrs. Wallace, now residing in this place, remembers the circumstances of the birth of the ten children very well, having been present on both occasions. Dr. Magoffin, of Mercer, was the physician. Mrs. Kelly died about a year after this event, but in the meantime had twins, having given birth to twelve children within twenty months. Mr. Kelly is still living, and now resides at Sharon."

A "SPORT."—The following dialogue, which took place in a street car a few days ago, is too good to be lost: One of a couple of Teutonic gentlemen sitting in one end of the car seeing a "dashily" dressed fellow come in and take his seat at an opposite end from where they were sitting, asked: "Who ish dat, Hans?" "Oh, dat is a sphort, hey?" "Vhat you call a sphort, hey?" "Ton't you know?" "No, vat is he?" "Vel, he is one of der fellers vat shaves all de hair off a pig, and cover him all over mit soap, and pet a green Dutchman $5 he can't catch him."—Raleigh Sentinel.

A MAGNIFICENT feather cloak was wasted when King Lunalilo was buried. They wrapped him in it, though it was worth $100,000; as if a cheaper article would not have served the distinguished corpse as well; a million of birds of rare plumage were sacrificed to furnish the material of which this gorgeous garment was made, and it had been handed down to Lunalilo through generations of royal chieftains.

FRATERNITY is the most incongruous word in the French language, and every time the fatal four sylables are written on the walls of Paris, civil war follows. In the great revolution, "fraternity" cost 202,290 lives; in 1848, 39,563; in 1871, 57,627. The word is also expensive, as in February, 1848, 1,500 barricades were raised in Paris, which, allowing 848 paving-stones to each, would make a total of 1,267,500 torn up by the "sovereign people;" 3,013 trees were uprooted, 3,704 lamps broken, and innumerable police offices burnt down.

The Lion.

Dr. Livingstone is said to have expressed the utmost contempt for lions. "You talk about the majesty of the lion," said he, chatting one day at a party in London with Sir Edmund Landseer, "but you do not know the beast. There is no more majesty about him in the forest than there is about that poodle. It is all poetry. Lions are arrant cowards—cowardly, sneaking beasts. You can hardly tell a lion from a donkey when you come upon him in the forest; and if you come upon a lion suddenly, his first impulse is to tuck his tail between his legs and bolt. He will spring upon you if he comes upon you unawares, and can have time to crouch, but if a man has the courage to look the lion in the face, you need not even cock your rifle."

Lincoln's Dream As Told by Dickens.

I dined with Charles Sumner last Sunday, against my rule; and, as I had stipulated for no party, Mr. Secretary Stanton was the only other guest besides his own secretary. Stanton is a man with a very remarkable memory, and extraordinarily familiar with my books. He and Sumner were the first two public men at the dying President's bedside, and having remained with him until he breathed his last, we fell into a very interesting conversation after dinner, when, each of them giving his own narrative separately, the usual discrepancies as to details of time were observable. Then Mr. Stanton told me a curious little story, which will form the remainder of this short letter. On the afternoon of the day on which the President was shot, there was a Cabinet council, at which he presided. Mr. Stanton, being at the time commander-in-chief of the Northern troops that were concentrated about here, arrived rather late. Indeed, they were waiting for him, and on his entering the room, the President broke off in something he was saying, and remarked: "Let us proceed to business, gentlemen." Mr. Stanton then noticed, with great surprise, that the President sat with an air of dignity in his chair, instead of lolling about in the most ungainly attitudes, as his invariable custom was, and that instead of telling irrelevant or questionable stories he was grave and calm, and quite a different man. Mr. Stanton, on leaving the council with the Attorney-General, said to him: "That is the most satisfactory Cabinet meeting I have attended for many a long day. What an extraordinary change in Mr. Lincoln!" The Attorney-General replied: "We all saw that before you came in. While we were waiting for you, he said, with his chin down on his breast, 'Gentlemen, something very extraordinary is going to happen, and that very soon.'" To which the Attorney-General had observed, "Something good, sir, I hope." When the President answered very gravely, "I don't know, I don't know; but it will happen, and shortly, too." As they were all impressed by his manner, the Attorney-General took him up again: "Have you received any information, sir, not yet disclosed to us?" "No," answered the President; "but I have had a dream, and I have now had the same dream three times—once on the night preceding the battle of Bull Run; once on the night preceding such another (naming a battle not favorable to the North)." His chin sunk on his breast again, and he sat reflecting. "Might one ask the nature of this dream, sir?" said the Attorney-General. "Well," replied the President, without lifting his head or changing his attitude, "I am on a great, broad, rolling river, and I am in a boat—and I drift and I drift—but this is not business," suddenly raising his face, and looking round the table as Mr. Stanton entered, "Let us proceed to business, gentlemen." Mr. Stanton and the Attorney-General said, as they walked on together, it would be curious to notice whether anything ensued on this; and they agreed to notice. He was shot that night.—Forster's Life of Dickens.

A Blind Leader of the Blind.

The remarkable faculty of James Moore, a man 35 years old, and blind from his birth, is thus described by the Cleveland Herald:

"One year ago Dr. D. B. Smith, of this city, removed the balls of his eyes from his head, and Mr. Moore has been employed in his office since that time for the purpose of receiving visitors when the doctor is absent. He appears in every respect different in his movements from ordinary blind persons, and, as he wears green glasses, few persons who meet him are aware of his infirmity. When desired to go on an errand, he finds his way without difficult, and he has rendered himself so familiar with the streets of Cleveland that he rarely has to inquire. Although he carries a cane he hardly ever permits it to touch the sidewalk, seeming to be guided by intuition away from contact with obstacles. His sense of hearing is so acute that he is able to state whether a street is narrow or broad by means of the sound of the footsteps of persons passing along on the opposite side. When crossing a street he manages to avoid the vehicles, stopping and waiting in the middle, if necessary, until the coast is clear, it being indicated to him by sound. He is frequently sent to conduct blind patients who do not possess his wonderful faculties to Charity Hospital from his employer's office. Sometimes he will walk, guiding their tottering steps, and at others will take a street-car, stationing himself on Euclid avenue, and inquiring before stepping on board if it is the right one. He can remove every speck of dust from the furniture of an office or parlor, handling the most fragile articles without breaking or damaging them in the least."

A Gambler's Endurance.

The Prairie Farmer, of Chicago, says: Stories of endurance bordering on the incredible have been told of persons in almost every walk in life. The miles walked by slaves through forest and cane-swamp to gain their liberty; the hours spent in watching by a mother over the cradle of her sick child; the watch kept by a sentinel at a post of danger; the outlook by a discoverer on the deck of his vessel, have all been the theme of the poet and biographer. But none of these examples of endurance compare with that of a professional gambler in this city. One day last week he went into a faro den and sat down "to fight the tiger." He alternately lost and won, won and lost, till his total losses amounted to $11,900 over his winnings. Several parties joined in the game for a few hours each; one man would act as dealer till he was worn out, when another would take his place; but the gambler held his seat at the table for fifty hours, during which time he never tasted food or closed his eyes in sleep. It is a question whether patriotism, affection, or duty in any form ever led a person to such a feat of endurance.

Interrupted Essay on the Mother-in-Law.

Mr. Popkins, who for seven years has been the owner of a preposterously positive and preternaturally perplexing mother-in-law, has written a lecture. He was out in the back yard last night rehearsing it. Our contributor was out in his back yard and heard the opening chapter. It was something like this:

"No husband who has ever properly studied his mother-in-law can fail to be aware that woman's perception of heartless villainy and evidences of intoxication in man is often of that curiously fine order of vision which rather exceeds the best efforts of ordinary microscopes, and subjects the average human mind to considerable astonishment. The perfect ease with which she can detect murderous proclivities, Mormon institutes and addiction to maddening liquors in a daughter's husband, who, to the most searching inspection of everybody else, appears the most watery, henpecked and generally intimidated young man of his age, is one of those common illustrations of the infallible acuteness of feminine judgment, which are doing more and more every day to establish the positive necessity of woman's superior insight and natural dispassionate firmness of mind for the future wisest exercise of the elective franchise and most just administrtion of the highest judicial office.

"It may be said that the mother-in-law is the highest development of the supernatural perceptive and positive woman, since she usually has superior opportunities for the study of man in all stages from marriage to madness, but with her whole sex inherits an alertness of observation, as to the incredible viciousness of the masculine character, which nothing less than a prompt and liberal application of flattery, or a happy equivocal reflection upon some rival sister, can either divert or mislead for a moment."

Mr. Popkins' mother-in-law had also been an unseen listener up to this point, when Mr. Popkins became conscious of an audience consisting of a very red head, gleaming eyes, and a full set of vibratory teeth moving toward him; a pair of arms bared from the fists to elbow, with hands resting upon her lips adding to the spirit of the picture. Mr. Popkins immediately retired through the back gate, seeming to feel as though he had stayed long enough. It is more than probable he had.—Detroit Free Press.

A Dumb Dialogue.

It wrenches one badly to step on the wrong stair, but few can help laughing at the awful strides he makes. It is equally funny to see a man meet the wrong "customer," and go to talking and gesticulating at him as if he were somebody else.

Jones went to the deaf and dumb asylum the other day to inspect the institution. Upon entering he encountered a man, evidently an inmate, and he at once endeavored to explain to the man by making signs upon his fingers that he wanted to look through the place. The man also made signs which Jones could not comprehend. Then Jones made other and more elaborate motions, which set the man at work with greater violence, and for the next ten minutes they stood in the hall gesticulating and twisting their fingers without either being able to comprehend what the other meant. Finally Jones became angry, and in an outburst of wrath exclaimed:

"O! get out, you idiot! I'm tired of bothering with you!"

Thereupon the man said, "That's just what I was going to say about you."

"Oh! you can speak, can you? Then why didn't you do so, and not keep me standing motioning to you? I thought you were deaf and dumb."

"And I thought you were," said the man.

"I came here to inspect the asylum," said Jones, "and I took you for a patient."

"That's what I came here for, and I thought you were an attendant," said the man.

Here Jones and the man shook hands and hunted up a genuine attendant, and went away happy. After this, Jones will always use his tongue, no matter where he is.

Presence of Mind.

Says the Portland (Me.) Press: On Tuesday, a woman, who resides at Ferry village, and who comes over to the city frequently to assist families in their house-cleaning, started to return to the Cape in the evening, but was too late to catch the last ferry-boat. Although a young woman of considerable personal attraction, she is not devoid of pluck, and she determined to walk home by way of Portland bridge. The hour was late, between 10 and 11, but the woman trudged along, carrying a large bundle which had been given her by the family with whom she had been working. As she passed the little clump of woods on the cross-road that connects the Cape Elizabeth road with Ferry village, a man suddenly stepped forth with the remark: "Good evening, Miss, allow me to escort you home." "Thank you sir," said the woman—bold as a lion, where most women would have been scared to death—"but unless you have had the small-pox, I would advise you not to approach me. I am only allowed to go out in the evening, and am now taking some soiled linen from a patient, to be washed." It may be unnecessary to remark that the individual in question gasped out an "Oh, Lord!" and the last seen of him was a pair of coat-tails making good time toward Portland bridge.

Sewing Silk.—The smallest sewing silk manufactured measures 2,220 yards, or over one and one-fourth mile to the ounce. Even in the construction of this variety sometimes from 200 to 400 fibers of the material, as originally spun by the silkworm, are required. The little vermiform artists which produce this beautiful material do not spin threads of a uniform size. The smallest fiber of silk, as wrought by the worm into the exquisite structure of its cocoon, is so infinitely minute that every ounce of the manufactured thread is supposed to contain nearly 4,000 miles of this floss-like strand, and the puny animal sometimes elaborates a fiber of such marvelous tenuity that less than four pounds of the thread, avoirdupois, would reach round the world.

The Best Position for Sleep.

E. D. Babbitt, D. M., in his new book, the "Health Guide," thus gives his views on the best position for the body during the hours of sleep:

Baron Reichenbach, by a large number of experiments with sensitive and feeble persons, found that they would be thrown into a very uncomfortable or spasmodic condition when they lay with their heads to the south, and still worse when their heads were to the west; but that when he turned them with their heads to the north and their feet to the south, they were quiet and comfortable. This harmonizes with the idea of a magnetic earth current going from north to south, or at least in the direction of the needle, thus throwing the warm principle toward the feet when the head points northward, while the distress occasioned by lying with the head to the West may be accounted for on the supposition of an electric current moving from west to east, at right angles with the magnetic current, thus throwing the cool element to the feet, just where it should not be. This last direction must be particularly injurious to delicate ladies, in whom the electrical element already predominates too much, especially at the extremities; and these were the class of persons with whom Reichenbach experimented.

I would recommend the northeast as a still better direction for the head than the north, as it throws both the cool current toward the head and the warm current toward the feet. The observance of these rules of position would save a vast amount of headache, neuralgia and distress of the brain and nervous system generally. I lay down these rules, not as a mere theory, but a fact established by my own experience as well as that of others, and it is high time our physicians begun to look into these important health laws, which, if habitually violated, will imperceptibly undermine many a delicate constitution.

The Widow's Protest.

One of the saddest things that ever came under my notice (said the banker's clerk) was there in Corning during the war. Dan Murphy enlisted as a private and fought very bravely. The boys all liked him; and when a wound, by and by, weakened him down till carrying a musket was too heavy work for him, they clubbed together, and fixed him up as sutler. He made money then, and sent it always to his wife to bank for him. She was a washer and ironer, and knew enough by hard experience to keep money when she got it. She didn't waste a penny. On the contrary, she began to get miserly as her bank account grew. She grieved to part with a cent, poor creature, for twice in her hard-working life she had known what it was to be hungry, cold, friendless, sick, and without a dollar in the world, and she had a haunting dread of suffering so again. Well, at last Dan died; and the boys, in testimony, of their esteem and respect for him, telegraphed to Mrs. Murphy to know if she would like to have him embalmed and sent home; when you know the usual custom was to dump a poor devil like him into a shallow hole, and then inform his friends what had become of him. Mrs. Murphy jumped to the conclusion that it would only cost two or three dollars to embalm her dead husband, so she telegraphed "Yes." It was at the "wake" that the bill for embalming arrived and was presented to the widow.

She uttered a wild sad wail that pierced every heart, and said: "Sivinty-foive dollars for stoffin' Dan; blister their sowls! Did thim divils suppose I was goin' to start a Museim, that I'd be dalin' in such expinsive curiassities!"

The banker's clerk said there was not a dry eye in the house.—Mark Twain.

Road Steamer.

An ingenious Scotch engineer has introduced a road steamer upon the streets of Glasgow, the successful operation of which, and its absolute freedom from objection of any kind, are believed to have solved the problem of steam locomotion on common roads, which has given rise to so much investigation and experiment of late years. By this new arrangement, the engine attached to the road carriage is so simple in construction, and so completely under control, that it is possible to stop the carriage, when traveling at the rate of six miles an hour, within a distance of fifteen feet. An annulus, provided for the emission of steam in a continuous glow, prevents the noise of puffing and snorting of the engine, and obviates all difficulty and danger of horses shying or becoming frightened. It is stated that the inventor of this road steamer has applied the principle here involved in the manufacture of a private traveling carriage, and proposes to build steam omnibuses for city convenience and traffic. The small private carriage, after many experiments in the most crowded streets of Glasgow, was found to be perfectly manageable, while the steam omnibus, according to the plan proposed, will, it is believed, prove equally favorable in its operation, besides being from forty to fifty per cent. less expensive in working than an ordinary horse omnibus of the same capacity.

Migration of the Buffalo.

There is a feature in the migratory character of the buffalo not generally known, except to hunters, and that is, that the vast body of the herd is never found in the same district of country two seasons in succession. The buffalo of North America forms an immense army, marching in one continuous circuit, but perhaps three-fourths of the entire number of which are found within a range of from two to three hundred miles. Thus, where buffaloes are abundant one year, they are fewer the next, until the great body, having completed its circuit, again makes its appearance. This circuit is completed in about four years. Its western limit is the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains, and its eastern is bounded by a marginal outline of civilization, extending from the British settlements on the north to Northern Texas on the south. The range of latitude traversed has for many years been about twenty-three degrees, extending from the Cross Timbers of Texas to the tributaries of Lake Winnepeg on the north. The band travels southward on the eastern line, and northword on the western, never crossing the Rocky Mountains.

Useful Hints.

A lady writing to the Country Gentleman thus recapitulates some of the valuable suggestions she has had the good sense to learn from her servant girls. She says: "The other day Mary was ironing and asked for a piece of sand-paper to rub her irons on. I was astonished that I had never thought of it before; it is so nice, removes every bit of starch or anything else, and makes them so smooth. One girl taught me that old corsets make the best stove-cloths. Just one-half at a time is a convenient size. They are ready made and much better, when unfolded, to take hold of anything with than a made holder, and much easier to wash. Just throw them in with the brown towels, as many as you happen to get soiled during the week, and they come out clean and ready to use again. Another girl pours hot water on the blades only of steel knives, and they wipe and do not need drying. Another one told me the best way to keep dry hams and dried beef was to pack in dry salt. We have tried it several years with perfect success. An old salt barrel is convenient. Set it in some cool, dry place; put quite a thick layer of salt in the bottom; then pack in the hams, using the pieces of dried beef, if you have any for chinking; cover it with salt; then hams and salt again till the barrel is full. There is not the least danger from insects, if the hams are smoked and the beef dried and put away early before the flies come around; and they are much nicer to handle than when put in ashes or oats, or anything of that kind."

A Reasoning, Revengeful Dog.

Deacon Henderson, of Berkshire county, Mass., started on a journey with a horse and carriage to visit his friends. He soon discovered that his small dog accompanied him. After staying at a hotel one night he resumed his journey, but missed his dog. One week later he returned over the same route and stopped at the hotel. Dr. Prime thus continues the story:

He made inquiry for the dog, and the landlord told him that the first day after the deacon left the dog was running around the place, making every expression of loneliness, and was several times attacked and severely bitten by other dogs, and then disappeared.

Within a day or two thereafter the little dog made his second appearance, accompanied by a much larger dog, and they finally made a curious attack upon every resident dog in the neighborhood, and gave them a thorough thrashing. When that work was done, both dogs disappeared.

The good deacon was delighted with the landlord's recital of the affair, and explained the matter by guessing that the little dog went back home some thirty miles, procured the assistance of a large dog which was his associate, and returned to the tavern to punish his enemies; and when the worthy deacon reached home, he found his conjectures were fully justified by the fact that the dogs had been absent and on returning home showed signs of hard usage.

A Knowing Man.

A New York correspondent says: "There are many families which you would think, when you saw their display, to be full of money, who are pinched severely, and their show of wealth is but a sham. Many, also, who really have property are always living beyond their means. Stewart does a very extensive credit business among such a class, and this department is under charge of one of the most experienced floor-walkers of the retail palace. He knows almost every fashionable woman in this city, and he also knows how much it is safe to trust each one. There are some who run a bill, say from $3,000 to $5,000, and there are others who are allowed to go as deep as $10,000, and then there are a few whose account may reach $20,000 before a bill is presented. When these ladies trade heavy bills the clerk sends the amount on a slip of paper to the censor, whose pencil at once marks approbation or refusal. Hence it is of great importance with this class to keep on good terms with this autocrat. If a fashionable woman wants a $1,000 shawl, how delightful is the approving pencil mark! If the latter be adverse, what a cruel disappointment!"

Reduction of Value in Chemicals.

The hydrate of chloral, which in 1869 cost $80 a pound, so that each sleep produced by it could be reckoned at $1, is now advertised on the list of a German chemical factory at about $2 a pound. Such an enormous reduction in the price of a chemical product in so short a time has rarely occurred. Perhaps the only parallel case is metallic sodium, which, a few years ago, could not be had for $200 a pound, but can now be made for 75 cents. According to Dr. Richardson, the secret use of chloral in England has become so great that the victims must be put in the same class as the opium-eaters. In proof of the enormous consumption, he states that during the last year and a half four dealers have sold forty tons, sufficient to give narcotic doses to 36,000,000 people—in other words, every person in England could have had one good sound sleep out of the amount sold.

What it Takes to Amuse the Baby. One boy doll, one girl doll, large; one toy ball, one girl doll small, one silver toy-ball, one silver napkin-ring, two napkins, one sugar-bowl cover (glass), one newspaper, one orange, one large china caster, one feather duster, one small china caster, one bunch of keys, one small bird-cage, one wooden martingale ring, one round of a chair, one wooden box-lid, one silver cake-basket, one old slipper, one silver goblet, one sugar-bowl cover (silver), one old hat, one crumb-tray. And what is still more remarkable, any attempt to take one of these articles results in an immediate "disturbance of the peace."

The cost of the construction of the Illinois Central railroad was $34,061,196.56. They have received from the sale of lands donated to the road the sum of $24,825,333.33. The value of their bonds remaining unsold is $5,165,520. There has been a stock dividend declared of $5,773,301—making in all received $1,701,957.77 more than the entire cost of the road, and yet they are not happy.

Obituary of an Editor.

Ye editor sat in his rickety chair, as worried as worried could be, for ye Devil was grinning before him there, and "copy" ye Devil said he.

Oh, ye Editor grabbed his big qill-pen, and it spluttered ye ink so free, that his manuscript looked like a war-map when—"Take this," to ye Devil spake he.

He scribbled and scratched through ye live-long day, no rest nor refreshment had he; for ye Devil kept constantly coming that way, and howling for more "cop-ee!"

Day after day he scissored and wrote, a-slaying the whole countree; while ye Devil kept piping his single note, "A little more outside cop-ee!"

And when ye boys in ye newsroom heard ye noise of ye fray, ye sound of a blow and a blasphemous word, "He's raising ye Devil!" says they.

And oft when a man with a grievance came in, ye Editor man to see, he'd turn his back with a word of sin—"Go talk to ye Devil," sayed he.

And ever and oft, when a proof of his work ye proprietor wanted to see, "Ye proof shall be shown by my personal clerk; you must go to ye Devil," sayed he.

And thus he was destined, through all his life, by this spirit tormented to be; in hunger and poverty, sorrow and strife, always close to ye Devil was he.

Ye editor died . . . . But ye Devil lived on! And ye force of life's habits we see; for ye Editor's breath no sooner was gone, then straight to ye Devil went he.

Strength of Stones.

Experiment in order to test the strength of stones to resist compression has been made by placing a cubic inch of each between two steel plates, and charging it with increasing weight until it is crushed. For convenience sake, this weight is adapted by means of a lever, so as to obviate the necessity of actually handling the hundreds and thousands pounds required—one or more sliding weights on a strong beam being sufficient. The results of this experiment, as given by an exchange, are copied in the following table. The number of pounds noted is that which the substance will bear without crushing:

Inferior pale brick	2,000
Common gold brick	4,000
Hard brick	4,500
Pressed Philadelphia brick	5,000
New England granite	11,200
Italian marble	12,000

Population of Great Britain.—The population of Great Britain and Ireland is stated in the Register-General returns to be 32,412,000, or 690,009 more than double the population enumerated at the first census in 1801. The population of Ireland in 1874 is only 84,000 more than in 1801. The population of Scotland in 1874 is 212,000 more than double the population of 1801. The population of England and Wales in 1874 is above 5,500,000 more than double the population in 1801.

THIRTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE OF AN OLD NURSE.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP IS THE PRESCIPTION OF one of the best Female Physicians and Nurses in the United States, and has been used for thirty years with never failing safety and success by millions of mothers and children, from the feeble infant of one week old to the adult. It corrects acidity of the stomach, relieves wind colic, regulates the bowels, and gives rest, health and comfort to mother and child. We believe it to be the Best and Surest Remedy in the World in all cases of DYSENTERY and DIARRHEA IN CHILDREN, whether it arises from Teething or from any other cause. Full directions for using will accompany each bottle. None Genuine unless the fac-simile of CURTIS & PERKINS is on the outside wrapper.

The Secret of Captivation.—Features of Grecian mold, a well-turned neck, and beautifully rounded arms, are no doubt very nice things to have, and ladies who possess these charms have reason to be thankful to Mother Nature: yet, after all, the most captivating of all womanly charms is a pure, fresh and brilliant complexion. This superlative fascination any lady may secure by using Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

Ye Old Mexican Mustang Liniment has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, sprains, scalds, burns, salt rheum, sore nipples, swelling, lameness, chapped hands, poisonous bites, stings, bruises, &c., &c., on men, women and children, and sprains, strains, galls, stiff joints, inflammation, &c., in beasts, than all other liniments put together. It will do what is promised or ye money refunded.

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that Plantation Bitters is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

Reanimating the Hair.—When the hair ceases to draw from the scalp the natural lubricant which is its sustenance, its vitality is, as it were, suspended, and, if not promptly attended to, baldness will be the certain result. The one sure method of avoiding such an unpleasant catastrophe is to use Lyon's Kathairon, which, when well rubbed into the scalp, will speedily reanimate the hair and prevent it from falling out.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching, and dandruff; and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing nothing has been found so effectual, or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,
FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade, to brown, or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color which will neither rub nor wash off.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

New York, June 18, 1874.

Dear Courier—Old Sol is vigorously to his work, and giving us a full dose these days. It is so hot one can plainly smell sulphur. If the thermometer dont cease its uprising it will knock the top off and the quicksilver of necessity slop over and be lost. We can readily submit to this damage if cooler and more endurable weather wil be assured to us by reason of the sacrifice. There is a perfect hegira of N. Y. fashionables for the country. The neighboring watering places are rapidly filling up more particularly the seaside resorts, and soon, very soon, this Metropolis will be left in charge of the domestics and subordinates. The merchants are off and can well be spared, for business is extremely dull, as it always is at this blistering season. The women with their scores of trunks and band boxes are gliding out of town by every available route and your correspondent with his family leave this P. M. for Long Branch, not so much to cool off or bathe in the surf, but to be in the fashion. For were it known in Society Circles that we stayed at home during the heated term, and sweltered in a N. Y. city atmosphere, would be to virtually ostracise ourselves from the gatherings of the Elite, and be ignored by the devotees of flimsey fickle fashion. Our accustomed places at Mayor Havemeyer's receptions would be filled by others, our familiar faces at A. T. Stewart's Germans or Corney Vanderbilt' hospitable table would be seen no more. In N. Y. to be out of style is to be out of the world. So at an alarming sacrifice of business, and a much more terrific sacrifice of our not over plethoric exchequer, we have concluded to take the soon boat for the Branch.

The dictionary, of all books is said to contain the largest variety of subjects, but if you desire to note and study face and features, varied and multiform take a stroll upon the west or shady side of Broadway some fine afternoon say from Bowling Green to 34th st. a distance of four miles or thereabout, being the most interesting part of this truly wonderful and unequaled thoroughfare. In your tramp you may probably meet 20,000 people, no two looking alike, no one being the counterpart of the other. To see the diversified features, the styles, gaits, colors, nationalities, one continuous irresistible current of struggling humanity, each destined for some objective point having some definite idea or project in view, unmindful and careless of each other. They do not stroll listlessly by with hands driven to the knees in ample pockets or gawking in show windows, for to do this successfully would necessitate the close hugging of the curb on one side or the building on the other, for the unsuspecting creature wo'd be roundly jolted and well shaken up on all sides by the surging current of humanity constantly rolling on and on. Scan as well as your time will allow each phiz you hurriedly meet; wonder if they represent as many separate and distinct temperaments, likes and prejudices as there are features, and then stop and reflect that all this heterogeneous, living, moving, panorama hail from the same Godhead and are undoubtedly aiming to reach the source from whence they came, but by what a diversity of routes and plans, what conflicting notions they entertain, what a strangely conglomerated mess of theological doctrines they represent and espouse, each swearing fealty upon the same bible and all ready and eager to substantiate their peculiar doctrinal faith by the same inspiring book. All harmoniously concurring in the indisputable fact of the existence of a God and his divine prerogatives, but captiously at issue as to the shortest and easiest route to reach Him together with the requisite essentials in faith, in ritual form, in the minor and less important details generally. I have much faith in churches, they are of vital necessity all over the land as a potent auxiliary to good civil government and oftentimes keep in proper respectful subjection the turbulent unruly element, always found in the larger towns who can often be influenced by moral suasion. But in the main the churches of today (some of them for there are scores of honorable exceptions) are doing more harm and injury to the cause of Christ than good. Opulence is driving poverty from the sacramental altar and in many of the hightoned christian synagogues it is considered sacrilege to receive with ungloved hand the cup representing the shed blood of Jesus, or if that hand be wanting Jouvins kid jewelled fingers must take the bread emblematical of the mangled body of a Saviour and a Christ. Foolish hollow hearted ritualism has seriously affectd one of the wealthiest, most liberal and aristocratic denominations on this Island. I speak of the grand old Episcopalian, the church of our birth and baptism, but it seems to have deserted its old time honored usages and drifted into the seductive current of frothy show and gilt edged pageantry filling the soul with reflections of Jesus, a seeming desire to ape the Roman church with its beautiful symbols appointments and surroundings yet lacking the moral courage to go over to it body and breeches and ignore entirely their first best love. The Catholics look upon the ritualistic cabalistic maneuvers of these Protestant Episcopal high Churchmen as a parody upon their own time honored services and are justly incensed at what they appropriately term a systematized mockery of their own ritual. To me there is more true honest whole souled piety in the little unostentatious churches of the smaller inland towns where hypocrisy is at a discount rather than a premium, than is to be found in Satin cushioned Grace or gilt edged Trinity. Give me simple unadorned christianity, unadorned as Christ was un dorned when on earth, save by His christian graces and attributes. True piety is emblazoned with sufficient grandeur to satisfy and hold the devout conscientious christian and enough spiritual relief and comfort can be afforded to all who in the proper spirit of Christ like humanity seek for it, for they shall find it. It is so written and promised. More anon.

E. L. C.

A ten Dollar Wife.

Parson Allen, of D——, was quite a wag, and a peculiarly interesting preacher. He was often called upon to perform marriage ceremonies, and his peculiarities on such occasions often furnished a supply of merriment long after the parties had retired from the parsonage.

On one occasion, after the marriage knot had been tied, the bridegroom, supposing that the parson was entitled by law to a certain fee, and would return the change, handed the minister a ten dollar bill, which was carefully folded and placed in his pocket. The old parson having noticed the X in the corner of the old State bank note, kept up a lively conversation on the ups and downs of life, till the groom became somwhat nervous over the delay in relation to his change, and he ventured to say: "Parson Allen, that was a ten dollar bill I gave you"

"Yes, so I preceive. You are very generous. It is not often that I receive so lar e a fee, A comfortable thing it is to have a note in one's pocket," and then gave some amusing illustrations and of selfishness and another ten minutes of precious time was consumed.

Again the groom ventured to remind the parson that he had not returned the change he had accepted, and he hesitatingly suggested;

"Perhaps you did not think that the bill I handed you for services was a ten, did you, Parson Allen?"

"O, yes, I noticed that it was. I assure you that I have not been so agreeably surprised for a long time. I always think on such occasions that the husband has an appreciative regard for his worthy wife; that now is, worth ten dollars, and I doubt if you would have the knot untied for twice that amount, would you?

'Not I, said the nonplused bridegroom. But is there not a regular fee which the minister is allowed to take for marrying people?"

"Not that I am aware of," responded the parson. "We always leave the fee to be fixed by the parties who get married

And so the bridegroom, evaded at all points, gave up the effort to get back any change

Democratic State Convention

There will be a delegate convention held at Indianapolis on Wednesday, the 15th day of July next, by the Democracy of Indiana to nominate a State ticket, to be voted for at the October election, 1874, and for the transaction of such other business as many properly come before it. The ratio of representation in the convention will be one vote for every one hundred votes cast in the various counties for Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks for Governer, at the election in 1872, and one vote for every fraction of fifty votes and over.

The Democratic party of Indiana, claiming fellowship with, and desiring the co-operation of all good men without regard to past party affiliation, who view the present condition of our political affairs as imperatively demanding reform, and who are disposed earnestly to labor for the overthrow of a corrupt party, and a profligate administration, most cordially invite all such to unite with us in council and in action.

In these times of official corruption and political misrule, it becomes, more than ever, the duty of all good citizens to require a strict adherence to, and faithful compliance with, the principles upon which our political institution rest.

Justice and sound policy forbid that one industry should be cherished at the expense of another, or that exclusive privileges should be conferred upon any one class of people; and therefore, the people view with alarm the growing tendency to monopolies and class legislation, and the overshadowing influence of the money power in controlling legislation, and in shaping the destinies of the country. These influences must be checked.

The only certain and safe remedies for the dangerous tendencies of the times, are to be found in the strict construction of the federal constitution, and the assumption of no doubtful powers; an honest economical administration of our public affairs, both State and national; the ostracism from public life of all who are found guilty of official corruption, and a strict subordination of the will of the representative to the will of the people, regarding the great body of the people as the only tribunal for the ultimate decision of questions affecting their government, both as to men and measures. The people have no divided interests, but all alike desire to see:

1. Labor protected against the encroachments of more money power,
2. The industrial interests guarded against the exactions of monopolies.
3. The public burdens enlightened by honesty and economy in the administration of public affairs.

Moreover, the people would like to see such changes effected in our financial system as will guard against the rapid fluctuations in prices, consequent upon the sudden contraction and expansion of our currency, with such additions to its present volume as the business of the country requires' adopting and discriminating in favor of legal tender treasury notes as against national bank currency.

There is no hope of securing these reforms through the agency of the party in power. We therefore call upon all good people to meet with us at the polls in behalf of these proposed measures, and to aid in staying the progress of corruption and misrule.

By order of the Democratic State Central Committee.

J. E. McDONALD, Chairman
A. T. WHITTLESEY, Secretary.

The Indiana Republicans are possessed of an unparalelled quantity of cheek. The Republican party had "so conducted public affairs" that a majority of its leaders who were at the same time honest and able were compelled to leave it in disgust at the last Presidential election. Sumner who stood by the cradle of the party, and whose name had for many years been its passport to respect among men; Chase, one of the earliest and ablest of its apostles; Greeley, who had done its work from its infancy; Schurz, whom it called one of its shinning lights, and many others of scarcely less eminence were compelled to leave the party because of its corruption and degeneracy. Two years ago the best part of the republican party repudiated that organization and struck out for reform, and were joined by the Democracy. The Indiana Convention, however, puts it in this way:—"It is so conducted public affairs that at the last Presidential election one of its party was acdepted as the Democraic candidate for the Presidency.'

Kick each of those resolution framers around seventeen squares and they would construe it in some other way as a compliment.—Enquirer

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

WOMAN may preach in the Universalist Church in Maine if she chooses. The State Convention has so decided....Another shocking death from hydrophobia is reported from New York. A little over a month ago William McCormick, a butcher, was bitten on the hand by a small dog. It was a mere scratch, and though his family were anxious about it, he ridiculed their fears. The dog was one of those taken to the pound and killed, so that it could not be learned whether it had the genuine rabies. On Monday McCormick was taken with pains in his neck and shoulders. He said it was rheumatism, and, beyond applying liniments, paid no attention to it. Two days afterward he complained of a creeping feeling coming up his back and spreading through his system. He was thirsty. His wife brought water, and on putting the glass to his lips his teeth closed on the glass, his face became livid, he caught his breath, and for some time could not breathe. The convulsions soon became terrible, and succeeded each other with great rapidity. His jaws snapped together, froth ran from his mouth in streams, and the perspiration soaked the bed. The muscles of his throat drew up in cords. His struggles were so violent that medicine could not be administered. A patrolman was sent for aid and a strait-jacket. He returned with officers, and the jacket was put on with great difficulty. His body bent like a bow, resting on his head and heels. He bit his lips and tongue till the blood spattered the wall. His jaws clenched so tightly that they cracked. An ashen pallor spread over his face, and suddenly he was dead. Dr. Wm. A. Hammond and other celebrated physicians examined all the symptoms of the case, and pronounced it one of genuine hydrophobia.

THE Governor of Massachusetts has vetoed the Liquor-License law recently passed by the Legislature of that State....A New York telegram of June 26 says of the Tilton-Beecher scandal: "Theodore Tilton's letter to Dr. Leonard Bacon is attracting the profoundest attention here. The letter has been variously interpreted, and few have caught its true meaning. Tilton purposely made it vague, and refused point blank to make a specific charge. That part of the document which troubles people most, is the quotation from a letter of Beecher to Tilton, under date of Jan. 1, 1871, in which the preacher says: 'I ask Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and humble myself before him as I do before my God.' Tilton says that quotation is only a paragraph from a long letter. This made many people say to themselves, though they rebelled against believing it: Mr. Beecher had a guilty conscience when he wrote this. He has sinned greatly. This accounts for his refusal to make charges against Tilton, when challenged to do so in church-meeting. But the majority of people think that the end of the deplorable controversy is near, and that Beecher will come out from it stainless. At the regular Plymouth Church meeting, this evening, Beecher presided as usual. He made no reference to his troubles, but talked in his old genial way, one minute having his audience in tears, and the next convulsed with laughter. He refuses to talk on the subject of his trouble at present."

THERE is great danger that the Croton aqueduct, that supplies New York city with water, will collapse at no distant day, and besides deluging nearly two square miles of territory, cut off the water supply of the city. ....Henry Ward Beecher, in his last Sunday's sermon in Plymouth Church, New York, made no allusion to the Tilton letter. The position assumed by the New York press in regard to the matter is very lenient toward the Plymouth pastor. The World vilifies Tilton in round measures; the Post refuses to publish the letter; the Herald remarks that a corpse has been resurrected, and advises that it be reburied; the Tribune says "it may be thought expedient by Mr. Beecher and his friends to make some reply;" the Sun considers the letter worthy of a reply, and the Times inclines to the same opinion.

THE Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that women are ineligible to seats in School Boards.

THE microscopic examination of the remains of McCormick, a supposed victim of hydrophobia, has been concluded at New York, under the direction of Dr. William A. Hammond, the acknowledged head of the medical profession in this country. Immediately after the death of McCormick, Dr. Hammond made a post-mortem examination of the remains, and took the parts which he proposed to examine under the microscope to ascertain whether any structural changes hitherto undiscovered would reveal a true lesson—that is, a diseased part peculiar to hydrophobia. The first section was made through the spinal accessory nerves, where the filaments pass from the medulla. At different points in the white and gray matter which makes up the body of the medulla oblongata could be distinctly seen, when highly magnified, black spots of irregular shape and various sizes indicative of extravasated blood. At the origin of the spinal accessory nerves, this appearance was most marked, and the evidence that this was the seat of the disease was conclusive. Another section made through the medulla oblongata, the origin of the filaments of the pneumogastric nerve, when magnified showed the same spots. In this as in the other, the greatest diseased action was found about the origin of the nerve filaments. The finding of the structural changes in the medulla oblongata shows that the disease called hydrophobia is a true nervous disease and not a blood poison. Dr. Hammond has overthrown the greatest stumbling-block to investigators, and has cleared up all the mysterious workings of the disease. He has traced the course of the poison in the case of McCormick from the point of ingress into the system to the seat of the disease—the medulla oblongata. It was understood that the dog from whose bite McCormick was inoculated with germs of hydrophobia had rabies and was shot. This was a mistake. The dog has been found and positively identified. He has been examined by scientists, and declared to be perfectly healthy, and if he had rabies when he bit McCormick he could not be alive now. This they accept as conclusive proof that the bite of any dog, however healthy, may give hydrophobia. This fact has long been suspected, but never before so clearly proved.

The West.

HIGH and Low Church is as much a division of Episcopalians in Ohio as in Wisconsin. The feeling for and against Ritualism has been running high in the diocese since the death of Bishop McIlvaine, and has finally culminated in a division of the diocese. Bishop Bedell, whose proclivities are High Church, will go with the Northern Diocese, and take up his residence in Cleveland.... The temperance women of Michigan held their State Convention at Lansing last week. A platform was adopted setting forth their belief and principles. The Woman's Temperance Convention of Pennsylvania was also in session at Pittsburgh, being largely attended....The National Saengerfest at Cleveland, Ohio, has proved a grand success....A shocking kerosene accident is reported from Monroeville, a village near Fort Wayne, Ind. A man named Largen was filling a kerosene lamp, and while in the act the can exploded, burning him in a terrible manner. His three children, aged 4, 6 and 8 years, were burned so badly that they died within a few hours.

IMPORTANT changes have recently taken place in the Indian Territory. All the agents of civilized Indians have been relieved, excepting J. B. Jones, agent of the Cherokees, and a central agency has been established at Fort Gibson. The Choctaws, Creeks, Seminoles, Cherokees and Chickasaws, and other civilized Indians, will be under Agent Jones. This is regarded as an experiment, on a small scale, to familiarize Indians with self-government in the future Territorial organization....The Attorney-General of Iowa has given a long opinion on the Railroad Tariff law, in which he takes the position that the State has the power to enforce the law according to the intent of the Legislature....The farmers of Central Ohio have lately been made the victims of a sharp swindle. A firm of confidence operators, whose headquarters were at Springfield, represented themselves to be the proprietors of a patent plow possessing rare and untold merit; and they managed to appoint each farmer with whom they dealt an agent, and in the article of agreement constituting the agency was ingeniously inserted a negotiable promissory note. The unsuspecting Granger would sign the same, and in a few months he would be sued by an innocent purchaser of said note for the face of the same. The swindlers have been arrested. As they will shift their operations to some other field, farmers are warned to be on the lookout.

THE Chicago Tribune of the 29th ult., prints reports of the condition of the crops along the lines of the Michigan Southern and Chicago and Northwestern railroads. The prospects for all grains in Indiana and Michigan are excellent, but in Ohio wheat is represented in bad condition. Fruits are doing remarkably well.

THE United States Circuit Court at Springfield has granted the prayer of the Chicago and Alton Railway Company to have the cases brought against them by the State Board of Railway and Warehouse Commissioners, for violation of the railway law, removed from the courts of Illinois to the United States Supreme Court....Chicago has just completed her second lake tunnel.

THE boiler in a lumber-mill at Carrolton, Mich., exploded on the morning of the 30th ult., with frightful effect, shattering the mill to atoms and instantly killing Joseph Judson, Benj. Chapman, John Peck, George Watson and William Sinnet. Six others were seriously injured. Pecuniary loss, $35,000. ....Rev. Dr. Welles, of Red Wing, Minn., has finally accepted the Bishopric of Wisconsin, and will at once enter upon his duties.

The South.

A CHARLESTON (S. C.) dispatch says: "Gov. Moses has pardoned three County Commissioners of Barnwell, lately convicted of corruption in office and sentenced respectively to three, nine and ten years in the penitentiary. The convicted officials, on their way to prison, boasted that Gov. Moses would not dare allow them to remain in the penitentiary one month."

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "There is evidently a misapprehension with regard to the extent of the suffering from the flood in the Mississippi valley. Letters have been received from Gov. Ames, stating that the whole amount expended for rations in Mississippi for the sufferers is but $70,000, and that no more is needed. A similar letter has been received at the War Department. News from Louisiana also shows that although there has been great devastation, there is not a great amount of personal suffering, and the production of the whole State will equal that of last year."

HON. JOSEPH H. SLOSS, Member of Congress from the Tuscumbia (Ala.) District recently shot and killed a man named Long for assailing the character of his daughter.

THERE being a disagreement between the Judges who recently sat upon the case of the Grant parish prisoners, the issue will have to be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the constitutionality of the Ku-Klux law will be fully tested.

Washington.

IT is rumored that ex-Postmaster-General Creswell will be appointed Minister to Austria.

SECRETARY BRISTOW has refused to accept a pair of horses and a carriage, which were tendered to him by a personal friend for the use of his wife....Eugene Hale has accepted the appointment of Postmaster-General....The Comptroller of the Currency will immediately call in the outstanding currency of the suspended national banks, amounting to about $5,000,000, which will be given to applicants for charters from the South and West under the provisions of the new Currency law. This amount, the Comptroller thinks, will be sufficient to supply all demands for the present. After the supply is exhausted he will call in currency from sections that have a superabundance and give it to sections that are deficient in their quota....Some 500 useless clerks have been dismissed from the departments since the adjournment of Congress.

ALL the members of the Commission appointed to manage District of Columbia affairs during the recess have accepted, and will immediately enter upon their duties.... It is again rumored that Secretary Fish will shortly retire from the Cabinet.... Mr. Hale, the new Postmaster-General, is the youngest member of the Cabinet, being 38....The Comptroller of the Currency has issued a circular calling upon all national banks to forward immediately a report, in the usual form, of the condition of each bank as shown by the books on Friday, June 26, 1874.

TUESDAY, June 30, was the end of the fiscal year in Washington, and the time set for the curtailment of the clerical force in some of the departments. The heaviest discharge was in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the services of 375 female employes being dispensed with, leaving 1,200 persons still employed in that bureau. The scene of dismissal was marked by sadness. Fourteen of those discharged fainted when the announcement was made to them, and physicians were called to their assistance....Messrs. Blow, Dennison and Catell have entered upon their duties as Commissioners for the temporary government of the District of Columbia....The internal revenue receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30 were $102,565,577.....The President has taken up his summer residence at Long Branch.

General.

THE International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association was held at Dayton, Ohio, last week....Telegraphic congratulations have passed between President Grant and Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, upon the opening of communication by wire between this country and that, and Europe.

IT is given out from Washington that Attorney-General Williams will shortly resign.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "It has been discovered that under the lead of Poland, of Vermont, in the House, and Edmunds, of Vermont, and Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, in the Senate, a harmless-looking bill was quietly passed, which really gives the courts of this District more power in regard to libel in any part of the United States than the notorious section of another bill proposed by Carpenter and Conkling. Under the bill passed, on complaint for libel here, an editor can be arrested anywhere and brought here in arrest."

OUR Government, through Minister Cushing, has demanded of Spain full indemnity for the victims of Burriel's massacre of Americans at Santiago de Cuba. The demand, it is said, is made in the most emphatic manner, and no evasion of the responsibility will be tolerated. This is done in conformity to one of the terms of the protocol with Spain touching the Virginius matter, and it is to be hoped that there will be no backing down from the position assumed.

THE decrease of foreign immigration for the first six months of 1874 shows a falling-off of from 20 to 50 per cent. as compared with corresponding months in 1873.

Political.

MR. DAWES declines a renomination to Congress....The Rhode Island Legislature has adjourned till January without choosing a United States Senator. The final ballot resulted: Burnside, 42; Dixon, 26; Barstow, 19; scattering, 16....Hon. James F. Wilson, of the Fifth, and Hon. J. W. McDill, of the Eighth Iowa Districts, have been nominated by the Republicans for re-election to Congress.

IT is announced that Simon Cameron and John W. Forney have agreed to bury the hatchet and be friends forevermore.

THE Prohibitionists of Illinois met in convention at Bloomington on the 30th ult., nominated a State ticket and put forth a declaration of principles. The following are the nominees: State Treasurer, Maj. Little, of [illegible]; Superintendent of Schools, Mrs. Jennie F. Willing, of Bloomington, Professor in the Wesleyan University.

Foreign.

THE postal treaty between France and the United States has been ratified by both the contracting powers, and hereafter it will be possible for persons of moderate means in the two countries to maintain a correspondence. ....A fifteen years' contract has been closed at Milan for putting Pullman palace cars on all trains and lines of Upper Italy. This covers the great routes of pleasure travel via the northern lakes.

SOME stir has been occasioned in the placid surface of the British Parliament by the passage in the Lords of the Public Worship Regulation bill. The bill is intended to clear away some of the obstacles to the speedy and cheap trial of clerics who may incur the displeasure of their Bishops....It has been decided not to submit M. Rochefoucauld's monarchical resolution to the Committee of Thirty of the French Assembly. The resolution, it will be remembered, declares in favor of the monarchy as the only salvation of France....A proposition has been made in the British House of Commons that the Government interfere in behalf of judicial reform in Egypt....Howard Staunton, the noted English chess-player and Shakespearean editor, is dead....The offices of certain Bonapartist newspapers in Paris were visited by the police the other day, and a large quantity of Imperial documents seized. The editors were also cautioned to be more discreet in their utterances in future....The London Times' Paris letter affirms that Italy's toleration of the Ultramontane party impairs her relations with Germany....M. Courbet, the artist, has been condemned to pay the cost of the reconstruction of the Vendome Column.

THE Czar of Russia has sentenced his nephew, the Grand Duke Nicholas, who stole his mother's diamonds to gratify the avarice of an American adventuress, to banishment to the Caucasus for life, and to be deprived of the Cross of St. George conferred upon him for bravery in the Khivan campaign.... Intelligence comes from Cuba that a body of four hundred Spanish soldiers were recently captured by the insurgents, and every man shot in retaliation for the crimes perpetrated by the Spanish authorities against the Cubans....A Madrid dispatch announces the defeat of 10,000 Carlists, under Prince Alphonso, by 5,000 Republicans, after two days fighting....The Primate of Brazil is dead.

THE French Committee of Thirty has voted to report unfavorably on the constitutional bills referred to it by the Assembly, and to draw up one of its own....Later reports from the engagement between the Spanish Republican troops and the Carlists at Estella, which was said at first to have resulted in a great victory for the former, put an entirely different face on affairs. Instead of winning a victory, the Republicans have sustained a severe defeat, their loss being variously estimated at from 1,500 to 4,000. Their commanding officer, Gen. Concha, was killed, and the army was obliged to fall back.... The Pope is said to be growing weaker..... About a hundred English farm laborers, who were recently "locked out" by their employers, have taken a novel method of getting their grievances before the public. They have started on a pilgrimage through the country, and intend to hold meetings everywhere to place their case in its true light before the world....Berditcher, a town of 60,000 inhabitants in Russian Poland, has been almost entirely destroyed by fire.

MEXICO has developed a new pestilence that is generally fatal and epidemic. The dispatches do not state the nature of the malady; but the Government has been obliged to go to the relief of the sufferers and to take measures to prevent the spread of the disease.... Intelligence comes from the coast of Sumatra that the second Dutch expedition against the Achinese has met with a disastrous end. It is stated that the latter made an attack on the Dutch fort, captured it and overwhelmed the garrison. The loss of the Dutch is placed at 1,000 killed and 4,500 wounded....It is said Marshal Serrano is to take personal command of the Spanish armies....Sixteen persons were recently drowned near Havana, Cuba, by the capsizing of a lighter.

History of Tobacco-Using.

The tobacco plant is a native of America. It was introduced into Europe after the discovery of the new world by Columbus. It was first used in Spain and Portugal, and afterward introduced into England by Sir Walter Raleigh. It was soon after carried into France, Germany, Russia, Italy and France.

In Russia the use of tobacco was prohibited under penalty of the bastinado for the first offense, loss of the nose for the second, and deprivation of life for the third. In Italy, all who used tobacco or snuff in church were excommunicated. In Switzerland, all users of tobacco were punished by the magistrates as criminals. In Constantinople a Turk was led through the street with his nose transfixed by a pipe-stem, as a warning to all smokers. The Shah of Persia treated tobacco-using as a capital crime. James I. also made earnest effort to suppress the traffic in tobacco, placing heavy imposts upon it.

A brief glance at a few statistics will show how enormous is the amount of tobacco raising and using at the present time.

In 1858 tobacco cost England more than $40,000,000.

In the year 1860 it cost France the same sum.

Last year (1873) it was estimated that tobacco cost the English people more than bread.

The United States annually exhausts in the culture of tobacco 400,000 acres of its richest soil, and employs 40,000 men, women, boys and girls in its manufacture. In 1842 the amount of tobacco used in this country amounted to seven pounds for each adult person.

Holland has 1,000,000 sallow, cadaverous-looking people engaged in the manufacture of the various forms of tobacco.

The present annual production of the world is estimated by reliable authorities at 1,000,000,000 pounds, which must cost the consumers at least $500,000,000.—Health Reformer.

THE best method of controlling cows inclined to kick while handling or milking them is to pass a broad strap just in front of the bag and around over the back of the animal; draw the strap tight and buckle it. This prevents all play of the cords and renders the animal incapable of kicking, and she can then be handled without difficulty. A few applications will cure the worst cases.

A Life Tragedy.

In the Courier-Journal of a few days since the following telegram from Baltimore was published:

"During a drunken brawl in the Sherwood House early this morning, Berry Amos aged 35, a well-known gambler, was fatally stabbed, as he alleged, by Sam McDonald, who was arrested. McDonald is supposed to be here on a visit from Indiana."

Samuel McDonald was the son of a very wealthy man in Baltimore, whose family occupied the highest social position in that city. He himself was sent abroad to be educated, and spent several years at one of the schools in England. While still abroad his father died, leaving his immense fortune to be divided between his son and daughter, his only children. Young McDonald's portion was something over $500,000, and, with proper management, would soon have advanced very greatly in value. Shortly after his father's death the young man attained his majority. The family residence, just out of Baltimore, was one of the most [illegible] the country. [illegible] the night of his 21st birthday he gave a grand dinner to various friends in the city, and the celebration is said to have been carried out in a style of almost unparalleled magnificence. The spacious grounds were ablaze with light, and a fountain ran champagne in the yard. The night closed with an orgy of wine-drinking in which an amazing quantity was consumed. Thus he started out upon a career of dissipation which has hurried him in four years—he is now but 25—to the horrible tragedy of last Wednesday night.

Young McDonald at this age was an extraordinary specimen of manly beauty. He was over 6 feet tall, straight as an arrow, broad-chested, and muscular; yet as graceful and agile as an athlete. A wealth of flaxen hair, and a broad, fair forehead, deep blue eyes, and a noble mouth, with features perfectly classic in their outline—he was a perfect type of the Anglo-Saxon. Add to this the exuberant spirits which always attend good health, and that nameless magnetism which so few men possess, and the possession of which may be the best or the worst of God's gifts, he was a most enjoyable companion, the life of the social circle, and as much admired by men as he was adored by women. Shortly after he attained his majority he came out to Terre Haute, Ind., on a visit. He returned to that pleasant city a few months afterward, bought him a farm in the vicinity, stocked it with the finest horses and cattle, and there inaugurated a series of dissipations which shocked the goodly little city to its center. He was soon ostracized from the society of the town, and direful stories are told of the excesses into which he then plunged. There were two gamblers from the East, whom he had brought West with him, and it is said that there were still more disreputable companions of another sex who lived in the same house with him. From this rendezvous he would take frequent hunting excursions into the neighboring prairies of Indiana and Illinois, the return to be always celebrated by a debauch. Wine flowed like water in this hunting-lodge, as he called it, and cards followed the wine on the table. It was said by those who professed to know that young McDonald spent over $150,000 the first year he lived in Terre Haute.

Horrible Death.

One of the most horrible and sickening accidents that has ever occurred in our city took place at noon yesterday. About 11:30 o'clock, an old gentleman named Billy Saberton, better known as "Tailor Bill," and who did odd jobs, went into Mr. N. Elles' mills, on Canal street, near Eighth, and asked permission to sharpen a scythe on the grindstone run by steam in that establishment. His request was granted. At nearly 12 o'clock one of the millers had occasion to go into the cellar, and there a horrible sight met his gaze. The engines and walls were bespattered with blood, and the large fly-wheel, 14 feet in diameter, revolving at the rate of 90 revolutions a minute, was reeking with gore. The engine was stopped, and, though pieces of bone and flesh and clots of blood were found all about, they were identified as those of the unfortunate Billy Saberton. The skull was picked up in four pieces; the two eyes were thrown together from their sockets near the door; his heart entire was found hanging to one of the small belt wheels, and the largest parts of the trunk and limbs were found near the pit of the fly-wheel. It was a most horrible and sickening sight, no one piece found weighing over six pounds. The Coroner was called, and brought with him a coffin, in which was placed the unfortunate victim's head, as nearly as possible, and the two feet. No attempt was made to gather the other portions of the body systematically, but they were scraped together and deposited pell-mell in the coffin, being picked up with a shovel.—Evansville (Ind.) Courier.

Antidote to Poisoning.

The experiments made by Prof. Binz, of Bonn, with reference to the effects of alcohol on animals, are regarded as of much importance, inasmuch as he seems to have discovered the reason why alcohol stimulants are so useful in cases of snake-poisoning. He found that when decomposed blood was introduced into the veins of the living animal, all the symptoms of putrid fever were shown, the temperature increasing until death ensued. Alcohol, it is stated, reduced the heat and retarded the putrid process, increasing the action of the heart—precisely the effect of alcohol stimulants, it is said, when administered in case of rattlesnake-poisoning.

ABOUT HAND-SAWS.—Hand-saws in America and England have the teeth pointed from the handle, while is Asiatic countries and in Greece they are made with teeth pointed the other way. The latter must be operated by pulling them, the former by pushing. In delicate work, and where fine, small saws are used, the Eastern saw is the best. The Orientals differ from us in setting the teeth of saws, also. They turn a group of a dozen one way, and the next group the other, while we alternate one on one side and the next on the other.

The Peace of Europe.

There is no telling when the armed peace of Europe will be brought to an abrupt close, and war, deadlier and more horrible than has been witnessed for many a year, break out between France and Germany. In Germany, France—in all Europe in fact—and in this country, a proximate Franco-Prussian war is spoken of as a matter of fact, much as the next sunrise is spoken of; only the time when the one event will happen is known definitely, and that of the other not so definitely. The world expects it. The world expects that France shall as soon as prepared—if a war is not forced upon her sooner by Germany—declare war against Germany. Notice has been served on France to this effect. [illegible] understanding among men that in no other way can she retain her place among the nations than by murdering a number of some other nation and having as few of her own devoted sons murdered as is compatible therewith. Parliaments, Ministers, pamphleteers, journalists, preachers, have told her she must fight Germany again. The opinion, and gossip, and talk of the world, leave these good Frenchmen no alternative but to go to war.

A question of great interest at the present time is that of Belgian neutrality. That, so far as Belgium itself is concerned, it will not violate its neutral policy, is conceded on all hands. But it is thought that its neutrality may be violated; that France may endeavor to reach her enemy over Belgium. The Germans themselves believe in the possibility of France's endeavoring to move her troops over Belgium to the Rhine; that they might accomplish this with so much celerity that Belgium could offer no resistance. England and Germany manifest some anxiety, therefore, that the neutrality of Belgium should be placed beyond a peradventure. The French, on the other hand, well aware of the advantageous position of Belgium, are afraid that Germany has designs on Belgium and Holland. Impartial observers, however, believe that there is much more of a desire on the part of France than of Germany to disregard the neutral attitude of Belgium.—Chicago Tribune.

Cooking.

There is no more important branch of "preventive medicine," the Lancet asserts, than cooking. Bad cooking may cause a dwindling of the race, ruination of the temper, and deterioration of the morals. Good cooking, on the other hand, is accompanied by national prosperity and domestic bliss. So say the promoters of the National Training School of Cookery, who are undoubtedly right in the main, and are deserving of all imaginable success. Now, cooking is both an art and a science. For its progress as an art we are not greatly concerned, although our profession would undoubtedly suffer in pocket should fine-art cookery go out of fashion. "Elegant" dishes are generally whited sepulchers, and the forerunners of blue pills and other disagreeable correctives. We hope that the school will busy itself mainly in imparting a knowledge of the scientific principles of cooking, and will teach their cooks that the quality par excellence which all food should have is wholesomeness. The bulk of the English people live in big cities, and if we were asked to name the most predominating characteristic of our urban population, we should say "dyspepsia." Those who spend their days in dark offices, chambers, or consulting rooms, and keep their noses everlastingly upon their respective grindstones, seldom knew that good digestion which should wait on appetite. Hitherto their dinners have not been so skillfully prepared as to demand the least possible effort from a jaded stomach; but let us hope that the national disgrace of indigestibility will no longer dim the brightness of our hospitality, and the number of patent medicines which are sold so largely in this country as aids to digestion will undergo a rapid diminution.

Marvelous Billards.

Adrian Izar, the celebrated billiard player, gave one of his scientific entertainments in the Newcastle Town Hall, England, recently, before an appreciative assembly. Though an expert with the cue, his favorite mode of play is by spinning the ball from between the thumb and forefinger of the right hand. He has this great advantage over his opponents who use the cue, that he can move his ball from any part of the board and spin it from whichever side of the object ball shall be most favorable for the intended carom or hazard. The first item in the programme was a carom of 150 points up, wherein Mr. G. H. Banks, of the Black Boy's billiard rooms, received 50 points start, the French professor winning by 30 points. Then followed an exhibition of fancy shots which has never been surpassed on this side the pond. Monsieur Izar played a new stroke known as the snake carom, the ball running the gauntlet of two decanters and sixteen tumbler glasses before making the desired carom. He made carom after carom, causing his ball to describe all sorts of curves, caroms from misstrokes, caroms on the woodwork of the table, from the table on to the floor, caromed with fifteen pyramid balls, spun the balls into all the pockets from every conceivable angle, and wound up a most marvelous entertainment by spinning one of the balls upon a plate for four minutes and a half.

How a Flock of Sheep was Drowned.

Galignani's Messenger notes that a somewhat singular incident had just occurred at a farm belonging to the château of Avignon, in the Camargue, Bouches-du-Rhone. A flock of 684 sheep were feeding, when they were suddenly surprised by a violent storm of wind and rain dashing in their faces. They instantly turned and ran away to escape the driving shower, but, unfortunately, the path they selected led them straight to a deep pond, into which they plunged one after the other, and were all drowned. A poor dog, which was in charge of the flock, endeavored to stop them, but the pressure of the frightened animals was so great that he was borne down and shared their fate. Their bodies were extricated the next day and buried in deep ditches dug close by. The loss was estimated at nearly 30,000f.

HYDROPHOBIA.

Does the Fear of it Constitute the Disease?

The following leading article in the London Times of June 9, on the subject of the fear hydrophobia, will be found worthy of perusal:

An alarm about canine madness is one that is almost certain to recur periodically with the recurrence of hot weather, although it has been known to all who are practically acquainted with the subject that neither season nor temperature exerts any appreciable influence upon the prevalence of the disease. In England, where dogs are so often killed in [illegible] trustworthy statistics [illegible] part of the question [illegible] France, where [illegible] been [illegible], it has been shown that the difference between the different periods of the year is only trivial, but that, in fact, more authenticated cases of rabies occur in spring. The summer and winter quarters afford each about the same number, and the autumn quarter is the least severely visited.

We know but little of the natural history of hydrophobia, the constantly fatal human malady which is caused, sometimes at least, by the bites of rabid animals; but there is reason to believe that it may be due, in many cases, as much to fear as to any infection communicated by the bite. A dog which has lost its master and its way; which has, perhaps, committed some petty theft; which has been pelted and chased and driven frantic with terror, may probably bite half a dozen people before its career is brought to a close. If the dog is then killed, all those whom it has bitten are condemned to weeks or months of mental torture or anxiety; while, if it were shut up and kindly treated, a few hours would often prove that there was no madness in the case and no harm of any kind to be anticipated. The symptoms of genuine rabies differ widely from the popular conception of the peculiarities of "a mad dog," and are very similar to those which in the human being attend upon forms of insanity accompanied by what are technically called "hallucinations"—that is to say, by voices of visions which have no reality except to the sensations of the sufferer.

The stories about hydrophobia occurring seven years or twenty years after a bite are probably in most cases fables; and, if not fables, they at least show that the disease may arise spontaneously; but yet there is no certainty with regard to the period of time at which it can be said that all danger has ceased. According to the best authorities, when two months have elapsed, the person bitten by a rabid animal may entertain a well-grounded hope of escape, and after ninety days the occurrence of hydrophobia is almost exceptional. It appears from the returns furnished by the police that sixty-seven dogs have been reputed to be mad and have been destroyed within the metropolitan district between the 1st of January and the 31st of May of the present year. One of these dogs worried forty sheep and killed some ducks, and one of the sheep is said to have died of rabies five weeks afterward. In the other sixty-six cases there was no evidence of madness beyond the fact of the accusation. Not a single case of hydrophobia has been received into any of the metropolitan hospitals, and of twenty-five policemen who have been bitten by dogs only five were sufficiently hurt to be placed upon the sick-list, and only one of these is still absent from duty. It would seem from these figures that the fear of hydrophobia recently excited has not been due to the existence of any corresponding degree of danger. If the sixty-six dogs which were said to be mad have bitten any persons, it is certain that none of these have as yet suffered, and that a large proportion of them must now be comparatively safe. But the probabilities are that not one of the dogs was either mad or in the slightest danger of becoming so, and that, if they had been shut up and watched for a time, the symptoms which gave rise to the belief would have been found to admit of some different interpretation.

Longevity of Trees.

From an article by Elias Lewis, on the "Longevity of Trees," published in the Popular Science Monthly, we learn the following facts of the greatest age of trees:

	Years.
Palms	500
White Pine	450
Wadsworth Oak, Geneseo, N. Y.	800
Cowthorpe Oak, England	1,800
Oak at Saintes, France	2,000
Chestnut, Tortworth, England	1,000
Linden, Wurtemberg, Germany	1,000
Evergreen Cypress, Spain	800
Cedar of Lebanon	1,200
Cypress of Montezuma, Mexico	2,000
Cypress of Santa Maria del Tule	4,000?
Ankerwyke House Yew, England	1,100
Brabene Churchyard Yew	2,500?
Sequoias, California	2,000?
Baobab, Africa	3,000

According to this, 500 years may be reckoned the longest life of a tree in the United States east of the Rocky mountains.

MR. CYRUS W. FIELD is at present in San Francisco, and has been interviewed with reference to his proposed girdle about the earth. The general direction of the line is from San Francisco to Yokohama by the southern route, whence two lines extend westward to Europe—one through Siberia and the other around by the way of the East Indies, while a line from Australia is to take the latter at Singapore. The distances by the southern route are as follows: From San Francisco to Honolulu, 2,200 miles; thence to Ocean Island, 1,200 miles; from there to Yokohama, 2,300 miles. Some of the soundings have already been taken, and as soon as they are finished a company will be formed, and the necessary enabling legislation will be sought.

IT is definitely established at last that a cork leg is not a life-preserver. A few days since a deck passenger on a Louisville and Cincinnati packet sprang overboard. A boat and crew went immediately to his rescue. As he floated on the surface of the water no one suspected that he was in any danger. When lifted into the yawl he was dead. A patent cork leg that he wore had kept the body from sinking; but, as his head was not cork, it sunk just enough to drown the unfortunate man.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

TO DESTROY BUGS, ETC.—Any insect which crawls can live under the application of hot alum water. In will destroy red and black ants, cockroaches, spiders, chinch bugs and all the myriads of crawling pests which infest our houses during the heated term. Take two pounds of alum and dissolve it in three or four quarts of boiling water; let it stand on the stove until the alum is all melted; then apply with a brush while nearly boiling hot, to every joint and crevice in your closet, bedsteads, pantry-shelves, and the like. Brush the crevices in the floor of the mop-boards, if you suspect that they harbor vermin.

LONG FURROWS.—A German agricultural journal prints a plea for long furrows. The turning of the plow and the commencing of a new furrow require more exertion in the plowman and the team than continued work on a straight line; and how great may be the loss of time from frequent interruptions in short turns may be shown in the following calculations: In a field 225 feet long, five and a half hours out of ten are used in redirecting the plow; with a length of 575 feet, four hours are sufficient for the purposes; and when the plow can proceed without interruption for 800 feet, only one and a half hours of the daily working time are consumed.—Rural Register.

COST OF CROPS.—A Delaware county (Ohio) correspondent of the Rural New Yorker estimates the cost of growing the different crops on land worth sixty dollars an acre to be—corn, 80 bushel per acre, 20 cents per bushel; 60 bushels per acre, 25 cents; 40 bushels per acre, 31 to 35 cents; 30 bushels per acre, 37 to 40 cents. Wheat, average cost, one dollar per bushel. Oats, at least 30 cents at 30 bushels per acre. Potatoes, at 100 bushels per acre, 20 cents. These estimates include manure, plowing, harrowing, drilling, planting, thorough, good cultivation; and the stalks and straw of corn and grain to pay for husking or threshing, and five dollars per acre for interest and taxes on land.

WASTE LANDS.—The reclamation of land and utilizing it, thus making waste places productive, is one of the economical modes a farmer has of reducing the proportion of his taxes to production. Thousands of acres of most productive lands lie idle and taxes are paid on them in almost every State, the net product resulting from the reclamation of which would pay the entire taxes of the farmer. Often the best lands on the farm are thus wasted—worse than wasted—for the want of a little vim and enterprise on the part of the owner. It should be a rule with all farmers not to own an acre of ground that does not pay him a profit (either by production or appreciation in value) on its assessed valuation. No business man can afford to keep such land if he has active profitable use for his capital.

HOUSEHOLD MEASURES.—As all families are not provided with scales and weights, referring to ingredients in general use by every housewife, the following information may be useful:

Wheat flour, one pound is one quart.

Indian meal, one pound two ounces is one quart.

Butter, when soft, one pound one ounce is one quart.

Loaf-sugar, broken, one pound is one quart.

White sugar, powdered, one pound one ounce is one quart.

Best brown sugar, one pound two ounces is one quart.

Eggs, average size, ten eggs are one pound.

Sixteen large tablespoonfuls are half a pint, eight are a gill; four half a gill, etc.

WET PASTURES.—A writer in the London Field relates his experience in reclaiming wet pastures. He has found shallow draining the most advantageous, and that the tile may be safely laid either nearer the surface or further apart than in draining arable land. Having tried lime and barn-yard manure as top dressings after drainage, he was led to substitute bone-dust, and found it much more beneficial than either or both of the former. On a thin, light soil, 1,000 pounds of bones produced a fine, rich, thick herbage, in place of the coarse grasses and sedges that grew previous to the draining. On heavier clay the quantity of bones was increased with good effect. An outlay of $20 per acre in bones, he found was returned in a very short period, while the benefit was still apparent after the expiration of twenty years.

LEARNING FARMING.—The New York World says: Again and again—and especially at this season of the year—do young men ask advice of agricultural editors as to the best way to learn farming. The answer in all cases is simple and brief: Go to work on the best farm and under the direction of the best farmer you can find who will accept your services. There is other way—no schools nor system of study that will so quickly make a farmer of a young man; but he should not neglect to study. Every agency that he can employ to give him a better insight into the scientific features of husbandry should be employed; even when his bones ache with labor of the day, his mind may work; and two hours daily given to wise reading or study will enable him to accumulate a vast amount of theoretical as well as practical information from the recorded experience of others.

CUT-WORMS.—The New York Times says: We have succeeded in greatly reducing the number of this pest by enticing a flock of poultry into the field while it was being plowed. The fowls followed the plow closely, picking up every cut-worm exposed, and searching every furrow for more. There is no other way of ridding the fields of these vermin but by encouraging their natural enemies. These are crows and blackbirds which devour the grubs, and skunks and moles which devour both the grubs and the beetles, of which they are the larvæ. While these creatures are killed or driven off, we shall suffer from the depredations of the insects which are their natural prey. To prevent the destruction of the young corn by the cut-worms to some extent, the seed should be rolled in common pine tar and then dried in plaster before it is sown.

SMUT IN GRAIN.—Smut is caused by a parasitic fungus long known to botanists by the name of Ustilago Maydis, and it has frequently been described and figured in botanical works. Its development for growth is also pretty well understood. The fungus grows from very minute spores, which are produced by millions, but exactly as to how these spores react and infect the growing corn, I can find nowhere any definite information, nor have I seen any data relative to preventives. We are here left to surmises and analogies.

Smut in wheat is produced by a similar fungus, similar in its botanical characters, in its results, and this wheat smut fungus is much better known. It is proved that this gains access to the plant through the seed. The spores are sticky and adhere to the sound grain at harvest or thrashing, and are sown with the seed wheat. As the new wheat-plant grows, the fungus develops in due time with it, ripening its spores at harvest. The spores may be killed and the crop saved by soaking the seed wheat in strong brine, or in a weak solution of sulphate of copper, commonly known as the blue vitriol or blue stone. (The proportions used are two to five ounces of the crystals per bushel of wheat.) It would be well to try the same remedies with corn. I have seen this recommended, but I have no information whatever as to the results. Corn-smut is rarely abundant enough to seriously affect the crop, and is principally dreaded because it is poisonous to the cattle.—Prof. Brewer.

The Incubation Period of Hydrophobia.

The incubatory period of hydrophobia, says the Galaxy, or the space of time during which the virus may remain latent in the system after the bite of a rabid animal, is seldom less than eight days, and but rarely exceeds two or three months. The large majority of cases, says Reynolds, have occurred within four and eight weeks. Many authentic cases have occurred in which the period of incubation extended to eight or nine months, and a few where it appeared to be much longer. A remarkable case has been placed on record, says the same author, in which a man who had been in prison for a period of more than two years became affected with hydrophobia, although he had only been bitten by a mad dog seven years previously. The following case, however, which we find in a newspaper, seems to show that the period of incubation in this disease may be protracted indefinitely: Twenty years ago a daughter of Peter Hawk, Esq., of Strondburg, Pa., was bitten by a mad dog. Although cattle bitten by the same dog were seized with hydrophobia, the girl did not show symptoms of disease. She grew to womanhood, and was married. Recently, as she was raising a glass of water to her lips, a shudder ran through her, and in a few minutes she was seized with hydrophobia in its worst form. A number of physicians were called, but they could do nothing for her. She died in great agony. Another recent case of protracted incubation we find related as follows in the World of May 14: Eighteen years ago, Daniel C. Weidner, of Farmingdale, N. J., then only six years old, was bitten in the left arm by a rabid dog. He suffered a great deal of pain at the time, but it gradually passed away, and was almost forgotten. A few days since, while attempting to wash his face, he was seized with the symptoms of hydrophobia. In spite of all the medical care that could be given him, his condition grew worse and worse, and, after forty-two hours intense suffering, he died.

A Railway Incident.

The other day, on a Michigan Central train coming east, was an old lady who had never traveled a great deal. She wasn't used to the ways of the book agents, the peanut boys, and the prize-package nuisances who pass through the train every few minutes. When the peanut boy came along and dropped a big African peanut into her lap she shucked it, opened her mouth and dropped the kernel down, instead of regarding it with silent contempt or pitching it out of the window. The book agent came along and dropped a book into her lap. She said she was "much obleeged," and she carefully locked it up in her valise. The prize-package boy came along and dropped a sample, and she wondered how the road could afford to give away so much. When he returned she had opened it and was wearing the breast-pin and eating the gum-drops. The book agent came back and wanted his book, and before she would give it up she called the conductor to see if it was right. The card boy wanted pay and she appealed to the passengers. When she understood that he was right she handed over 25 cents, with the remark, "Well, ef I haint all-fired turned round. I wish I'd stayed tu hum!"—Detroit Post.

TIME, THE GREAT HEALER.—Time heals all griefs, even the bitterest, and it is well that it should be so. A long indulged sorrow for the dead, or for any other hopeless loss, would deaden our sympathies for those still left, and thus make a sinful apathy steal over the soul, absorbing all its powers, and causing the many blessings of life to be felt as curses. As the bosom of the earth blooms again and again, having buried out of sight the dead leaves of autumn, and loosed the frosty hands of winter, so does the heart—in spite of all that melancholy poets write—feel many renewed springs and summers. It is a beautiful and blessed world we live in, and, while life lasts, to lose the enjoyment of it is a sin.

CURE FOR A FELON.—The following is given as a sure cure for felon on the finger: Take common rock salt, such as is used for salting down pork and beef, dry it in the oven, then pound it fine and mix it with the spirits of turpentine in equal parts. Put it on a rag and wrap it round the finger, and as it gets dry put on some more, and in twenty-four hours we are assured the felon will be dead.

How to Make a Good Bed.

Perhaps some of the housekeepers who read the Farm Journal would like to know how they can make an inexpensive and, at the same time, good and durable bed, or mattress and bolster. And then, perhaps, those same housekeepers, after reading this article, will throw it aside with the remark, "merely a whim." That is what my friends said when I told them what I was doing, "one of your whims," but it did not discourage me; I persevered, and the result shows that the "whim" was not a bad one. I have a bed that will (with good usage) last a life-time. It is merely a tick, the same as for straw or husks, with openings in the upper side to insert the hand for stirring, and filled with cut paper. Now, reader, do not throw aside the paper with disgust, but, if for nothing but curiosity, finish the article; it will do no harm—possibly you may be induced to make one. The work of cutting the paper is not such a long job as you would think. Take any kind of clean paper (except straw wrappings) and fold it, or roll, so that it can be cut with one clip of the shears, and then cut it. You need not be particular as to the width, although the narrower it is cut the better it is. These clippings are like little curls or rings of paper, and lie almost as light as feathers, and after using the bed they will not break up and grow fine and dusty, but are clean and can be stirred as light as when first used. I have heard people who have slept on them say they "were the best beds they ever slept on." I prefer them to feathers or common mattresses. Hair mattresses are nicer, of course, but few of us farmers' wives can afford to buy them, whereas the paper bed we can have without cost, except the work, and in that the smallest child you have who can use a pair of shears will help you, and if not kept busy too long at a time will think it but play. The same material makes nice pillows for lounges, chair-cushions, cradle-ticks, etc. I have a box to keep waste paper in, which is out of the way, and at the same time handier than the rag-bag; and when it is full I cut them into another box and put them into the tick. I use the same ticks that I have used for straw, wash them and sew up the openings, so they are just large enough for the hand to pass through readily; three openings are sufficient.—Correspondence American Farm Journal for June.

A Grand Variety of Products by the Different States.

A recent report of the Agricultural Department summarizes the agricultural industries of the different States as follows: In Maine, hay occupies the first place, and dairy husbandry the second; hay and stock-raising are of equal importance in New Hampshire; dairy husbandry stands high in its prominence in Vermont; in Massachusetts, hay first, market-gardening next; the garden and the dairy divide the honors in Rhode Island, and tobacco stands first in Connecticut. There is diversity in New York, but dairy husbandry is far in advance, being the choice of one-third of the counties. There is much variety in New Jersey, though market-gardening stands first. In Pennsylvania, manufacturing and mining make a varied production most popular, few counties exhibiting very decided preference, though wheat, as few would suppose, holds its place in one-sixth of the counties. In Delaware, tobacco; in Maryland, tobacco and fruit-growing. Of more than fifty counties of Virginia, sixteen favor tobacco, nine mixed husbandry, six corn, five stock-raising, five market-gardening, and others peanuts, sheep husbandry, fruit-growing and wheat. In North Carolina, corn stands before cotton. In Florida, sugar-cane is preferred, while cotton predominates in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and in Texas. In Arkansas, corn stands first, and in Tennessee hay and corn are preferred. In West Virginia, corn and stock-raising; in Kentucky, tobacco and corn. In Ohio, great diversity appears—sheep husbandry, corn, general cropping, wheat, hay and fruit-growing. Corn is king in Indiana, and hay next thereto. Corn is also first in Illinois, and wheat next. In Minnesota, wheat; in Wisconsin, wheat and the dairy; in Iowa and Missouri, stock-growing, corn and wheat. The order in Kansas and Nebraska is wheat, stock-growing and corn. In California, wheat, sheep husbandry and fruit-growing. In Oregon, wheat and stock-growing.

Milk for the Lean Kine.

If one wishes to grow fleshy, a pint of milk taken before retiring at night will soon cover the scrawniest bones. Although nowadays we see a great many fleshy females, there are many lean and lank ones who sigh for the fashionable measure of plumpness, and who would be vastly improved in health and appearance could their figures be rounded with good solid flesh. Nothing is more coveted by thin women than a full figure, and nothing will arouse the ire and provoke the scandal of one of those "clipper builds" as the consciousness of plumpness in a rival. In cases of fever and summer complaint milk is now given with excellent results. The idea that milk is "feverish" has exploded, and it is now the physician's great reliance in bringing through typhoid patients, or those in too low a state to be nourished by solid food. It is a mistake to scrimp the milk pitcher. Take more milk and buy less meat. Look to your milkman; have a large-sized, well-filled milk pitcher on the table each meal, and you will also have sound flesh and light doctors' bills.

Promising Wheat Crop.

There was never a time within the knowledge of that remarkable gentleman, "the oldest inhabitant," when the prospect of so large a yield of wheat was so promising as at present in this part of the State. Several farmers in this vicinity anticipate a yield of thirty bushels to the acre, and some of them hope for even a larger yield than that.

A gentleman from Monroe county informed us last week that he had ten acres from which he felt assured that he would obtain at least forty bushels to the acre.—Alton (Ill.) Telegraph.

GOLD AND SILVER.

Sixteen Hundred Millions Dug Out on the Pacific Coast.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

Notwithstanding the expanded ideas of California wealth that exist abroad and at home, it will surprise not a few to learn that one-third of all the gold and silver coined and uncoined in circulation in the world, and a half of that used in America, Europe, and Australia, has been the product of the Pacific coast from 1848 to 1874. The precious metal product of the coast, has nearly equaled a value of $1,600,000,000, the exact figures being $1,583,644,934, of which $1,347,509,503 was gold, and $236,135,431 silver. But for the immense product poured into the coffers of commerce, it is difficult to imagine how the latter could have been carried on, enormous as its increase has been without a corresponding depreciation in prices, or a vast expansion of the system of credits and paper money. To the United States in particular, it has supplied nearly $900,000,000 of all the precious metals used in coinage and the arts since the foundation of the Government. The total amount coined up to the end of 1873 was nearly $860,000,000, of which $750,000,000 has been from California gold and silver. What would have been done without this, and how commerce could have been carried on with foreign nations, are questions that are puzzling. It seems, indeed, that the general progress of not only the Pacific coast, but of the whole nation, would have been very sensibly retarded. England, since 1848, has loaned eight thousand million dollars to the nations, and this she has been enabled to do by means of the gold and silver product of America and Australia—mainly the former. At least five thousand millions of this sum, bringing a yearly interest of two hundred and fifty millions of dollars has been derived from the Pacific coast. Nearly all that we have sent East, and $190,000,000 more, has gone thither, and has been loaned some half a dozen times. England lends gold and silver obtained from the United States, in exchange for goods to France. France pays it back again for merchandise. Then it is borrowed by Germany and by that nation paid back for manufactures, when it is again loaned to Russia, and so on. By this system one dollar in coin is sometimes made to perform the work of a dozen, and hence it is that the capitalists of England grow rich on the handling of the product of our lodes and placers.

Of the whole yield California has produced three-fourths, or $1,094,919,098, nearly all gold, with a small sprinkling of silver. It is thought that there exist mammoth silver lodes in various parts of the State, but they all pale their ineffectual fires before the wondrous ores of Nevada. This State comes next, having produced since 1860 upward of $221,402,412 in gold and silver, three-fourths having come out of the wonderful mines of the Comstock. The greater portion of this has been silver, although in many mines the gold forms at least one-third of the precious metals yielded in the assay. Utah, though long known as a country rich in the precious metals, has only lately been a producer of them. The Territory has produced, $18,527,527, principally silver, and is increasing in production at a great rate. In fact, its resources in this way are simply inexhaustible. Montana first became known in 1862, and for two or three years its placers gave great promise, but they have lately ceased to yield much, and quartz mining is not being pushed with sufficient vigor to make amends for the failure of the placers. It has produced altogether up to the present time, $119,308,147. The same may be said of Idaho, which has produced $57,249,197. Colorado, as a mining field, is just about being developed, and will make for itself, by and by, as great a name as Nevada or California. It has produced about $30,000,000. Oregon and Washington have a history very similar to that of Idaho. They have produced $25,501,250. British Columbia has added about $9,000,000 to the riches of the coast, and Arizona a small sum; but that Territory is capable of being made to support a large mining population. Its being named at present as a mining territory is a seeming misnomer, as its yield is very small, but it has great and undeveloped mining capacities.

For the last seven years the yield of the precious metals on this coast has been increasing steadily, last year having increased about 14 per cent, being $80,287,436 against $70,236,914 in 1872. This was principally due to Nevada, the increase of which last year was unprecedentedly great. But the yield of Idaho and Montana has been for some years decreasing, on account of their placers being worked out and their quartz lodes not being sufficiently developed.

Valley of the Nile.

Bayard Taylor, writing from Egypt, says:

Even Herodotus made the mistake of declaring that the fruits of the earth are nowhere brought forth with so little labor as in Egypt. We are accustomed to consider the Valley of the Nile as a sort of natural harvest field, self-renewed from year to year, its inhabitants having little more to do than sow the seed, and look on idly until the grain is ripe. I cannot see, however, that the Fellahs perform less, or less continual, labor than the farmers of Europe or America. The inundation, it is true, leaves a thin deposit of new loam, but the field must be manured, in addition, from the supply furnished by the numberless pigeon-houses, and afterward well plowed. Then, during the growth of the grain, the irrigation requires daily supervision and toil. As the water sinks in the canals, it must be raised to the fields, either by wheels turned by buffaloes, or poles and buckets worked by men. From morning until night the people are busy, and I never heard one of them complaining of the amount of his toil.

THE homeopathists are increasing in numbers very rapidly in the United States. At the recent session of the American Institute of Homeopathy, the President, Dr. Youlin, of Jersey City, said that since its introduction in the United States in 1828 the number of practitioners of that school of medicine had grown from nothing to 6,000.

Crossing the Bridge.

When the large elephant, "Empress," was about to cross the Great Bridge, in Hartford, a crowd of nearly one thousand persons assembled to witness a performance which the elephant undoubtedly dreaded. The proprietors, fearing that the animal would not cross on that structure, had taken the precaution to have her skin oiled, in the morning—several buckets of neat's-foot oil being used in the operation—with a view to having her swim across. At first, Empress refused to go on the bridge, and stood moaning and trumpeting on the solid ground at the entrance. Suddenly she turned and made a charge up an adjacent street. The crowd quickly fled in all directions. Her keeper got her, and then, to show her the alternative if she persisted in refusing to go over the bridge, walked her along the branch railroad track so as to give her majesty a near view of the river, and the choice of a plunge into the cold waves and swim across, or a walk on the bridge. She didn't like the prospect of a plunge and swim, and graciously accepted the bridge. But to the last she refused to take the south track on the bridge, which is the avenue used by parties going east, and walked, trembling as she went, upon the north side. She carefully tested each plank before trusting to it; but she was in due time safe on the other side. The bridge company did not take toll of the elephant—though they did of the wagons of the circus—preferring to let her owner take his own risk. She weighs, it is said, nearly seven tons. Twelve or fifteen tons have been carted over the bridge; but that was on wheels, and wheels so distribute the weight they carry that they can take in safety a heavier load over a wooden bridge than an elephant's foot carries. Elephants, however, of various sizes have crossed this bridge, though the large ones, after feeling of it, dislike to go, and some will not, and have to swim for it.

The Potato.

The potato crop is one of considerable importance. We raise annually not far either way from 150,000,000 bushels, representing a money value of about $100,000,000 to the consumers. As an article of food, it has a greater value to us than any other that we call root crop. Twenty-five per cent. of the weight of the potato is solid, dry substance, and of this 62.5 per cent. is starch. When we remember that starch is that material in living bodies which furnishes nutrition to the respirative processes and fat to the tissues, we must acknowledge its primary importance in the animal economy. Yet, strangely enough, the potato is greatly neglected as an article of food for farm stock. Possibly the explanation may be found in the fact that its nutritive qualities are not completely developed without cooking; but this explanation is not a satisfactory one, for so large an amount of nutritive element exists in a crop of potatoes, and the crop when well cultivated yields so abundantly, that it is a most uneconomical neglect either not to raise it for stock food or not to cook it when it is raised.

As compared with wheat, a comparatively small crop of 150 bushels of potatoes, which may be raised with equal facility as twenty bushels of wheat, will be found to contain 2,250 pounds of dry nutritive substance, of which 62½ per cent. is starch. The equivalent crop of wheat would contain only 1,044 pounds of dry substance, of which about 60 per cent. is starch. A fair crop of potatoes may then be considered as double the value of a fair crop of wheat. This places the potato in a fair position as a farm product, but it is rarely so considered. Again, as a crop in the farmer's rotation it has a high value, for there are but few, if any, crops which leave the soil in such an excellent condition for a following crop of wheat, and none that we know of following which a crop of wheat succeeds so well.

A Row.

Not long ago a fellow, apparently in a state of great excitement, rushed into a saloon in Virginia City, and, throwing his hat on the bar, he cried to the bar-keeper: "Give me a drink, Dan, quick! There'll be the biggest row you ever saw in about two minutes!" Dan set out the whisky bottle, and, while the stranger nervously filled his glass to the brim and drank it off at a swallow, tightened his belt and looked at the chambers of his revolver. Leaving his hat where it was thrown, the excited stranger hurriedly ran to the door, looked out a moment, and then rushed back to the bar and exclaimed: "Yes, in less than half a minute, there'll be an awful time here! give me another drink, quick!" The bottle was again passed out, another glass was drained, and the stranger had picked up his hat, and was leisurely walking away, when the bar-keeper called after him: "Say, look here! What's all this about a row? You jest come back here and pay for those drinks or I'll let daylight into your hide!" At this the stranger turned about, his excitement entirely gone, and coolly said: "There you go! Didn't I say there'd be a fearful row here in a minute? I knew it. There you go just as I expected." By this time Dan saw the point, and quietly tumbled.

MATRIMONIAL FREAKS.—Very much married was that lady who married her twenty-second husband, who in his turn, had been married to twenty wives! There is an instance recorded at Bordeaux, in 1772, of a gentleman who had been married sixteen times. A woman named Elizabeth Nase, who died in 1768, had been married to seven husbands. She was at the ripe age of seventy when last led to the hymeneal altar, and contrived to survive her "beloved." When on her deathbed, it is stated, she recalled the good and bad points of each of her husbands, and having partially weighed in her mind the pros and cons, she determined that the fifth claimed the highest merit, and ordered that her grave be with his. In 1768 a redoubtable pair were living in Essex, who had been married eighty-one years; the husband being one hundred and seven years old, and his spouse only four years his junior.

THE ACHING TOOTH.

A PARODY ON HAMLET'S SOLILOQUY.

[The following was cut from an old newspaper, printed before these ether-ial and chloroform days, and therefore is hardly up to the alleviating discoveries of modern science. But, perhaps, it may inspire some "Poet at the Breakfast Table" to amend the record and sing how one of the shocks flesh is heir to, is not quite so shocking to the children as it was to the fathers.]

To have it out or not? That's the question;
Whether it is easier for a man to suffer
The throbs and shootings of a raging tooth,
Or take up courage to sit down at once,
And by extraction end them?—a touch, no more
And with a single shock to feel we end
The tedious aches and head distracting pangs
That we are subject to; 'tis relief
Most wisely to be used; perchance wrench out
A sound deep-rooted fang! aye, there's the rub;
For from a bungling hand what mischief follows
When once the horrid instrument is fixed,
Allows no pause; there's the respect
That makes our patience of so long endurance;
For who would ever be applying tinctures,
Specific opiates, poppy, mandragora,
Magnets, metallic tractors, anodynes,
The poisonous rings of mountebanks, or charms
That fond credulity so often takes,
When he himself might his quietus get,
For a bare trifle in a barber's shop!
Who'd sweat and groan whole sleepless nights in vain
But that the thought of torture worse than all,
A broken jaw (which any mortal suffering
Would straight fall frantic) harrows up the mind,
And make us rather bear our present torments
Than fly to others that we never felt;
Irresolution thus doth make cowards;
And heroes of great enterprise and valor,
Turn pale and sickly at bare sight of medicine,
Whilst women, weak and delicate of frame,
Shrink not at operations slow and dreadful.

THE MAIDEN'S LAMENT.

The setting sun gilded her soft brown hair,
  And mellowed the gloom in her luminous eyes,
Then reddened with blushes her bosom fair,
  And sank in a blaze of luxuriant dyes.

Yet the sun comes up with the coming morn,
  And the west will flame again, as of yore;
But a hope once set is never reborn,
  And a heart that is broken is dead evermore.

So the maiden moaned with the moaning trees,
  And lifted wet eyes to the rising moon,
And whispered her woe to the whispering breeze—
  She must wear her spring hat till the end of June

The Population of Great Britain.

The registration system in England is so perfect that the annual estimates of population by the Registrar-General are very nearly as accurate as the absolute enumeration of the census. The variation observed in 1871 was very slight, either in respect of aggregate population or of the population of specified towns and districts. The estimate for the present year, 1874, is therefore worthy of being recorded. It is supposed that the population of England and Wales is 23,648,609—an increase of 936,343 since the census of 1871; of Scotland, 3,462,916—an increase of 102,898; of Ireland, 3,360,018—a decrease of 110,931. The total for the United Kingdom, excluding the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands, which are not estimated, is 32,412,010, being an increase of 928,319 in three years. The estimates for the great towns are also interesting, as showing how largely the increase has been limited to the strictly urban population. We compare the population of all towns now numbering more than 100,000 inhabitants with that of the same towns in 1871, from which it appears that these eighteen towns have now inhabitants to the number of 7,397,646, against 6,996,960 in 1871—an increase of 399,686, or nearly 6 per cent. in three years; and that almost one-half of the entire increase in the United Kingdom is found in towns with less than one-fourth of the aggregate population:

In connection with the nomination of Boss Shepherd, the Toledo Blade (truly loyal) makes bold to say that the President "has, on different occasions, volunteered certificates of character to the public men who were seeting under popular condemnation, and he has nominated such publicly condemned persons to responsible positions against the judgment of the people. Two such cases have occurred very recently. We refer, of course to ex-Secretary Richardson and ex-Gov. Shepherd."

The Republican State Convetion referred with "pride" to the "glorious record of the great party" of progress and moral ideas, but it forgot or passed lightly over the salary grab, the credit mobilier robberies, the Pomeroy bribery, the Sanborn swindle, the Arkansas judicial frauds, the Attorney General's laudaulet buisness, the corrupt judges, Sherman, Durell, Delahay, and Busteed. To this may now be added the results of the investigation of the District ring, the blowing up and bogus robbery of the safe in the office of the Assistant District Attorney under the direction of Col. Whitley, Chief of the Secret Service Division. This small part of the glorious record of the party was entirely overlooked.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

LONG BRANCH, N. Y. July 1.

Dear Courier—As you will observe, we are snugly ensconced at that celebrated Mecca of fashionable summer pilgrims known familiarly as "the Branch." A pleasant suite of rooms at the Ocean Hotel fronting Ocean Avenue and the beach, and all the accompanying glories of the situation are ours for three days more, when we return to the Metropolis to make arrangements to see other fields and pastures green, less expensive if not so nobby and stylish. We have thought of the far west, of the setting sun, have heard of the cool shady retreats and quiet nooks of your western country homes, and having acquaintances in a thriving little city in your neighborhood which from a glance at the map I should infer it to be a suburb of Auburn, called Fort Wayne, have concluded with family, to spend the heated term there, leaving about the middle of the present month. There are many places inviting in their way, and each with its special attractions, but no locality within reach of N. Y. can offer a greater variety of advantages and inducements than Long Branch, as it possesses perhaps more attractions than any other summer resort. In a measure it combines all the natural advantages of which the others boast singly. There is a picturesqueness of landscape, an abundance and novelty of natural wonders and a combination of advantages as regards health, convenience and that are quite unparallelled in their way. True this place misses the absence of two, who in their way were wont to make it lively and added much to the general elan of this beach, and whatever aspersions an uncharitable world may cast after Hembold and Jim Fisk the fact is indisputable that when their lights went out, Long Branch sensibly felt the shadows and the gloom and noted the absence of two, whose money by thousands was poured into this bleak barren sandy beach, and whose efforts chiefly brought the place to the surface and to the public, until now it is not excelled in the known world, with its numerous hotels, healthy sea atmosphere, beautiful drives, ample race course, its far extending ocean frontage, its luxuriant verdure of fields in the back ground, its easy access, together with all its varied appointments and surroudings, make it an almost perfect retreat for the sultry days of Summer. The cottage population is very large and is growing more so every year. New and elegant cottages are seen in process of construction, while those of former years have been newly painted and decorated for the season. Although there are not so many people as ought to be, it is early yet, the elegant seaside drive presents a very brilliant and animated appearance every pleasant afternoon. Nearly every cottage, new and old is occupied, and this of course gives a gay and festive appearance to the place. Several of the hotels opened their doors on June 10, but the season will not fully open until the 4th of July, when every hotel on the Branch will be ready for the reception of guests; and the grand races will commence on Monmouth trotting course continuing a fortnight. The Ocean Hotel is one of the largest in the U. S. it is but a few minutes walk from the depot. Its entire length is 700 feet, giving an immense frontage on the Ocean; its promenade measures 3000 ft, or more than half a mile. The Lelands say they can accommodate 1000 guests comfortably. This hotel was opened on the 10th of June and is filling up rapidly. Keating's Cornet band (40 instruments) is engaged to give open air concerts on the lawn and sacred concerts on Sundays. Most of the best rooms are already engaged for the season, and its proprietors, the Lelands, predict this to be the crowning season for Long Branch. The Howland House, one of the oldest on the beach, opened its doors on the 26th June with a fair compliment of guests. The house has been thoroughly renovated. This hotel is the resort principally of Philadelphia's society, who go there year after year. It has rooms to comfortably care for 500 guests. The Mansion House under the management of Mc Intyre is pleasantly situated in the immediate vicinity of the depot. A new and beautiful piazza has been laid the entire length and new furniture decorate the larger rooms. Schilling's Orchestra furnish music for this gay caravansary nightly and pleasant hops and musicale soirees are distinctive features of this hotel. The U. S. Hotel with Laird as "mine host" has been much improved since last season and has more rooms engaged thus far than it had last year at the same date. It is known as the quietest house at the Branch and is regarded as an excellent haven of rest and recuperation for private families. The Clarendon, Pavillion, Metropolitan, Central, Schmullings and East End are among the names of other most excellent hotels that have been repaired and whose doors are now open and whose hospitable boards are well laden for the sweltering multitudes that will throng this place during the next ninety days. The races this season promise to be the most exciting and brilliant that has ever been run at Monmouth Park. There will be dashes, heats, hurdle and steeple chasing a la Hippodrome. Some of the finest and most celebrated horses in the country have been entered for the July meeting, which cannot fail to draw an immense assemblage. The display of equipages already is most resplendent, many of the handsomest rigs from N. Y. Phil. Balt. and Washington being now here. The magnificent road from the Highlands extending as far south as Ocean Grove gives a continuous drive of ten miles over a broad graded avenue, affording as it does, a delightful view of the ever restless ocean along the entire route, and adding materially to the attractions of Long Branch. Among familiar names to you who will reside in their villas here during the greater part of the summer are President Grant, Mr. Hoey, Sup't Adams Exp. Co, C. Y. Franklyn, Agt. Cunard line, Tom Murphy of the N. Y. Custom House, whose elegant cottage and grounds have been touched up in handsome style and cannot fail to attract the attention of visitors. Gen: Stockton, Frank Leslie, Gen. Horace Porter, Mr. Pullman, of palace car celebrity, Collector Arthur. Edwin Adams, Ex Judge Cardozo, Geo. Childs of the Phil. Ledger, Lester Wallack, Frank Chanfrau, Gen. Babcock, J. B. McVicker, Judge McKeon, Lotta, Maggie Mitchell, Joel Stevens, James Martin of 20 E. 49 st. and a host of others too numerous to mention. To a New Yorker the facilities for reaching Long Branch have been greatly improved since last year. The Steamboats River Belle, and Jane Mosely which now run to the pier at Sandy Hook, connecting with the trains for Long Branch are new, staunch and seaworthy. They are neither as large as Jim Fisk's Plymouth Rock but in every respect as comfortable and swift. Five trains arrive and depart daily.—The boats leaving Pier 8 North River. We have been vegetating here now three days past, another three days will see us through, as we have important business in N. Y. on the Fourth, altho' we would gladly remain here over Independence day to escape the noise and din incident to a N. Y. 4th. The military display as a general thing is a grand affair. The entire National guard consisting of 15,000 men being called out, the column will move as early as 7 a. m. to escape the broiling sun so usual to our Fourths, and a grand march it will be, as it always is. Eastern people celebrate the anniversary of their Country's independence with greater eclat and vim than the residents of the western states; it is a national holiday fast becoming obsolete with you folks out in the western wilds; this should not be so, but I take your western newspapers for my information, many denouncing the apathy of the people in this respect, and calling loudly for a rebaptism of old Revolutionary fire. But I must desist lest I tire your readers, but say to them if they wish to cool off, to come down here, bathe in the salt sea surf, snuff in the briny zephyrs, quaff the cool invigorating Pilsifer beer and gaze upon the ubiq*uit*ous Tom Collins. Ever of the I'm fondly dreaming. E. L. C

—OF—

DEKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 19.

If I have missed any of the pioneers of the Township, I beg pardon, assuring them, at the same time, that it would have given me great pleasure to have had them report themselves, and any interesting item in the history of their settlement in the county. I wish the above remarks to apply to every pioneer in the different Township. Our sketches will soon close.

Please hand in your names, the date of your settlement, and your items and incidents.

Butler Township has rapidly advanced in wealth and improvement. Having had saw mills convenient, most of the early settlers have good buildings on their large farms. By means of a special school tax, good frame school houses have been erected in all of the nine districts, (if I am not mistaken,) and an extra one by private subscription in the neighborhood of Mr. Hall and John R. Moody, in the South East corner of the Township.

Surely, reader' I will be at least excusable, if not praiseworthy, in following the illustrious example of the celebrated "king-o-day," whose praises you will find chanted so beautifully, in Thompson's seasons.—Certainly, says the reader, but pray, what do you mean? What has the sun to do with Wilmington Township?—Much every way—especially in drying up the swamps,—But it is not in this respect that I wish to imitate his majesty, for I am not yet quite ready to "dry up."—How then? Well, in my last I went down in the west, throwing the pelucid light of my refulgent pen over Butler Township, and now at the opening of the chapter, as is the custom of "Dan Sol" at the opening of a new day, I shal come forth.

"Rejoicing in the East."

Pshaw! says the reader'—how egotistical! yes readers and so is the sun—The most egotistical of all creatures—always holding himself up to the public gaze,

Wilminton Township is the most easterly one of the second tier—excepting Stafford, already spoken off. Wilmington is thus described by one of its old settlers, —Rev. S. B. Ward. "It is a second rate Township in quality of soil, taking it together, yet it has some first rate land in it, especially along "Big run, a considerable stream running acrost the North side of the Township. "For fine oak timber, there is no Township in the county that surpasses it." I will only add to this discription, that as a grass growing township it will equal any excepting, perhaps, Jackson.

The first settler in this Township, I am informed, was Mr. Ira Allen, Aaron W. Allen, Esq. He came in, in August, 1836, and pitched a cloth tent on an oak hill, on the East side of the Township.—In that tent he remained perhaps a month or two, until he put up a commodious house, for those times, composed of oak logs hewed square and "notched "down closely. When he came here he was a very large—stout—muscular man, apparently with an iron constitution.

And in the latter part of his life he was entirly helpless, having his limbs distorted and stiffened with rheumatism. As an instance of his hardship and exposures that probably brought on this afiltcion, we will relate an incident as we have learned it from others.

Sometime in October, 1836, Mr. Allen went out to hunt his cattle, of which he had a number, and finding them, far out in the apparently interminable woods and swamps to the North and West, he started home with them. On the way, one of his work oxen mired down. After laboring hard in the mud and water for some time,—the other cattle in the mean time getting started in the woods again.—he started for his tent, but failed in reaching it, and lay out through the night, cold and frosty, as it was, and wet and muddy as he was. The next day John N. Miller, an early settler of the same Township, while making his way through the wilderness to the land he had entered, heard some one hail him away out where he was not looking for a human being, and going where the voice came from, he found Mr. Allen and his boys, laboring to get the ox out the mire, it having lain there all night and now until the afternoon of the next day. They had forgotten to bring an axe, and had to cut a "pry" by bending down a saplin' and cutting it off with a pocket knife while the fibres of the wood where thus strained. Getting this "pry" under the beast, they finally raised him from sunken condition but had to roll him several times over before he could find firm footing.

The Press still delights in giving the Grangers a stab at every opportunity.—The fact is this order is not in harmony with the rings, monopolies, jobs and Credit Mobiliers of the Grant party, and thus they are snubbed

The Northwestern Amateur Boating association will hold a grand Regatta at Toledo on July 22 and 23. The occasion will be one full of fun and excitement, as it is one of the greatest sporting scenes to witness. The railroads will issue half fare tickets and those wanting to see a grand sight should attend. There will be eight races on the water and a lively time is anticipated.

A. E. Inman, the man arrested for the supposed murder of John Burnett, in this county, a few days ago, had a preliminary examination at Waterloo, last week before Justice Wolf and was bound over in the sum of $520, in default of which he was brought to this place and lodged in jail.

Those of our dealers who keep a stock of trunks, valises, &c., should not fail to call at the large trunk factory on Columbia-st., nearly opposite the American House, Ft Wayne, and examine the large stock on hand. They make the best trunks in the country, and have such facilities as to turn them out at the lowest rates.

A young man about 17 years old, stopped at A. S. Leas' livery stable last Thursday a week, and we understand, offered to sell the rig. A short time afterward his father put in an appearance, and the boy made for the woods, with a large number in pursuit, but was soon captured After which father, son and team left for Michigan, their home.

The Press desires to leave out the $50 Tousley affair and decides that the public has no interest in it. Then the public has no interest in honesty, in integrity of purpose, in fair dealing. Like in the matter of finances two years ago, the Press decides in favor of itself, and is a most wonderful paper from its own standpoint. We are willing to let the public decide, however, in these controversies. Our aim is to give facts.

A good joke is told on our clever friend Justice Wolf, of Waterloo. He had promised to marry a couple one evening last week, but the supposed murder case came up in the meantime, and so engrossed his attention that he forgot it. But those two hearts had fondly anticipated the hour that was to make them as one, and they could not forget it. The consequence was that the Squire was awakened from his slumbers about eleven o'clock on the evening in question, and performed the ceremony to the entire satisfaction of all parties present.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

The 98th anniversary passed off most pleasantly. Owing to the surroundings, and the lateness of the day in which it was decided to celebrate, no extensive arrangements were made. Excursion trains ran past our place to other points on both roads, and a large attendance was not expected. In this all were disappointed, as the town was full of people during the day, an unusually large number witnessed the fire works in the evening.

The Committee were prompt in the discharge of their duties and the programme carried out to the letter. It is better to do a little and do it well, than to advertise great attractions and disappoint the people. The last two celebrations here have developed this fact.

The exercises at the grove were excellent, notwithstanding the gale which prevailed at the time. The Cornet Band and Glee Club furnished good music, and Mr. D Littlefield read the Declaration in good style.

The oration by Hon. R. C. Bell, of Fort Wayne, was indeed a splendid effort which was testified to by the crowd in the universal attention given, not one leaving the ground during its delivery. It was eloquent, logical and full of practical suggestions. It was free from that effort of oratorical show, and spread eagle sentiment that usually characterize speeches on this great day. Everybody was pleased, satisfied, and, we think, that as high a compliment as a speaker can expect

The afternoon was devoted to foot and wheelbarrow races, fantastic parades, music and other minor features.

The dance under the auspices of the band was a splendid affair, and Ensley Hall was crowded with the youth and beauty of our neighborhood. The dinner and supper they gave was excellent, too, and we are glad to know that they were patronized. The boys looked well in their suits of blue, and played well, thou' one or two members could not attend from sickness The Bower dance under that prince of conductors, Sam'l Puff, Esq did a good thing by supplying a certain class with an amusement, without which the 4th would have been a blank.

The many and frequent peanut stands did a rushing business, and seemed to have paid well on the investment.

But the most beautiful and attractive feature was the fire works in the evening We never saw such a crowd and jam in Auburn at night. The display took place from the balcony on the court house tower, where it could easily be seen by all. Main st., in front, the side walk, the court yard, 7th-st, and every corner and nook was occupied by a mass, it seemed, of humanity and the sea of upturned faces, as we looked upon them from the balcony beneath the glar of flying rockets, made the scene a most beautiful one The display under the direction of Capt. Altenburg, and Maj. Davis was well conducted, and we feel like giving them due credit. The exhibition lasted for nearly two hours after which three paper balloons were sent up, the first of which went out of sight, the second burned about half that distance and the third came down on the woolen mills, the fire of which was extinguished without doing any more damage than to frighten a little The wooden block was on fire twice during the day and at one time two minutes more would have developed a conflagration that would have consumed everything before it as the wind was blowing a perfect gale. The value of the force pump in the post-office building cannot be over estimated. It is said that it saved the block for once at least, and we would like to see more of them around. The proprietors of the new brick block, will put one in immediately if they care for their property. We think this would be a good time to suggest the property of organizing a hook and ladder company. Had there not been a hatch way in the roof of the woolen mills and we doubt whether ladders could have been brought in time to extinguish the fire. Our citizens should certainly pay some attention to these close calls of fire. They will not always result in our favor.

There was no drunkenness or rowdyism during the day, and no serious accidents befel us. Everybody looked happy and smiling, good humor and enjoyment prevailed, and we are inclined to the opinion that the true American is better educated up to a larger standard of 4th of July celebrations. It used to be a day on which many took license to get gloriously drunk and we are glad to see that the reverse is being brought about.

Our Waterloo and Spencerville friends turned out largely and passed the greater part of the day with us.

Our enterprising building contractors F. Picker & Son, have been doing an immense business in the erection of brick houses during the past season. They have completed a fine residence for Mr. Shilling, near Spencerville, one for John Pile east of town, one for Geo Waggoner, in the north part of town, and one for David fair south of town. All of these parties are strong in their recommendations of the work of Mr Picker has done for them and the prompt manner in which the contracts have been filled. We are glad to learn of their great success this season. Parties contemplating erecting brick houses will find them reliable, full of energy, and reasonable in their prices for work.

Biggest Shipment in the World.

The Aultman & Taylor Threshing Machine Co. of Mansfield, Ohio, made, on June 13th, 1874, the largest single shipment of threshing machines ever made in the world. The train consisted of a huge camel-back locomotive, seventy-six threshing machines, seventy horse-powers and a caboose car. The value of these machines was near $60,000, and the freight over $3,000, as they are all to go to the west.

Simply because we said that the editor of the Waterloo Press, received fifty dollars for campaign purposes and then went back on him and kept his money, Charles gets mad, and talks scabby. We wonder at the taste of some people. They will get mad at the least thing. We supposed that the manner of levying taxes in Lagrange might be the same as in Noble county, and find we were in error. We carefully make the correction. We mean to be fair and honest—a policy that would be rather difficult for Charles to follow.

He talks about the COURIER scab, in his usual delicate and refined manner.—The only scab the COURIER has got, is a small excresence called the Press, at Waterloo, and we rather encourage it, that all that is foul and filthy may pass that way. But we don't care to have much to do with this personal warfare. The matter of calling anyone a liar or a scab does not prove anything and carries little conviction with it. We propose to treat our neighbors like gentlemen, and if they do not prove our idea of what that should be, it will be their fault not ours.

MARRIED.

HARTER—BROUGHTON—On June 23, at Fort Wayne, by Rev. S. Wagenhals, Mr. Geo. A. Harter and Miss Clara T. Broughton, of this county.

Dickens describes somewhere in one of his interesting stories a conflict between a parrot and a monkey, whom their mistress had left in the same room while absent one afternoon. When she returned the parrot had not a feather left. "We've had a devil of a time" was the greeting Polly gave her mistress, and the same may be said of the Congressional Convention at Fort Wayne last Wednesday. Lowry, Zollars, Colerick and Hamilton of Allen County were Candidates, and we regret to say that the very best timber was not selected, Hamilton got a majority on the 2d ballot. In pledging himself Lowry took occasion to go for Bill Fleming, and made several severe criticisms on his official conduct. This created considerable excitement and there was a stormy time. Mr. Zollars made the ablest and most dignified response when called, of any other before the convention. It was in striking contrast to the school boy effort of Hamilton whose very superior Classical education did not seem to pan out well. The nomination does not give entire satisfaction. Hamilton has not been a very zealous worker in the ranks of the party. His brother Montgomery was much more deserving of such a compliment at the hands of the Democracy. As the Democrats have only about 5000 majority in the district, it is fair to presume that their Candidate will be elected.

FRIEND MAYS—Permit us through the columns of your paper to let our friends know about the fine trip we are having crossing the ocean. We started from N. Y. on the 13th of June with pleasant weather and all feeling well. On the 14th the sea was rough, ship rocked considerable and the passengers sea-sick. On the 15th it was cloudy and the sea a little rough. Many of the ladies were sea-sick. We are all in the best of health, and made 303 miles yesterday. On the 16th a steamer passed to our left ¼ of a mile away, and we could see passengers on board. On the 17th the weather was very cold. C. Klotz and Weaver are on deck fixing up their accounts, they're a little sea-sick. Hebel and myself have not come to that yet. We have just passed a mountain of ice to our left, and it makes us button our coats. The Steward just tapped a keg of beer of which we participated in a glass. We are all well except one and he took medicine of the doctor is the cause of his feeling badly. We all send our best regards to you and all inquiring friends. We will write you again when we get to our friends and let you know how the country looks since we left 17 years ago.

Yours, truly.

An Ordinance.

Copy of an ordinance passed at the regular session of the Board of Trustees of Auburn, July 6th 1874:

An ordinance against the discharging of fire arms and fire-works in the incorporated town of Auburn

Be it ordained by the Board of trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, DeKalb County, Ind.

1st That the discharging within the corporate limits of said town of any cannon, gun, pistol or other fire arms, excepting the 4th day of July under the supervision of the marshal of said town, and the discharging or exploding of any fire-crackers, torpedoes, sky-rockets, fire pistols or other fire works or inventions, and the burning of bonfires within said corporate limits, is hereby declared unlawful, and every person or persons convicted of using, furnishing, selling or giving to any person or persons, any such fire-works or inventions for such purpose, shall be fined in a sum not less than one dollar and not more than ten dollars.

2nd It shall be the duty of the Marshal of said town and his deputies to arrest any persons violating this ordiance, and forthwith take such persons before some Justice of the Peace of said town and make complaint thereof in writing before such justice.

Whereas an emergency exists for taking effect of this ordinance it is hereby declared that the same shall take effect and be enforced from and after July 10th 1874.

THE PRESS.

[The striking and suggestive poem printed below was read at the late annual convention of the New York State Editorial Association, by Mr. David Gray, the editor of the Buffalo Courier.]

I.

How shall the poet sing, or bard be heard
To-day, beside the flated stream of time?
Tides of the world's wide tumult down his rhyme;
The clanging air is stirred
With wings of humor; in his ear
The lightning's myriad clicking voices pour
The ceaseless babble of the articulate sphere;
While round him, o'er and o'er,
With waves of warp from farthest clime to clime,
The human ocean audible beats its shore.

II.

Forever more our earth is clamorous grown
And full of tongues. Her ancient silences
Are broken in their places and o'erthrown.
The Past sleeps mute amid its mysteries,
But on its awful sepulcher of stone
The iron hammer of the Present rings.
Gone is the stillness that with brooding wings
Folded the midnight of the early world.
Flown, too—forever flown—
The hush of history's charmed dawn,
With the first flag of morning just unfurled,
When clear and strong,
Some single bird of song,
High in the heaven of his own thought withdrawn,
Poured all his soul in melody
And awoke the tongueless earth to voca l ecstasy!

III.

It is a tropic blossoming-time of Speech,
A Summer when the bloom of words is rife
On every growth of life,
And, to its farthest branches' reach,
Foliage of print is woven and wrought
About the tree of thought,
The rapid foot of action presses
Through tangled literary wildernesses,
So thick, in sooth, the lush papyrus grows,
Our later Nilus hardly flows,
No subtle chance or darkling hint
But leaps to leaf and flower of print.
The very secret soul of things,
That erst in brooding dusk lay hid
Within its waiting chrysalid,
Now hatches instant paper wings
And flutters forth to consciousness,
The blithe and swift Ephemeron of the Press.

IV.

Well may the bard forego his song,
The seer from mountain-top descend;
The Man of News—to him the times belong,
And to his mastery bend!
The modern epic to its unguessed end
Grows under his prosaic pen.
What shall escape his sweeping ken?
The hamlet's gossip, the great town's uproar,
And all the loud report of men,
The light tick of his dropping type resounds again!
His to explore
And flash the torch in darkest nooks of earth,
Through the great groaning lazar-house of life,
Or dens of sweltering death he goes,
And their black secret shows.
The ceaseless, armed tramp of human woes,
Fantastic masques of crime, the strife
Of vulture passion, honor's dearth
And virtue's sad decay,
Council of friends and plot of foes,
With all that courts or shuns the day,
These must his merciless lens expose,
His portrait of the time display,
His, open-spread and bare,
Full in the public light and air,
The good and ill alike to lay;
That, haply, in the day's broad eye,
The social rose may flourish fair,
The deadly nightshades die.
A wizard he, his sheet a magic glass,
Wherein the mirrored world doth shine,
And all its diverse energies
In hurrying throngs approach and pass,
Appear and disappear,
Weaving a web of texture fine
From verge to verge of farthest alien skies;
Till far and foreign are brought near,
And myriad threads of destiny intertwine,
And ever to the ear,
From the same wizard concave rise,
In gusts up-blown from every shore and clime,
The multitudinous voices, blent yet clear,
Of the vast surging earth, the din
Of traffic, the low sough of sighs,
The laughter and the cries
Of many peoples, and the roar of time;
And lo! Humanity, dismembered, marred
Of visage, comes, looks wondering in
And sees, despite the stain of sin,
And features battle-scarred,
And cruel woes endured beneath the sun,
Her face still bears the mold of the divine,
Her mighty many-nationed heart is one!

V.

The plastic time takes ever-changing forms.
The age is past when one compelling mind
Could sway the armies of mankind,
And lead their dumb, obedient swarms
To conquest of ideal lands.
The mighty captains of the race
Sleep in their storied tombs nor rule again—
Heroes of sword, or word, or pen—
With power to loose and bind.
But in a broader, freer space
The circle of the world expands,
And, breaking immemorial bands,
The conscious peoples rush apace!
To blend in one vast commonweal of men!
In the new order thus to be,
No priestly power supreme to blight or bless,
No despot leader she,
The Tenth—our Modern Muse—the Press!
Hers not in her own thinking to be great,
But rather to keep free
The channels of the people's thought,
And be the voice and conscience of the State;
Setting a gauge whereby the State may see
How in their seething caverns palpitate
The pent volcanic forces of its fate.
But not the less her service shall be fraught
With active use and blessing, and confer
A sacred office on her minister,
His, where the springs of public virtue run,
To watch and keep their current pure and strong;
With hand alert, to scourge the wrong
And give the good deed to the sun;
The saving word, the larger creed,
To speak, and, in the speaking, speed;
To preach with pen of fire
Men's "politics" and God's justice shall be one;
And so this fallen world redeem
To heights of its old meaning from the mire.
Not his the prophet's dream,
Or spell of power the nations to inspire;
But, watcher of the seasons, to proclaim
What signs portentous of the future flame,
And in the orient of the world's desire
What new-born stars arise.
Or, like some workman, he who plies
The chisel with swift patient hands,
And shapes the plan a greater hath designed,
The rugged marble fronts him, and behind
The invisible Master stands,
To whom alone
The secret of the block is known.
The time is long, the watcher's eyes wax blind,
And weary is the worker, toiling dumb;
But, at the last, before him there is grown
A figure of the fairer Age to come!
The image of the Master's mind,
Girt with Beauty's perfect zone,
Looms living from the stone!

THE GOD-FATHER.

There is a period in the lives of all men when they are desirous of fame of one kind or another. A few may be for their virtue; and many, Heaven knows, render themselves infamous by their vice. One man desires to be noted for his horses; another, disdaining to trust himself to four legs, and depending upon two, becomes a pedestrian, and emulates Weston. Another endeavors to have his name recorded as a horseman, and considers himself better than any jockey that ever buckled a girth; another covets the reputation of being a "dead-shot," and carries a look in his eyes that bids all men beware of crossing his path or his purpose when his temper is not serene. I've seen this particular kind of notoriety exhibited very frequently in the South; but that was in the days when the command of that region was the law of the land. There has been a change recently. Some men desire fame as dog-fanciers, and there are some who seek fame at the expense of their genius. They wear the best-made and best-fitting coat, and most approved neckties. There is nothing so trifling but a man may make it the passport to fame. It is true, he may never arrive at the end of his journey, but it is enough if it be known he is traveling that way. But of all the desires that come without wooing to the human heart, the wish to be considered wise and wealthy is the most frequently met. There are numbers who contrive to have the fame of being learned without deserving it; and more still, perhaps, who manage to rank as rich who have no pretensions to anything beyond a competency.

I once knew an old gentleman who was a widower, and without heirs. He was a character exactly in point. He was considered to be worth three hundred thousand dollars. He was spoken of as a man of excellent sense and extensive information. He lived very comfortably on eighteen hundred dollars per annum, and died, disappointing at least two generations of fortunes which he had taught them to expect from their cradles. The most that could be said for his talents was, that they consisted of a mixture of caution and cunning. I can fancy that I see him this moment. He was a short, stout and ruddy-faced man; gray-eyed and thin-lipped, and very precise and somewhat pedantic in his speech. He dressed in an expensive way for an old sinner. He always had a perfume of some bouquet on his cambric mouchoir, and his head was as white and odoriferous as the "lilies of the field." He was fond of displaying a splendid diamond ring, which he wore upon the third finger of his right hand.

The habitation of Mr. Deoro was a paradise in miniature. Every thing was required to be kept in the most perfect order. Woe to the servant who would leave a particle of dust visible to strong-powered spectacles. When his friends complimented him on the beauty of his house, he would reply in the most careless style:

"Yes, it is pretty convenient, considering it is so small. I sometimes think of purchasing a large place, but when I reflect that I have no one in the world but myself to provide for, I dismiss the thought. I've got accustomed to my box, and at my advanced age I had better remain quiet."

He kept but one horse, but he was a high-stepper and a marvel of beauty. His carriage was of the most approved make, and trimmed with rose-colored silk. Two servants were all he had in his house. He used to say that many servants would occasion him more trouble than all his wealth. Mr. Deoro was continually hinting that the unobtrusive style in which he lived was agreeable to his taste, though not at all consistent with his fortune. He succeeded in making the world believe this innocent fib.

When a man once establishes his fame for wealth, he is no longer at a loss for friends. They swarm about him like gnats in a sunbeam. Mr. Deoro had his full share. If he ever became weary of his own company, there were dozens of houses where he could dine and be sure of a hearty welcome. But visits of this kind were seldom indulged in by Mr. Deoro, and were considered by those whom he honored with his company as marks of especial favor; indicating that the party "stood high in his will," an expression which Mr. Deoro now and then incautiously dropped before his chambermaid, Susan Stark. Susan never failed to report these speeches to the parties concerned, and many a handsome bonnet and neat shawl she received in return for these valuable hints.

To entertain Mr. Deoro in a becoming style, many a good lady had disorganized the economy of her house for a month. His favorite dishes were known for a circuit of twenty miles, and were sure to be found at any table he thought proper to honor with his presence. Mr. Deoro was god-father to half the children in the county. They had a strange way of asking him to stand for their sons and daughters. About every other girl or boy that you met bore his name in some form or other.

"Sarah Deoro," called out Mrs. Hope to her eldest daughter, "your god-father dines with us to-morrow. Now I rely on you to see that the cook boils rockfish to a bubble, and that the mushrooms are not scorched. Remember, if such a thing should occur, away goes the promised legacy, and you know what Susan Stark said."

Then continuing to arrange matters as nearly as possible to her expected visitor's whims, she would call her eldest son.

"Augustus Deoro! Augustus Deoro?" his mother would ask, turning to her daughter, who was expected to have an eye upon the young hopeful at all times. "Sarah Deoro, where is your brother?"

"Yonder he is, ma'am, with a coal of fire and papa's powder-horn going toward the woodshed."

"Mercy alive!" screamed his terrified mother, dashing after the young scamp, and capturing him before he set fire to the premises. Then bringing him into the kitchen, she addressed him thus:

"Now, my son, your god-father will dine with us to-morrow, and I wish you to be a good boy, and you shall have a pair of long boots and a new knife with four blades."

Augustus Deoro gave a long whistle, and stared at his mother in joyful surprise.

"I will, by golly," he cried.

"Don't use such expressions," his mother replied. "Remember, don't be noisy. Sit quietly at dinner until the dessert is put on, then take the finest bunch of grapes (I will mark them for you), and present them to your god-father, saying, 'This is a present for you, god-papa.' Ah! he will remember you handsomely when he dies."

"Will he die soon?" said Augustus Deoro.

"Hush sir," responded his mother, severely. "Never let me hear such an expression from your lips again."

"You said something about his dying," returned young hopeful, defiantly.

"There, go out in the the yard and play," said Mrs. Hope. "You can't speak before children."

When Augustus Deoro had vanished, his charitable mother began to soliloquize.

"When he dies. Ah! how much would I like to know that happy day."

It seemed as if Mr. Deoro would never shuffle off his mortal coil, for at the age of seventy-four he appeared likely to survive many of his expectants.

Dinner day arrived, and Mr. Deoro likewise. The fish he pronounced exquisite, the mushrooms ditto. Master Augustus Deoro, having during the morning been schooled in his part, approached his god-father at dessert with a luscious bunch of grapes on a gilt-edged plate, saying, "This is a present for you, god-papa." Then he added a phrase not put in the bill, but intended to increase his god-father's admiration of his genius. "Mother told me to say so, for you would remember me in your will when you died."

"What an infamous story. How dare you, sir?" cried his mother, raising her threatening finger, and growing purple in the face.

Mr. Deoro only laughed, and patted the prodigy on his tow-head. Perhaps he had an inward as well as outward mirth.

It was not until Mr. Deoro had weathered eighty-two winters that he was gathered to his fathers. Forty years of his life he had employed in raising the expectations of his friends. He remembered so well the birthdays of his god-children. That was a feat of mind anyhow.

When the news of Mr. Deoro's death was made public, the married population nearly went mad with joy. Augustus Deoro Hope got out his father's powder-horn, and prepared to blow up the maternal castle. It was wash day with Mrs. Hope, but the suds reposed without a bubble. There was somethidg on her mind of more consequence than clean clothes. People chased every lawyer they met to find out how much money Mr. Deoro had left behind him.

Mrs. Multiply had twelve children—four sons and eight blooming, dashing, delightful daughters. Every one of them had Deoro in their names. This amiable family went nearly wild with delight when the melancholy intelligence reached them. Jake, the eldest, determined at once to sell out his shop and travel in Europe; Ezra would hunt up a Congressman, and buy his way to a commission in the army. But the youngest son showed the only genius manifested by the family.

"I shall go to China, and purchase all the shooting-crackers in the land, and then put them on board ship, so as to arrive in time for the fourth of July. I'll double my pile, if nobody but me has fire-crackers." A practical turn of mind had this boy Augustus. Every boy that bore the name of Deoro ordered a shot-gun. Their parents were willing. A great many mourners put on black. An honest man had died, one who would not defraud them of their respective legacies.

Things got so bad in that hitherto peaceful community, that the "expectants" narrowly escaped being committed for riotous conduct.

Mr. Deoro was buried, and there was great lamentation among the "expectants," not for the soulless body they were committing to the dust but rather for the absence of that knowledge they were so anxious to possess. The day for reading the will came. The room was crowded with a motley assemblage of people, whose countenances expressed the most eager anxiety, mixed with an importance that was truly ridiculous; and when Mr. Waryman, the attorney, began to read, the anxiety increased to a painful intensity.

This is the way the will read:

"I hereby give and bequeath to my nephew, Jerome Deoro (whom I for many years believed dead, but who within the last few months has written me that he is alive), all my estates and personal property, amounting to twenty-two thousand dollars ($22,000), save and excepting only the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000), which came to me as a prize from a lottery; which said sum I do direct to be divided among my four hundred and fifty god-children pro rata."

Here followed a list of the young favorites, and a storm of deprecations and smothered curses from the "expectants." Some of the names had long left this troublesome sphere, and gone to put on their wings as cherubs.

"And so he had a nephew, after all," fiercely ejaculated a doting mother, surrounded with six tow heads, all having Deoro in their names. "Ah! the old deceiver. To think of the puddings and ducks I have wasted upon him."

Youth is seldom mercenary, and the older of the young legatees laughed away their disappointment. Not so their parents. Their fury at length became so great that they threatened to tear Mr. Waryman and the will up together, and that poor innocent man was compelled to leap from the window and make good use of his legs, to secure the precious document which had kept his neighbors on the rack of suspense for nearly the quarter of a century.

After all, Mr. Deoro was, perhaps, not so very far from wisdom and wealth. He was wise enough to enable him to cheat the world pleasantly, and somebody has said the "chief pleasure of life consists in being agreeably deceived."

Again, might he not be said to be sufficiently rich, who, during his life, enjoyed every comfort, and surrounded himself with hosts of friends? It matters little that to this day there are some disappointed ones who assert that Deoro was an old cheat. It matters little to him now. While he lived he was considered a very wealthy man, and that filled the measure of his ambition. "Peace to his ashes."

Comets.

Comets are not exactly calculated to inspire in the human heart feelings of confidence as to our general safety. In all times, they have been regarded with dread; particularly was this the case a century and a half ago, when a renowned astrologer predicted that a comet would appear on Wednesday, 14th of October, 1712, and that the world would be destroyed by fire on the Friday following. His reputation was high, and the comet appeared. A number of persons got into the boats and barges on the Thames, thinking the water the safest place. South Sea and India stock fell. A captain of a Dutch ship threw all his powder into the river, that the ship might not be endangered. At noon, after the comet had appeared, it is said that more than one hundred clergymen were ferried over to Lambeth, to request that proper prayers might be prepared, there being none in the church service. People believed that the day of judgment was at hand, and some acted on this belief, sure as if some temporary evil was to be expected. There was a prodigious run on the bank, and Sir Gilbert Heathcote, at that time the head Director, issued orders to all the fire offices in London, requiring them to keep a good look-out, and have a particular eye upon the Bank of England.

IT seems that Mrs. Feenix, who induced the Russian Grand Duke to steal his mother's diamonds, and who now has them in her possession in Paris, is quite safe from arrest, under the French law, which rules that a child cannot rob his parents. The Grand Duke, therefore, not having committed a crime in the eyes of the French law, his accomplice is prima facie to be held innocent.

A CHINESE shipbuilder conceived the idea of constructing a vessel whose paddle-wheels should be revolved water-wheel fashion, by water let down on them from above. The water was to be pumped up into tanks by apparatus attached to the wheels. An expensive craft was built at Canton upon this plan, and the inventor was really surprised and pained when it wouldn't go.

AN insurance case was recently tried in the Court of the Queen's Bench, England, wherein payment was disputed of a policy upon the life of a woman, on the plea that the man to whom it was made payable had no insurable interest in her life. The claimant averred that the deceased was his betrothed wife, and this fact being established, the court held that the claimant had an insurable interest in her life, and the policy must be paid.

TO THOSE who expect to go to France some day, and shiver with dread at the prospect of having to acquire the French language, it may be pleasant to know that only 750 words of any language need be learned to enable the learner to make himself understood with tolerable freedom. It is also said that the agricultural laborers in England use a vocabulary containing only 450 words, and find this limited number sufficiently ample for their daily wants.

THE valley of the Rio Grande del Norte, in New Mexico, recalls the features of the Egyptian Nile. A large population is entirely dependent upon the river. An annual rise of the waters carries a muddy sediment superior in fertilizing properties, as was proved by analysis, to that of the great African river. While the amount of phosphoric acid is nearly the same, the amount of potash is considerably higher. Thousands of acres are lying idle along the valley of the stream, awaiting the enterprising farmer.—Scientific American.

IMPROVEMENT IN DIET.—It is said that the working classes in Liverpool (perhaps throughout the rest of England also) have become meat-eaters to such an extent that the consumption of bread has seriously and proportionately declined. The dearer food has supplanted the cheaper. In one Liverpool street the butchers' shops during fifteen years have increased from seven to thirty, while the number of bakers' has remained the same. Oatmeal, also, which formerly was largely sold, is now scarcely bought at all by the poor. All of which is given to prove that the material comfort of the working-man has improved in that direction.

THE discussion in the English House of Commons, on the question of increasing the punishment of husbands who whip their wives, has called forth some interesting narratives. Cases are abundant where wives who have been outrageously abused, turned savagely against their meddlers who came to the rescue; but the marital climax is capped by a woman whose nose had been bitten off by her husband. The man was arrested and brought to trial, and when the woman was put on the stand to testify she electrified bench and bar by swearing that she had bitten her nose off herself!

Diseases of the Blood.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of the WORLD'S DISPENSARY, Buffalo, N. Y.

Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose Rash or Erysipelas, Ringworms, Pimples, Blotches, Spots, Eruptions, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Rough Skin, Scurf, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Fever Sores, White Swellings, Tumors, Old Sores and Swellings.

"The blood is the life." This is as true as a mathematical or any other scientific proposition, and one that should influence every physician. From the blood we derive our strength and mental capabilities. When this source is corrupted the painful and sorrow-producing effects are visible in many shapes. From our blood our systems are built up and kept in repair. The strength of our constitutions and our powers of endurance and the withstanding of disease-producing agencies with impunity, depend largely upon the condition in which our blood is kept. If it holds in suspension or solution vile festering poisons, all organic functions are weakened thereby. Settling upon vital and important organs, as the brain, lungs, liver and kidneys, the effect of these poisons in the blood is, many times, most disastrous. Hence, it behooves every one to keep the blood in a perfectly healthy condition, and more especially does this apply at this particular season of the year. When you purify your blood to cure Salt Rheum or any Erysipelas humor, you not only cure those diseases, but you put your system in such an improved condition that you are not so liable to any other disease. No matter what the external or exciting cause may be, the real or direct cause of a large proportion of all chronic or lingering diseases is bad blood. The multifarious forms in which it manifests itself would form subjects upon which I might write volumes. But as all the varied forms of disease which depend upon bad blood, a few of which I have enumerated at the head of this article, are cured, or best treated, by such medicines as take up from this fluid and excrete from the system the noxious elements, it is not of practical importance that I should describe each minutely. For instance, medical authorities describe about fifty varieties of skin disease, but as they all require for their cure very similar treatment, it is of no practical utility to know just what name to apply to a certain form of skin disease, so you know how best to cure it. Then again, I might go on and describe various kinds of Scrofulous Sores, Fever Sores, White Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Ulcers of varying appearance; but as all these various-appearing manifestations of bad blood are cured by uniform means, I deem such a course unnecessary. Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the great fountain of life and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will all return to us.

The liver is the great depurating or blood-cleansing organ of the system. Set this great "housekeeper" of our health at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose my Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor (except cancer), from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence.

Enlarged Glands, Tumors and Swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents. The system being put under their influence for a few weeks, the skin becomes clear, smooth, soft and velvety, and, being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory.

The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. The cure of all these diseases, however, is with the use of these most potent agents only a matter of time.

I do not wish to place my Golden Medical Discovery in the catalogue of quack patent nostrums by recommending it to cure every disease, nor do I so recommend it; on the contrary there are hundreds of diseases that I acknowledge it will not cure; but what I do claim is this, that there is but one form of blood disease that it will not cure, and that disease is cancer. I do not recommend my Discovery for that disease, yet I know it to be the most searching blood cleanser yet discovered, and that it will free the blood and system of all other known blood poisons, be they animal, vegetable or mineral. Blood medicines that are advertised to cure cancer should be looked upon with suspicion. They never can do it.

Most medicines which are advertised as blood purifiers and liver medicines contain either mercury in some form or potassium and iodine variously combined. All of these agents have a strong tendency to break down the blood corpuscles and debilitate and otherwise permanently injure the human system, and should, therefore, be discarded.

My Golden Medical Discovery, on the other hand, being composed of fluid extracts of native plants, barks and roots, will in no case produce injury, its effects being strengthening and curative only. Sarsaparilla, which used to enjoy quite a reputation as a blood purifier, is a remedy of thirty years ago, and may well give place, as it is doing, to the more positive and valuable vegetable alteratives which later medical investigation and discovery have brought to light.

Both Discovery and Pellets are sold by all first-class druggists in all parts of the world.

DOCTORS COULDN'T HELP HIM.

JOHN A. WILSON, Esq., Meigsville, Morgan county, O., writes: When I was 12 or 15 years of age, I took what is called King's Evil or Scrofula, and by constant doctoring, it would heal in one place and break out in another. It also broke out in my left ear. I sent ten miles for the first bottle of your Discovery, which did me more good than all other medicines I ever used. I am 28 years old, and doctored with five doctors; not one of them helped me so much as one bottle of your Discovery. I am well and able to do a good day's work.

SALT RHEUM AND ERUPTIONS CURED.

MRS. A. W. WILLIAMS, Claverack, Columbia county, N. Y., writes: I had been afflicted with Salt Rheum in its worst form for a great many years, until I bought your Golden Medical Discovery and took two bottles and a half, and was entirely cured. From my shoulder to my hands I was entirely covered with eruptions, also on face and body. I was also afflicted with Rheumatism, so that I walked only with great difficulty, and that is entirely cured.

HIP-JOINT DISEASE CURED.

J. M. ROBINSON, West Grove Station, Iowa, July 14, 1872, writes: My wife first became lame nine years ago. Swellings would appear and disappear on her hip, and she was gradually becoming reduced, and her whole system rotten with disease. In 1871 a swelling broke on her hip, discharging large quantities, and since that time there are several openings. Have had five doctors at an expense of $125, who say nothing will do any good but a surgical operation.

July 16, 1873, he writes thus: My wife has certainly received a great benefit from the use of your great Discovery, for she was not able to get off the bed, and was not expected to live a week when she commenced using it, a year ago. She has been doing most of her work for over six months. Has used twenty bottles and is still using it. Her recovery is considered as almost a miracle, and we attribute it all to the use of your valuable medicine. I can cheerfully recommend it as a blood-purifier and strength-restorer.

How to Quiet Horses.

According to a discovery made by Prof. Shiff, of Florence—a discovery which has been pushed beyond him by many others—it was found that it was quite enough to touch the nostrils of a horse, simply passing the finger along the sides of the nose, to stop the activity of the heart and respiration, and stop consciousness in a measure. He did not find, but left another to find it, that interchanges between tissues and blood are also stopped. It is well known now that most of those men who succeed in quieting violent horses put their fingers to that part, and sometimes inside the nares. Merely touching these parts may produce some effect. It is not essential that the application be made there, as a pressure on the lip may produce the same thing. In some animals, rabbits and guinea pigs, if we pass needles into their chest and heart, so as to judge of respiration and circulation, we find that the needles stop altogether as we press the lips or part of the cheek. It is not that the poor creature is frightened, as when we have deprived them partly of their consciousness, or almost altogether, by the use of chloroform, the same phenomena occur. There is a very curious fact mentioned by Catlin, who traveled in the West and wrote two volumes on the Indians. He states that the calves of the buffalo, if they are caught, and the air from the lungs of a man is strongly breathed into their nostrils, will become so fascinated by that peculiar influence that they will run after the horse of the hunter, and follow him five or six miles. It is said, and Mr. Catlin affirms it, that in Texas, or in other parts of the country where there are wild horses taken by the lasso, if the hunter succeeds in taking hold of their nostrils, and then forcibly expels air from his lungs into the nostrils of the horse, he will follow him anywhere and become perfectly tame. These facts deserve to be studied I have heard that when Mr. Rarey acted so powerfully on very violent horses, both in this country and in Europe, he had something to do with their nostrils also. What he did, however, he kept in a great measure secret. That part of the system, at any rate, has a great deal to do in diminishing the activity of the principal organs. It is very natural, therefore that such a power should be acquired by one who has done such a thing to an animal as intelligent as the horse.

Golden Maxims.

John McDonough, the New Orleans millionaire, before his death provided for engraving upon his tomb a series of maxims which he had drawn up and adopted for this guidance in life. They were inscribed as follows:

RULES FOR THE GUIDANCE OF MY LIFE,
1804.

Remember always that labor is one of the conditions of our existence. Time is gold; throw not one minute away, but place each one to account.

Do unto all men as you would be done by.

Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

Never bid another do what you can do yourself.

Never covet what is not your own.

Never think any matter so trifling as not to deserve notice.

Never give out that which does not first come in.

Never spend but to produce.

Let the greatest order regulate the transactions of your life.

Study, in the course of your life, to do the greatest amount of good.

Deprive yourself of nothing necessary to your comfort, but live in an honorable simplicity.

Labor, then, to the last moment of your existence.

Pursue strictly the above rules, and the Divine blessing and riches will flow upon you to your heart's content; but, first of all, remember that the chief and great duty of your life should be to tend, by all means in your power, to the honor and glory of our Divine Creator. Without temperance there is no health; without virtue, no order; without religion, no happiness; and that the aim of our being should be to live wisely, soberly and righteously.

A Grave Strike.

What with hydrophobia and hot weather, sun-stroke, suicide, and murder, the means of shuffling of the mortal coil are many and within the reach of all. But then, with all these advantages comes a saddening circumstance—the sextons are on a strike. The other day a good old deacon of a Vermont village was gathered to his fathers. The sexton was notified, and his grave task was soon completed; but he demanded $3 for his work. This was deemed exorbitant by the sorrowing friends of the lamented deceased, and they refused to pay it. Whereupon the sexton locked up the cemetery tools and went home. A new sexton was appointed for the occasion, and he, with intent to do his duty, faithfully broke open the tool-house and obtained possession of the implements. The day of the funeral dawned, and while the sad rites were being performed intelligence came that the "bier" was missing. A search was instituted, but failed of its object. In this dire dilemma, the demands of sexton number one were acceded to, and the funeral came to a satisfactory termination.

Dogs.

There are various kinds of dogs, but the majority of them are more ornamental than useful. Theoretically, dogs are splendid; let us see how they are, practically. The Newfoundland dog is useful in saving children from drowning. But then you have got to have a pond, or live by a lake, and have a lot of children running about loose, liable to fall in, or else the dog is unprofitable. Then there is the shepherd's dog. It is very useful for driving sheep, but you have got to buy a flock of sheep and a farm to keep them on in order to keep a dog of this kind busy. The poodle dog is not very profitable or useful but to pacify old maids and keep them busy over something to tend. The rat-terrier is considered very useful for killing rats, but rats are not worth much after they are killed, and so if you have that kind of a dog, and no rats, you had better sell him for the most you can get.

Profits of British Banks.

The London correspondent of the New York Bulletin has been at considerable pains to compile the following statement of the amount of capital invested in the joint-stock banks of Great Britain, and also of the profits of banking in that country. The following shows that four-fifths of the banks pay ten per cent. or more per annum, in dividends, that one-third pay fifteen per cent. or over, and that one-fifth pay twenty per cent. or over:

The paid-up capital amounts in round figures to $350,000,000, but in addition to this there is an aggregate of surplus funds on hand, after the payment of last dividends, equal to at least one-half of the aggregate of paid-up capital. Many of the stocks, however, are at a greater or less premium over and above the cash value of the capital and surplus, in accordance with the dividends. The aggregate market value of the stocks is in round figures $730,000,000.

Sam Houston Reprimanded.

The solemn farce of reprimanding a man at the bar of the House as a punishment for a breach of the privileges of the body was performed in the case of Sam Houston, Andrew Stevenson being Speaker. Houston had been charged by Stanberry, a member from Ohio, with defrauding the Government in some transactions with an Indian tribe on the Tennessee border. An investigation was requested, but Houston could get no satisfaction, and not willing to rest under the imputation, he inflicted a severe chastisement with a cane in the precincts of the Capital. Houston was arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and there was a long trial, resulting in the resolution that the offender should be reprimanded by the Speaker. It was a curious spectacle. Houston was at that time a striking specimen of manly beauty. He was in the prime of life, with more personal advantages than almost any man of his time. He stood considerably above six feet, and every way finely proportioned. He was dressed in faultless style when the Sergeant-at-Arms led him up to the bar of the House. He was perfectly self-possessed, easy and graceful in manner, without swagger or self-assertion, with the bearing of a man who came there to pay his respects to the House, and especially to its presiding officer. The galleries were crowded, and the members with the spectators looked curiously on. Speaker Stevenson was the only embarrassed person in the hall. He was a large fine-looking man of commanding presence; but he was fidgety and uncomfortable, looking as if he expected Houston to read him a lecture. In a hesitating and perturbed manner he told Houston that the House had ordered him to be reprimanded by its presiding officer, and he, the Speaker, begged him to consider himself reprimanded. Houston bowed in a graceful, dignified, and lordly way, a broad grin spread over the House, and there the matter ended.

Perspiration.

The amount of liquid matter which passes through the microscopical tubes of the skin in twenty-four hours, in any adult person of sound health, is about sixteen fluid ounces, or one pint. One ounce of the sixteen is solid matter, made up of organic and inorganic substances, which, if allowed to remain in the system for a space of time would cause death. The rest is water. Besides the water and solid matter, a large amount of carbonic acid, a gaseous body, passes through the tubes; so we cannot fail to understand that they are active workers, and also we cannot fail to see the importance of keeping them in perfect working order, removing obstructions by frequent application of water, or by some other means.

Suppose we obstruct the functions of the skin perfectly by varnishing a person completely with a compound, impervious to moisture. How long will he live? Not over six hours. The experiment was once tried on a child in Florence. Leo, the Tenth, on the occasion of his accession to the Papal chair, wished to have a living figure to represent the Golden Age, and so he gilded a poor child all over with varnish and gold leaf. The child died in a few hours. If the fur of a rabbit or the skin of a pig be covered with a solution of India-rubber in naphtha, the animal ceases to breathe in two hours.

What Causes Fever.

Prof. Buckman, of England, claims to have discovered one of the causes of typhoid fever. A family in his neighborhood was attacked with a severe type of the fever. On a careful search of the premises, a spout in the family pump was found to be coated with a sort of gelatinous matter. Submitting this to microscopic investigation, it was found to be a fungoid growth, from which spores were constantly washed away by the flowing water. He followed up this discovery by a minute examination of the outlet of the sewer through which the drainage of the town flowed, and his scientific zeal was rewarded by finding fungoid growths of a similar nature to those in the pump spout. In the vicinity of this outlet, the fever had also prevailed. Having cases of fever in his own family, he followed up his inquiry by a chemical analysis of water drank by the family, and found in it minute spores of the same fungus. His conclusion is a natural one, that the fever had its origin in the fungus matter taken into the system, where it ferments as yeast in beer, and poisons the blood.

How a Salary-Grabber was Flanked.

Col. Orzo J. Dodds, late member of Congress from the First District of Ohio, tells a good story about a call he recently received at his office from a man who claimed to be an editor from Arkansas. He was a very seedy-looking chap, and appeared as though he had but recently come off from about a six weeks' spree. Bowing profoundly, then striking an attitude, with one hand on his heart, and the other extending a badly-used plug-hat, he exclaimed with a dramatic air:

"Have I the honor of addressing the Hon. Orzo J. Dodds?"

"My name is Dodds, but I am no longer an Honorable," said the Colonel.

"Not [illegible] Dodds not an Honorable? Now, by St. Paul, when I can scan that honest face, on which all the gods do seem to set their seal," ("green seal," murmured Dodds, to himself), "I read nothing dis-honorable."

"That's right," said Dodds; "never read anything dishonorable. But to business."

"Yes, as you say, to business. I am a printer—I might say, with no unbecoming blush, an editor. I am from the noble State of Arkansaw, the only State, by the way, able and willing to support two governments at the same time. But I have been unfortunate. Much have I been tossed through the ire of cruel Juno, and—"

"Juno how it is yourself," broke in the Colonel.

"Buffeted by the world's rude storms, you see me here a stranded wreck. Scarce three moons past I left my office in charge of my worthy foreman, and sought the peaceful vales and calm retreats of the Muskingum Valley, where my childhood sported. Returning, I stopped in Cincinnati, I fell into evil company, and—but why dwell on details? Enough that I am, that I am—disheartened, ruined, broke! A mark for scorn to point her slow, unerring finger at. As I was about to give up in despair, having given up everything else I had, I thought of you. Sir, I am here. You have not sent for me, but I have come! Your name, sir, is known and honored from one end of this great Republic to the other. It

Glows in the stars,
Refreshes in the breeze,
Warms in the sun,
And blossoms on the fees.

When the National Treasury was threatened by a horde of greedy Congressmen, you stood like a wall of admant between the people and those infamous salary-grabbers. Lend me a dollar!"

"My dear sir," the Colonel hastened to explain, "you mistake the case entirely. I was one of the grabbers."

"You were?" (Grasping the Colonel's hand warmly.) "So much the better! Let me congratulate you that a parsimonious public could not frighten you out of what was a fair remuneration for your invaluable services. I am glad that your pecuniary circumstances are so much better than I supposed. Make it two dollars!"

And the Colonel did. It was the only clean thing left for him to do.

The Outfits of the Haremites.

A correspondent, writing of a Turkish harem, says, "Each lady had three rooms to herself, and the furnishing of them was generally left to her taste or caprice. They were arranged very well, and the furniture was very handsome, but curious in form. A regular Turkish bed is something quite different from ours. There is no bedstead or mattress, but about thirty very thickly padded quilts, covered with silk or satin, laid one on top of the other on the floor until they are about two feet deep. The sheets are invariably of silk, embroidered, and the coverlid is a marvel of gold and silver embroidery or satin or velvet. The pillows are of pink, blue or yellow satin, covered with beautiful lace. From the ceiling hangs a large jeweled and gilded hoop, and from the rich lace curtains which encircle the bed. To hold their robes they have innumerable brass-nailed camphor-wood trunks, and as one of these after another was turned out for me to see the contents, I began almost to lose my head in the confusion of colors and beauty of materials."

HOW TREES GROW.—As showing that trees do not grow upward except by extension of the top, a correspondent of an English horticultural journal writes: About twenty-five years ago, new wooden railings were fixed on a garden wall in front of a house in the neighborhood where I reside. The carpenter, to fasten them more firmly, drove an iron stay into a sycamore tree which stood in the garden, and fastened the other end to the rails. Assuming that the stay was placed level, I find that it is so at present, and a large excrescence has grown over and around that part of the stay which joins the tree. This is one proof that a tree is not elevated bodily by the development of the roots.

RENDERING WOOD UNINFLAMMABLE.—A recent invention relates to a novel treatment of wood for the purpose of rendering the same uninflammable, which treatment also tends to preserve the wood; the said invention consists in the use of a new composition, and in the novel means employed in its application. The fluid which the inventor employs for the purpose is composed of protoxide of iron, sulphate of potash, sulphuric acid, sulphate of aluminum, hydroclorate of soda and protosulphuret of iron, with sufficient water to give fluidity for the application.

ONLY FOR A MINUTE.—A Detroit female, breathing hard and carrying a large hickory cane, ran down the street, the other morning, inquiring if anybody had seen "a small, cross-eyed, man anywhere along here?" Several persons asked, "What's the matter?" But she hurried on, saying, "Haven't time now; I want to get my paws on the fawning sycophant for just a minute."

COBRA POISON AND YEAST.—An analysis of the deadly poison of the cobra shows that it is composed of exactly the same constituents as common beer-yeast. The latter is used in the manufacture of bread, but the former is so virulent in its nature that, even when taken from the snake and preserved for some time, and afterward injected under the skin of animals, it is immediately fatal.

THE Excelsior Magazine, one of the choicest and most artistic of monthlies, is giving $4.50 Field croquet sets, with the magazine for one year for $4.40, or the magazine alone for $3.50 per annum. The Secret of Captivation.—Features of Grecian mold, a well-turned neck, and beautifully rounded arms, are no doubt very nice things to have, and ladies who possess these charms have reason to be thankful to Mother Nature; yet, after all, the most captivating of all womanly charms is a pure, fresh and brilliant complexion. This superlative fascination any lady may secure by using HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM.

Ye Old Mexican Mustang Liniment has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, sprains, scalds, burns, salt rheum, sore nipples, swelling, lameness, chapped hands, poisonous bites, stings, bruises, &c., &c., on men, women and children, and sprains, strains, galls, stiff joints, inflammation, &c., in beasts, than all other liniments put together. It will do what is promised or ye money refunded.

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that PLANTATION BITTERS is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

Reanimating the Hair.—When the hair ceases to draw from the scalp the natural lubricant which is its sustenance, its vitality is, as it were, suspended, and, if not promptly attended to, baldness will be the certain result. The one sure method of avoiding such an unpleasant catastrophe is to use LYON'S KATHAIRON, which, when well rubbed into the scalp, will speedily reanimate the hair and prevent it from falling out.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons,

R Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

WAUKESHA WATER,
MINERAL ROCK SPRING,
CURES
Dropsy, Diabetes,
Gravel, Dyspepsia,
Constipation, Jaundice,
Bright's Disease,

and all diseases of the liver and kidneys. This water is now known and sold as a remedy for the above diseases, in all parts of the world. It is truly wonderful what effect it has upon the human system. It is now being shipped at the following prices: Barrel, $[illegible], half do. $7, demijohns and [illegible] per doz. Money must accompany the order, except to our regular authorized agent. Inquire of your druggist for Waukesha Mineral Rock Spring Water. Address C. C. OLIN & Co., Waukesha, Wis., for orders for the water or for circulars.

WAUKESHA, Wis., June 9th, 1874.

C. C. OLIN & CO., Proprietors Mineral Rock Spring: I have been drinking the water from your spring since the middle of March last for a kidney difficulty that I have had since I was six years old (I am now twenty), and I must say that it has had a wonderful effect upon me. I have been a great sufferer in the region of the kidneys for years. It has been with the greatest difficulty that I could urinate, and its effects have been such upon my general health that I have not been able to labor but a part of the time for years; but since I began to drink Mineral Rock Spring Water my health has steadily improved, and I can now do a good day's work without fatigue, and I consider myself well on the road to health and happiness. I would recommend the water from your spring to all those that have been afflicted with the kidney difficulty, as a sovereign remedy for that obstinate disease, as it has done for me what medicine could not reach. Respectfully yours,
HARVEY CLARK.

This is to certify that I am the father of Harvey Clark, the above named, and I am knowing to the suffering that he has undergone during almost all his life with the kidney difficulty, and I fully corroborate all of the above statements that he has made, believing and knowing them to be true.
LUCIAN CLARK.

LANSING, Mich., April 4th, 1874.

C. C. OLIN & CO.—Dear Sirs: It gives me pleasure to add testimony to the value of the waters of your Mineral Rock Spring. My wife has been afflicted for the past six years with disease of the kidneys. Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to come to Waukesha to drink of its healing waters. We tried the Mineral Rock Spring Water. Mrs. Van Loon has been greatly benefited, and is still using it, feeling that in time it will make a permanent cure. THOS. E. VAN LOON.

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

Just published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the Radical cure [without medicine] of SPERMATORRHŒA or Seminal Weakness Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also, CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY and FITS, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance; Piles, &c.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a road of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

The Evansville Journal by way of advertising the town and its coming race on July 2d, gives a capital and lively sketch of the noted mare. It is full of interest and claims to be an authentic history: It seems that the "Maid" was a wayward child. From the date of her birth, on the farm of John B Decker, in Wantage township, Sussex county, N. Y. in the spring of 1857 to the age of six years she distinguished herself in many ways, but never as a trotter. She was undersized, nervous and fretful, and utterly refused heavy farm work. Mr. Decker, her owner, says he never got any work out of her but twice—one half day in plowing corn, and one half day in drawing stones. Once she was hitched to a harrow, but after a short distance she reared backwards and entangled both her hind legs in the cross piece of the harrow, and so injured those members that when she goes out for her morning walks, it is said she still shows signs of stiffness behind, caused by this fall in her early life. From the time she was two or three years old until Mr. Decker sold her at six, she was used as a race horse, though without her owner's knowledge. The boys on the farm, of course, as all boys do, were anxious to know which was the speediest horse, and an early day they found that it was the "Maid." And so after the "old man" had gone to bed, they would take her out of the pasture or stable whenever a race could be made up, and run her on the road after night She beat every thing that could be brought to run with her, so that finally none but the uninformed from a distance could be found to bet against her. These races were made up at the country stores in the evening, and the race was run the same night, after the old man had gone to bed. One of the most singular freaks of the crazy headed little mare, during her farm life was a habit she had of taking a monthly trip through the country. About once a month she would break from her pasture and go sailing over the neighboring farms, leaping over fences, through fields of growing crops and making a circuit generally of about 6 miles, she finally land in the field from which she started, behaving herself afterwards in a steady manner, until the next run. The time that she would be out during these trips was generally about forty minutes. A few stops by the way to have a little gossip with her neighbor, probably accounted for the time being as long as 6 minutes.—This story might be hard to believe if it were not voched for by those living in the neighborhood, who were so often eye witnesses to this strange habit One day, in the summer of 1863, two men were out buying horses for the army, and stopped all night at Mr. Deckers, and in the morning bought the Maid for $260. On their way they met Mr. Tomkins, who knew the mare and bought her of them for $360 The next day Tomkins sold her to Alden Goldsmith, an excellent judge of horseflesh, for $600. From him she took the the name of Goldsmith Maid He kept her in pretty steady training, under a driver named Wm. Bodine to whom should be awarded the credit of first bringing the mare out. The renowned Budd Doble, who now drives her so handsomely, had not then even heard of her. While in training for the trotting course she was so fretful and determined to run that Mr. Goldsmith many times determined to give up the training, and sell her at any price; but his patient driver maintained his abiding faith in her, and assured his employer that she was the fastest animal on his premises, and would come out at last a great trotter, and persuaded him to keep her. Jackman and Bubb bought her $20,000 These gentlemen sold to Mr. Smith for the sum of $37,000. Mr. Doble still drives her. Her first appearance in public was August 1265, when she trotted in 2:17 at Milwaukee, Sep. 6. '71 The majority doubted the length of the track. The track was measured and testified under oath to its being a full mile. Every since then vast crowds have attended her races. At Minneapolis, Minn., $15 were given for reserved seats. The horse that can press her the closest, and may eventually far surpass her, is Judge Fullerton. He seems to be gaining her inch by inch, and lately at Prospect Park he took a heat from her in 2:19. The Maid is now no longer pulled when she trots with Fullerton, as she formerly was with Lucy; but each horse now honestly trots for the first money, and Doble finds that he must drive the Maid for all there is in her if he would win, with Fullerton and Dan Maes against him. Many old oorsemen think that Fullerton is soon to pass her.

Real bawl dresses.—baby clothes.

How He Got Out.

"John" says: I ment a man in California who would tell me a story.—

"I new a fellow in the States once, old Bill Smith; he was the worst old beat you ever saw. He'd chase a mosquito eight milles with a pair of lemon squeezers if he could get one the oil. He got marrid on tick, and has slept on tick ever since. He was so mean that once when he had a cent in his pocket, to keep his wife from getting it, he made his oldest boy swallow it, and that boy was copperheaded all though the war. Bill was going down the Mississippi on a steamboat. When the collection was being taken up, he got out on the guard to hide, and he fell overboard. The water was a hundered feet deep and two miles wide, and the best water to drown a man I ever saw. Bill couldn't swim a stroke, but, stranger he got out.',

Says I, "How?',

Says he, "He just took and walked straight ashore."

Says I, "How could he walk ashore in water one hundred feet deep?"

Says he, "Stranger, do you want to know very bad?"

Says I, "Yes, I do, real bad

Says he, "well, stranger, that Bill Smith was such a big spong he just soaked all the water up, and then walked right ashore."

There are people who think it strange that Grant should have the impudence to appoint a convicted thief and public robber as a governing Commissioner of the District he had plundered. It was brazen, to be sure, but it was consistent. Have men the New York collector who recieved the usual certificate? Is there any recollection of brother-in-law casey? Do people forget that Babcock, Shepherd's partner who certified to the false measurement, by which the District was robbed is Grant's Private Secretary and confidential friend? Can any one call to mind a public thief or rascal among Grant's friends—and his friends are among such folks—who he failed to defend? Is is remembered how the Bowens and Grant's friends and relatives have bought and sold the office in Grant's gift? Did he not reward Richardson who helped other men to steal? What has Grant done inconsistent with his appointment of Boss Shepherd to be Commissioner?

PATIENCE.—Mr. Beecher says of patience: "We are very patient with folks who suit us, We are very patient with people whom we do not have anything to do with. We are very patient with those whom we see others impatient with, but who do not relate to us. We sometimes wonder at our patience with such persons. I have found myself maintaining an unbroken patience with the Khan of Tartary, I do not know that I ever lost patience with the Emperor of China. I am very patient with the people in New York that I never saw, and that never have anything to do with."

In a country town in Illinois a few evenings since at a panorama of the Bible, a little eight-year older sat wrapped in admiration at the scene until the picture of Jacob and Rebecca at the well appeard, when he looked up and said: "pa, do you see the picture? THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1874.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

NEW YORK papers announce the death, at the age of 75 years, of Henry Grinnell. He was a well-known citizen, but will be chiefly remembered for the munificence which he exhibited by fitting out two vessels and placing them under the charge of an officer of the United States navy, to make search for the lost Sir John Franklin in the Arctic regions.

THE Social Mills, at Woonsocket, R. I., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $700,000.

A MOVEMENT is on foot in New York looking to the removal from office of Mayor Havemeyer....Allegheny City, Pa., was visited by a disastrous fire on the 4th, over 100 houses being burned....The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided the Prohibitory Liquor law constitutional....The verdict of the Coroner's jury in the Mill river disaster investigation is published. It censures the Legislature for inadequate and defective legislation on the subject of reservoirs; the mill owners, for their parsimonious disregard of life and property; the engineers, for ambiguous and insufficient specifications; the contractors, for manifest delinquencies and want of thoroughness in their work, and, finally, the County Commissioners for accepting a dam so shabbily built when they had the power to order its entire reconstruction.

BOSTON'S debt increased more than $18,000,000 during the past year....It is stated that Ben Butler's health is so bad as to preclude all hope of his running for Governor of Massachusetts. His nervous system is much shattered, and his hands tremble so that it is with manifest difficulty that he can write.

THE New York city tax levy for this year is $32,136,150, being at the rate of 2.60 per cent. on the assessed valuation. Estimating the population of the city at 1,000,000 persons, it appears that the cost of municipal government in that monstrous center of corruption is $32 per capita for every man, woman, and child.

The West.

DURING a tremendous thunder storm at Emerson, Manitoba, recently, 300 horses of the Canadian mounted police stampeded, running over tents of men and officers, and against and over the wagons, or any obstacles in the way of their wild flight. Many men were injured and many horses....Wintermute, the slayer of Gen. McCook, has been sentenced at Yankton, Dakota, to ten years' imprisonment in the Iowa State Penitentiary at Fort Madison....The grain trade of Chicago for the month of June was immense. During the month 23,176 car-loads of grain (9,220,400 bushels) were inspected into store, and 1,815.15 bushels from canal-boats, making the total grain receipts for the month 10,585,555 bushels. During the same time 9,108,334 bushels of grain were inspected out of store for shipment to the seaboard....A gentleman who has recently returned to St. Paul from a tour in Western Minnesota says that the grasshoppers have laid waste a section of country 60 miles wide and extending indefinitely from the southern border in the direction of the Northern Pacific railroad. At the present rate of progress, the destroyers will run over the border some time before the close of the season. Dispatches received in St. Paul represent that there are 4,000 people in the devastated region without food, and in danger of starvation. Legislative aid is asked....The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad has announced its intention of conforming to the Iowa railway law in letter and spirit. In announcing this decision, however, the Superintendent of the road enters a strong protest against the law, and all similar enactments....Gross earnings of the Rock Island road for 1873, $7,048,203; net earnings, $3,256,683.

LEMUEL MOSS, D. D., of the Crozier Theological Seminary, has been elected President of the Chicago University, and Dr. Burroughs has been made Chancellor....The Railroad Commissioners of Minnesota have prepared a table of rates for the various roads running through the State, by which a reduction is made in passenger fares of ½ to 1½ cents per mile. The managers of the St. Paul and Pacific Company have published their intentions in case the new law is enforced against them. They say that it will be impossible for the company to run trains of good cars cheaper than before, and they will therefore be obliged to give such accommodations to passengers as can be afforded.

A NUMBER of Indian outrages are reported from Wyoming Territory....The Chicago Tribune of the 6th inst. says: "Most distressing reports continue to be received from what is becoming known as 'the grasshopper region' in Iowa and Minnesota. The visitation in Iowa is not so severe as last year, but it is severe enough to occasion serious concern. In Minnesota, the grasshoppers have stripped a range of counties, beginning in the southwestern part of the State, entirely clear of vegetation, and they are now advancing in myriads in a northerly direction.'....The United States Circuit Court, sitting at Madison, Wis., has declared the Wisconsin Railroad law constitutional. The court affirms the right of the Legislature to alter or repeal charters, and declares bondholders and creditors bound by the law that creates the corporation....The great Mississippi bridge at St. Louis was formally opened and dedicated to traffic on the 4th of July.

THE next Chicago clergyman to be subjected to trial by the Church authorities is Rev. W. C. Dandy, Methodist, who is charged with lying, dishonesty, patronizing dancing schools, smoking tobacco, vindictiveness and inefficiency... A meeting of the managers of the Iowa railway lines was held in Chicago on the 7th inst., to decide what action should be taken in regard to the Iowa tariff law. Several advocated compliance with the law under protest, but no unity of action could be secured. Mr. Newell, of the Illinois Central, said he could not possibly comply with the law, as his Iowa Division was composed of the three leased lines which receive a part of the net earnings for their share. One of these lines had already served him with an injunction restraining him from complying with the law, and the other two lines would undoubtedly do the same. Mr. Walker, President of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, gave similar reasons for not being able to comply with the law. Mr. Albert Keep, President of the Northwestern, thought he had already enough litigation on hand with the Wisconsin law, and, therefore, he had concluded to comply with the Iowa law under protest. Mr. Horace Williams, who is the President of the leased portion of the Iowa Division of the Northwestern Railroad, deplored Mr. Keep's determination to comply with the law, and stated that he would sue out an injunction restraining the Company from complying with the law as far as his portion of the road was concerned....Custer's expedition to the Black Hills of Dakota is expected to accomplish much. It has started on its tour, fully armed and equipped for any emergency. It is expected that the expedition will open up a wide field for settlement and gratify the curiosity of the people, who have long desired to know what has been so long shrouded in mystery....The Sioux are out and at it. A dispatch from Pembina says a gang of them attacked the settlement of St. John's, and killed several of the men.

DISPATCHES received at Washington from a Quaker Agent in the Indian Territory report that a large band of Arapahoes, Comanches and Cheyennes is on the war-path. Five men have already been murdered, one of them by burning, and it is feared that many more lives will be lost before troops can be brought into action. The Agent, who is said to be a peace policy man and a person of excellent judgment, is particularly anxious that the Indians should be struck hard and at once. He adds that Big Tree and Satanta, with three-quarters of their tribes, remain quietly at the Fort Sill reservation.

THE Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway Company have reconsidered their previous determination regarding the Iowa law, and adopted a schedule of freight and passenger rates which is in substantial compliance with the law. The points of difference are of an unimportant nature.

A BATTLE was fought on Wind river, Wyoming Territory, on the 4th of July, between two companies of United States cavalry and 150 Shoshone Indians on the one side, and a camp of hostile Sioux on the other. Result—50 Sioux killed and wounded and 100 horses captured; two soldiers killed and four wounded. The ranche of A. C. Myers, on the Canadian river, was attacked by Indians June 27. Three men were killed. The Indians were repulsed, however, and 11 of them killed, after a three-hours fight. Gen. Sherman has ordered a regiment of cavalry to the scene of these outbreaks. A dispatch from Topeka, Kan., dated July 9, says: "A large party of Indians, comprising Comanches, Kiowas and Arapahoes are on the war-path in Southwestern Kansas, and threatening the lives and property of the people on the border. Mr. Miles, the Quaker Indian Agent, is outspoken in favor of extermination. The facts contained in his dispatch to Washington are confirmed by advices from the seat of the trouble."

The South.

MISS KATIE WEST, an accomplished young lady of Paris, Ky., took arsenic the other day, to improve her complexion. She succeeded admirably, for in a few hours she was a beautiful corpse....M. D. Welsh, a well-known Memphis attorney, was recently shot and mortally wounded by B. B. Barnes, another prominent lawyer.

THE following is a summary of the Southern Cotton Exchange crop report to July 1: Mississippi—Reports from forty-four counties decrease the acreage 7 per cent. Fair average stand. Louisiana—Twenty-six parishes reported. Acreage decreased 20 per cent. Average stand condition of plant generally good and promising, though three weeks later. Texas—Forty-five counties reported. The acreage increase will average 15 per cent. Stand good. Two weeks later planted than last year, but in fine growing condition, free from gloss. Arkansas—Twenty-five counties reported. Acreage decrease, 3 percent. Stand better than last year. Tennessee—Twenty-four counties reported. Acreage decrease, 3½ per cent. Stand fair. Crop clean. Alabama—Twenty-seven counties report an average acreage decrease, 16 per cent. Crop somewhat later, and generally cleaner than ever before. Growing rapidly. North Carolina—Forty-one counties reported. Acreage decrease, 19 per cent. Planting two to three weeks later. Fair average stand. Crop clean, healthy and growing finely. South Carolina—Twenty-one counties reported. Acreage decrease, 17 per cent. Plant small and condition good. Crop clean. Growing well. Labor sufficient. Georgia—Sixty-one counties reported. Decrease of acreage, 10 per cent. Weather most favorable. Stand and condition good. Growing finely. Clean, though small. Florida—Reports meager. Average said to have decreased 4 per cent. Stands good. Condition very fine. Clean and growing well.

IT is said that the floods in Louisiana have left the submerged districts in a far better condition as regards sugar and rice plantations than could have been looked for by the most sanguine. While in some districts the sugar crop is hopelessly lost, this is made up by a large acreage in cultivation and a large proportionate yield elsewhere. In addition to this the weather since the flood has been unusually favorable for laying by crops, and the season is nearly a month ahead of last year's.

Washington.

THE Hon. Eugene Hale has withdrawn his acceptance of the Cabinet office made vacant by Mr. Creswell's resignation, pleading the state of his health as an excuse....Contrary to the assurance which was received from Washington several days ago, that all the original members of the District Commission would accept office, ex-Senator Cattell has declined.

THE Grand Jury in the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia have returned a true bill of indictment against A. C. Buell, correspondent of the Detroit Free Press, for libel in publishing a statement to the effect that Senator Chandler had been drunk in the Senate. The case will be tried in September next.

THE President has appointed Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut, to succeed Mr. Creswell as Postmaster-General....The Secretary of the Interior has appointed as members of the Board of Indian Commissioners, to fill the vacancies which recently occurred thereon: B. Butler, New York city; Gen. H. H. Sibley, St. Paul, Minn., and Clinton B. Fiske, St. Louis....The finding in the Howard Court of Inquiry, together with Judge-Advocate-General Holt's review of the proceedings, have just been made public through a general order of the War Department. The court stood four for acquittal and three against, as follows: For acquittal, Gens. Sherman, Meigs, Reynolds and Miles; against, Gens. McDowell, Pope and Getty....A terrific hurricane swept over the city of Washington on the evening of the 4th, doing an immense amount of damage, the total loss of property in the city being estimated as high as half a million dollars. The same storm, or one precisely similar, swept over Lewiston, Pa., destroying $150,000 worth of property, and killing seven or eight persons, besides injuring many others....President Grant has appointed Gen. Howard to the command of the Department of Columbia. The headquarters of this department are at Portland, Oregon.

THE number of ordinary postage stamps issued to Postmasters by the department during the fiscal year ending June 30 was 632,773,420. The issues for the previous year were 601,931,520....The Evening Mail, a new afternoon paper, devoted to free trade and cheap transportation, has made its appearance at Washington....The new District Government has been thoroughly organized, and has begun the work of retrenchment. Thus far the applications for currency under the new law amount to but three million dollars, while two millions have been surrendered under its provisions.

SECRETARY BRISTOW has notified the Chiefs of Bureau in the Treasury Department that, until the President formally revokes and sets aside the civil-service rules, they will continue in full force, notwithstanding there is no appropriation for the necessary expenses....The records of the Internal Revenue Bureau show that the late temperance crusade affected but very slightly the consumption of liquor in this country... There is about $12,000,000 of currency and $72,000,000 of coin in the Treasury....It has been found to be impossible for the Freedmen's Savings Bank to resume business, and its affairs will consequently be wound up. It is thought that three years will be required to adjust its affairs.

THE amount of postage stamps and stamped envelopes issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, was, "exclusive of those used for official communication," $21,157,434.76, an increase over the previous year of $631,894.99, or over 3 per cent. The issues of postal cards amount to $31,790, and of official stamps, to $1,709,301.86....The Attorney General has decided that under section 19 of the act amendatory of the bankrupt law, United States marshals and registers in bankruptcy are not required to make the returns therein provided for until they are furnished with tabular forms and directions in respect thereto by the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.

General.

THE Atlantic and Great Western Railroad Company has defaulted in its July interest, and the Erie company, which has just leased the road, is out of pocket nearly seven million dollars....Freight rates between New York and the West have been reduced 50 per cent.

MR. BEECHER, in his last Friday evening talk with his parishioners, gave a retrospect of his life in general terms, but did not refer to the Tilton affair.

THE cable steamer Faraday, reported wrecked off the coast of Nova Scotia, was recently seen off Seal Island prosecuting her work....A band of 700 Mormons from Europe arrived in New York last week. Most of them were Scandinavians....There is to be a new issue of postal cards. They will be of superior design, and more convenient.

THE report that the freight charges between the East and West had been reduced was entirely too good to be true. It turns out that the rates have been raised instead of lowered.

Political.

THE Republicans of Iowa met in State Convention at Des Moines on the 1st inst. Ninety counties were represented, and about 400 delegates were present. Hon. Theodore Greiich, of Des Moines county, presided. The following ticket was nominated: For Secretary of State, J. D. Young, the present incumbent; State Treasurer, F. C. Christy, present incumbent; Auditor, B. R. Sherman, of Benton county; Register of the State Land Office, David Secor, of Winnebago; Attorney-General, M. E. Cutts, of Mahaska; Clerk of the Supreme Court, E. F. Holmes, of Jackson; Supreme Court Reporter, J. S. Runnells, of Polk. The platform favors free banking; declares the obligations of the Government, when placed upon the markets of the world, are payable in the world's currency, specie; affirms the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the general States, and the right of the States to regulate and control railway-transportation within their limits; declares in favor of the proposed Constitutional amendment providing for the election of a President by direct vote of the people; demands a modification of the Patent laws; declares that only honest and capable men should be elected to office; and favors the submission to the people of the question of amending the Constitution so as to extend the suffrage to women....Arkansas voted, on the 30th ult., upon the question of calling a Constitutional Convention, and also for delegates to the same. A Little Rock dispatch of the 2d inst. says the majority for a convention is about 60,000, and that the Conservatives have elected about 70 of the 91 delegates.

ANDY JOHNSON'S chances for the Tennessee Senatorship are said to be good.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS declines a renomination to Congress....The majority for the Constitutional Convention in Arkansas is about 70,000....J. R. Hawkins, a prominent Tennesseean and ex-member of Congress, is openly advocating a repudiation of the national and State debts.

THE last issue of Harper's Weekly, which has for some time indulged in indelicate reflections on the present Administration, contains a full-page cartoon by Nast, which represents Columbia reproving President Grant for the nomination of Shepherd and Richardson, with the following words: "Don't let us have any more of this nonsense. It is a good trait to stand by one's friends, but ——." The President is represented in a crouching attitude, with an expression of half fear and half hate on his face.

Foreign.

THE sub-committee of the Committee of Thirty in the French Assembly have drawn up a new constitutional bill. The measure provides for the continuance of the title of "President of the Republic;" for the creation of a second Chamber, and for the organization of a purely personal septennat, which is to terminate with the expiration of President MacMahon's seven-years term....It is rumored that Gen. Concha was killed by order of Marshal Serrano, because he was an Alfonsist....The Emperor of Germany lately presented his portrait, life-size, and painted to order, to Mr. Bancroft, the retiring American Minister.

THE German squadron has been ordered to Spanish waters. This is probably done to enforce the demand for indemnity made some time since for the seizure of a German vessel by the insurgent fleet at Cartagena....Dr. Butt's Irish home-rule resolution has been defeated in the British House of Commons by the one-sided vote of 61 to 458.

THE Fourth was celebrated with spirit by the American residents of London and Paris. ...Spain has made another levy of 30,000 men to fight the Carlists. The latter, at last accounts, were marching on Bilboa... The Spanish General Concha, recently killed at Estella, was 80 years old....The Count de Chambord has issued another manifesto to the people of France, in which he makes an earnest plea for the monarchy and urges his own claims to the throne....A Havana letter of recent date says that the misery and want existing in that city are great, and as a consequence crime has increased to a fearful extent.

THE Carlists are exceedingly active in the north of Spain....There is a great strike of linen operatives in the Belfast (Ireland) mills.

IT is reported from Paris that Isabella intends to publicly revoke her abdication of the Spanish throne....A vote was taken in the French Assembly on the 8th inst., on the motion of M. Brun interpelling the Government for its supression of L'Union newspaper. But a small number of the members voted, and the motion was lost. The Government then moved a vote of confidence, but that was defeated by a vote of 331 to 368, a majority against the Government of 37. This was followed by a vote on the simple motion to proceed with the order of business, which was carried—315 to 339. It will therefore be perceived that nothing was accomplished by the votes. The Assembly refused to censure and refused to indorse the Government....A London telegram announces that England has demanded £8,000,000 of Spain as indemnity for the murder of eighteen British subjects who were captured on the Virginius.

The Beecher-Tilton Scandal.

A New York telegram of the 3d inst. gives the following as the status of this ugly affair at that date:

There is a lull at present in the Beecher-Tilton case, with threatenings of another storm at any moment. The exact position is this: Beecher preserves silence, and is asserted to be entirely in the hands of his friends, who are believed to be counseling the do-nothing policy. They think Beecher so strong, his reputation so immaculate, that he can afford to preserve reticence and give the impression that Tilton is simply a forger, falsifier and libeler. Unprejudiced persons say, on the other hand, that Beecher must explain the confession which Tilton has published; that no clergyman, however eminent, can afford to rest under such a direful imputation as he has been placed under by Tilton.

Tilton's friends say he will not move further in the matter unless Beecher or Plymouth church pronounce in some authoritative shape its pastor's confession to be a forgery. Then the whole of Beecher's letter will be published, and it is pronounced so damning that it would destroy him utterly. The suppressed parts are said to be ten times worse than the printed part. Tilton quoted only so much as would relieve him from the charge of being a libeler. No present member of Plymouth church has seen Beecher's letter, though Tilton stands prepared to to show it to any member, if Beecher requests it. Beecher had a copy of the letter. If he has destroyed it, Tilton's friends say that Tilton would be glad to furnish him with another copy. There is the best authority for saying that Beecher's letter is genuine, and that he does not dare deny it. It is not in his own autograph except a small part; but was dictated by him and signed for him in his presence, and the presence of one other man, who is a friend of Tilton, and prepared at any moment to substantiate its veritableness. Beecher's letter was written without any demand or even request of Tilton. Tilton had not expected it. Beecher seems to have been moved entirely by the conviction of the wrong he had done his friend. The great question is now, will Beecher confess his confession or repudiate it? On this hangs the whole issue.

Successful Treatment of a Case of Hydrophobia.

Dr. Silas Stevenson writes from New Bedford, Pa., to the New York Tribune:

The sad account of the death of Francis Butler, the famous dog-trainer and fancier, from hydrophobia, as published in a late issue of the Tribune, has caused me to revive a similar case which occurred at Flint, Mich., Jan. 19, 1872.

Mr. Burt True, of said place, was bitten by a rabid dog some time in May, the previous year. The animal left the imprint of several teeth in the center of his right hand. Being some distance from surgical aid, the wound was not cauterized with nitrate of silver until twelve hours thereafter. It healed kindly, and was not in the least irritable up to the date above given. Then well-marked symptoms of hydrophobia developed themselves, such as convulsions, frothing at the mouth, "barking like a dog," exertions to bite everything, dread of water, etc. Soon after the attack Dr. Axford was summoned, and soon discovered the terrible nature of the disease. The course of treatment as here detailed was pursued, with a happy result:

One grain of morphia sulphas was injected under the skin every four hours, and half a dram of powdered castor was given per orem, mixed with sirup. The effect was the alternations of convulsions and repose, when two days thereafter, Sunday morning, the patient was wrapped in a woolen blanket, saturated with a warm solution of muriate of ammonia. Except the occasional inhalation of small quantities of chloroform, the entire treatment has been given. Vomiting proved troublesome for several days, but on Monday the patient became comparatively quiet, and gradually convalescent from that time. Dr. Axford had treated a similar case with the same result some time previous. During the convulsions the patient would seize the pillows with his teeth, shake and tear them like an angry dog, and the strength of five men was required to hold him.

Third Term.

Gov. Kemper, of Virginia, has published a long letter in reply to the charge that he had entered into an arrangement during his recent visit to Washington to support President Grant for a third term. The letter contains the following sentence: "If the future should bring forward a candidate representing the third-term principle; if he should cut loose from old party trammels, and take his stand on our safe and conservative ground of universal reconciliation and peace under the Constitution, and if so standing he should be opposed by any champion of the civil rights iniquity, then in the contest between the two, the conservative party ought to go decidedly, but as an organized party and not otherwise, for the third termer; yet with a protest on their lips against the third-term principle, and in spite of that principle." The Governor recites the circumstances of his call upon President Grant, in Washington, shortly after his inauguration, and says: "The visit was one of courtesy, made in response to an invitation from the President that the Governor should call and make his acquaintance."

Growth of Luxury.

In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries elegance had scarcely any existence, and even cleanliness was hardly considered as laudable. The use of linen was not known, and the most delicate of the fair sex wore woollen shifts. In Paris they had meat only three times a week; and one hundred livres (about twenty dollars) was a large "portion" for a young lady. The better sort of citizens used splinters of wood and rags dipped in oil instead of candles, which, in those days, were a rarity to be met with. Wine was only to be had at the shops of the apothecaries, where it was sold as a cordial; and to ride in a two-wheeled car along the dirty, ragged streets was reckoned a grandeur of so enviable a nature, that Philip the Fair prohibited the wives of citizens from enjoying it. In the time of Henry VIII., of England, the peers of the realm carried their wives behind them on horseback when they went to London, and in the same manner took them back to their country-seats with hoods of waxed linen over their heads, and wrapped in mantles of cloth, to secure them from the cold.

LAWRENCE MCNULTY, of San Francisco, stood in the window of his boarding-house and addressed a crowd on the subject of suicide. He explained different methods at some length, and then whipping out a razor showed "how it was done" by cutting his throat.

Astounding Freak of Nature—Trees Killed by Sunstroke.

The presented heated term has produced at least one phenomenon in this vicinity, which will "astonish the natives" who hear of it, and perhaps open up a new field of investigation for scientists and men of enduring dispositions. Instances of persons being sun-struck, with serious and sometimes fatal results, have occurred quite frequently, of late, as is generally the case during a severe hot spell; but never until last Sunday has there been, we believe, such a thing reported as a case of sunstroke upon trees. Such a phenomenon actually occurred, on the day above mentioned, under the following circumstances:

Mr. Adolph Vieser, who resides in the town of Lake View, just north of the city limits and near the lake shore, has on his premises several fine large cherry trees. Two of the largest and best of these trees stood at one end of the garden, very near to a high board fence. Both of them were very thrifty, were covered with green leaves, and bore a beautiful crop of cherries, which were nearly ripe. About 3 o'clock last Sunday afternoon, Mr. Vieser was standing for a moment near those trees when suddenly he heard a strange noise, as if caused by the splitting of wood or bark above his head. Looking upward, he witnessed the most astounding freak of nature he had ever met with. The bark covering those trees began to peel off at the tops, curling downward along the trunk and limbs, until it reached the ground, and leaving the trees as naked and barren as though they had been riven by the lightning's bolt. Barks, leaves and cherries were all stripped off, and laid a promiscuous mass of ruins upon the parched earth surrounding the desolate trunks. The process occupied but three or four seconds, and as soon as he could recover from his astonishment, Mr. Vieser made a thorough examination of the trees. The ruin was complete. He found the trunks, limbs, twigs, leaves and fruit perfectly dead. They had literally died by sunstroke.—Chicago Journal, 1*st inst.*

Two Thousand Miles on Foot.

The woman concerning whom so much has been written, as having walked from Iowa to California, arrived in this city yesterday. The woman has light wavy hair, combed smoothly back from her temples. Her eyes are blue and have pleasing though wearied expression. Her calico dress has been patched with cloth of various colors, and is tolerably clean considering the dusty roads she must have traveled over. From all that can be ascertained, she is in search, not of her husband, as was stated by one of the newspapers, but of her father. She wrote some incoherent sentences in the Swedish language and revealed the fact that her name is Sophie Auguston, and that she is 38 years of age. She has had a long and wearisome tramp, over rough roads, through narrow gaps and over dangerous trestlework, and if she be not insane, she certainly displays an amount of filial devotion that is highly commendable. Many absurd rumors have been set afloat concerning her object in coming here. Some newspapers asserted that she wished to obtain a lock of her husband's hair, or the whole scalp; but this idea is generally scoffed at. Whether demented or not, the poor creature deserves much sympathy for the sufferings she has undergone.—San Francisco Call, June 19.

Too Poor to Take a Paper.

Moore of the Rural New Yorker, was sitting in his office one afternoon some years ago, when a farmer friend came in and said: "Mr. Moore, I like your paper, but times are so hard I cannot pay for it."

"Is that so, friend Jones? I'm sorry to hear that you are so poor? If you are so hard run I will give you my paper."

"O no, I can't take it as a gift."

"Well, then, let's see how we can fix it. You raise chickens, I believe?"

"Yes, a few; but they don't bring anything hardly."

"Don't they? Neither does my paper cost anything, hardly. Now, I have a proposition to make to you. I will continue your paper, and when you go home you may select from your lot one chicken and call her mine. Take good care of her and bring me the proceeds, whether in eggs or chickens, and we will call it square."

"All right, brother Moore," and the fellow chuckled at what he thought a capital bargain. He kept the contract strictly, and at the end of the year found that he had paid about four prices for his paper. He often tells the joke himself, and he never had the face to say he was too poor to take a paper since that day.

Brazil.

Brazil is rapidly taking the lead of all the States in South American. The country is full of engineers, manufacturers, agriculturists, merchants, and travelers, drawn thither by the manifold attractions offered to them in their respective spheres by the enterprise of the sovereign and a sympathizing nation. In all geographical and topographical publications Brazil is a standing theme, and new works from the pen of industrial and scientific men are continually leaving the press in various parts of the world. The empire is approaching political considerations with great rapidity, and the national funds are regularly quoted on the London Exchange. Exports and imports are rapidly increasing in a superior manner, and the attention of both Europe and America is being directed in an increased degree to this land, so highly gifted by nature.

IT takes eleven pounds of milk to add one pound of live weight to a calf; and an ox that weighs one thousand pounds will consume twenty-two pounds of hay in twenty-four hours to keep from losing weight. If he is to fatten, he must have just twice that quantity, when he will gain two pounds a day. This is one pound live weight to eleven pounds good hay. To obtain fifty cents a hundred for his hay a farmer must sell fat steers at five dollars and fifty cents per hundred pounds.—Canada Farmer.

Lord Byron's Fear of Getting Fat.

Byron had not damaged his body by strong drinks, but his terror of getting fat was so great, that that he reduced his diet to the absolute point of starvation. He was of that soft, sympathetic temperament which it is almost impossible to keep within moderate compass, particularly as in his case his lameness prevented his taking exercise. When he added to his weight, even standing was painful, so he resolved to keep down to eleven stone, or shoot himself. He said everything he swallowed was instantly converted into tallow, and deposited on his ribs. I remember one of his old friends saying, "Byron, how well you are looking!" If he had stopped there it had been well, but when he added, "You are getting fat," Byron's brow reddened, and his eyes flashed. "Do you call getting fat looking well, as if I were a hog?" and, turning to me, he muttered, "The beast, I can hardly keep my hands off him." The man who thus offended him was the husband of the lady addressed as "Genevra," and the original of his "Zuleika" in the "Bride of Abydos." I don't think he had much appetite for his dinner that day, or for many days and never forgave the man who, so far from wishing to offend, intended to pay him a compliment. He would exist on biscuits and soda-water for days together; then, to allay the eternal gnawing at his vitals, he would make up a horrid mass of cold potatoes, rice, or greens, deluged in vinegar, and gobble it up like a famished dog. On either of these unsavory dishes, with a biscuit and a glass or two of Rhine wine, he cared not how sour, he called feasting sumptuously. Upon my observing he might as well have fresh fish and vegetables, instead of stale, he laughed and answered, "I have an advantage over you—I have no palate. One thing is as good as another to me." "Nothing," I said, "disagrees with the natural man; he feasts and gorges, his nerves and brains don't bother him; but if you wish to live—" "Who wants to live?" he replied; "not I. The Byrons are a a short-lived race on both sides, father and mother; longevity is hereditary; I am nearly at the end of my tether. I don't care for death; it is her sting! I can't bear pain."—Trelawney's Last Days of Shelley and Byron.

How Gen. Forrest Liked to Be Shaved

The Civil Rights bill may enable the colored gentleman to enjoy all the privileges of soda-water fountains, ice-cream saloons, and billiard-rooms, but we would like to see him subject his visage to the manipulation of a white barber. He would find himself in as dangerous a position as Gen. Forrest.

It is said that Gen. Forrest went into a barber-shop on Broadway to be shaved. The colored gentleman who officiated was voluble. Forrest was in a good humor and disposed to be talkative. At last it came out that the gentleman who was being shaved was called Gen. Forrest, whereupon the colored gentleman wanted to know if he was having the honor to shave Gen. Forrest of the late Confederate cavalry. Gen. Forrest mildly assented. Whereupon the barber remarked that he was glad to make the General's acquaintance, as his brother was a soldier in the Federal army. "Where is your brother?" asked the General. "He was killed at Fort Pillow!" answered the barber.

Silently and gently as the fall of the snowflake—but accurately and without hesitation—the General slid from beneath the razor of that barber, gained his feet, and with a face bare as to one side, and lathered as to the other, remarked: "You can't shave me this morning!" A friend who met him a moment later remarked the singular appearance of his face. The General merely observed: "I like to have half of my face shaved at a time."—Mobile Register.

Cuba.

The financial embarrassments of Cuba seem to be of a most critical character. The notes of the Havana Bank constitute the only paper money in circulation on the island. The bank has issued $15,772,000 in its own legitimate business, but has been compelled to make an advance of some $60,000,000 to the Government for war purposes, for which it has no adequate security and is unable to obtain a return. Its nominal resources consist of $104,000,000 of discounted mortgages and about $6,000,000 of securities; but probably the real value of these assets is far less than their figures, and they are not immediately available for any purpose. The consequence is that the paper of the bank has depreciated seventy-five cents on a dollar, and business is in a deplorable state. It is proposed to tax all the property of the island five per cent. to meet the exigency, but even this extreme measure will not afford the the immediate relief that is needed. The rebels have not gained any material successes in the field of late, but they seem to have damaged their enemies far more effectually than a defeat would have done, and all classes are clamoring for peace on almost any terms.

A War-Horse.

A gentleman said that Nantucket horses were celebrated for their general worthlessness, imbecility and marvelous slowness. He said a citizen sold one to a cavalry officer during the war, and warranted him to be a good war-horse. The soldier came back afterward in a towering passion, and said he had been swindled.

"As how?" said the Nantucketer.

"Why there's not a bit of go in him, and yet you warranted him as a good war-horse."

"Yes, I did, and, by Jove, he is a good war-horse—he'd sooner die than run!"

CROPS—GRAIN, COTTON, FRUIT, ETC.—The crop news for breadstuffs and cotton is full of promise, while the hay crop will be enormous. In some of the Southern States 10 per cent. more of the acreage in corn has taken the place of 10 per cent. less of cotton. The fruit crop is the subject of much discussion. New Jersey, it is believed will send 600,000 bushels of peaches to market, and Delaware 500,000 of early Yorks, Troths and Hale's-early, and St. George's Hundred. Delaware alone has 1,000,000 of healthy trees. Raspberries, currants and grapes all promise an abundant crop.—New York Express

FARM AND FARM TALK.

Over the fields where the reapers have been,
Garner the gleaners the full-headed grain.
Stalks richest and ripest shall fall to their lot,
Faithfully seeking where others seek not.

E'en thus in the world the gleaners are seen,
Garnering friendships like full-headed grain;
Oft finding the noblest, the purest and best,
Where hearts are the humblest, with sweet content blest.

A stock-keeper says he has never failed to relieve a choked animal by raising its head as if for drenching and throwing down its throat a broken hen's egg, shell and all.

In digging a tree, always turn the side of the spade toward the stem of the tree, and lift out the earth carefully, and the small rootlets will thus be loosened and preserved uninjured.

To cure brittle hoofs wash the horse's feet clean; when dry apply with a brush to the hoof only, a coating of this mixture: Fish oil, part; vegetable tar, one part; oil of tar, one-eighth part.

Hay-Cakes.—Hay-cakes, composed of hay and straw, very finely cut, well mixed with crushed oats or rye, and moistened with a solution of rapeseed or linseed oil-cake, and then well worked and formed into tablets under pressure, have been for some time employed in France as a convenient and portable food for horses.

The Agriculturist manifests the right spirit when it says that "a good boy will often do as much work as a man. But you must know how to treat him in order to make him useful. Give him the best tools, the best plow, the steadiest team and the newest harness. If he breaks anything do not scold, but help him to repair damages and encourage him to do better."

Gather the feathers that lie so plentifully about the hen-house. Cut the plumes from the stems and put the former in a course bag. When the bag is full, close it and let it be kneaded thoroughly with the hands. In five minutes the feathers become disaggregated and felted together, forming a light and homogeneous down, which can be used in various domestic purposes.

In a lecture before a British agricultural association, Mr. Cassie, V. S., says that the reason why whole grains appear in horse manure is because the horse is watered soon after being fed. The most of the water drank by a horse passes directly through the stomach to the large intestines, and grain just swallowed is liable to be carried along with the water, instead of remaining in the stomach.

Great care should be taken in drying off cows. Don't trust to the advice of some, and allow the cow to dry herself off when you do not wish to preserve the milk further. Every few days draw all the thick milk; allow none to remain. This is often the cause of the loss of a portion of the udder, and the multiplication of "three titted" cows, which is equivalent to loss of the cow for profitable milking.—Live-Stock Journal.

Artichokes as Stock Food.—A correspondent of the Kansas Farmer relates the following experience with artichokes:

I planted about one-fourth acre with about one-half bushel, cut very small, dropped in furrows two feet and a half apart and about eleven inches apart in rows; gave them about the same attention as potatoes. Early in September I cut them before frost and used the stalks to roof my stable, thinking they were good for nothing else; but I found it very difficult to keep my horse from eating himself outdoors. He would leave corn and hay for these stalks. I think I had about fifty bushels on the one-quarter acre; but they were very small, which made it tedious gathering them. I think they were too thick. I shall plant again this year. top the stalks once or twice during the season, to make them "stocky"; cut before frost; shock as corn; when cured, stack and cut them in machine, mix with bran, steam or cook them if convenient.

I think they will furnish a large amount of valuable feed. I think the roots or tubers will grow all winter, when the ground is not frozen. Dig in the spring, or turn your hogs in to dig them for you. They are choice feed for milch cows, and, coming as they do early in the spring, when succulent food is scarce, help the yield of butter.

Household Helps.

Stonemason's sawdust is far better than soap for cleaning floors and it is much more economical.

To Bleach Laces, Etc.—Soak them in soapsuds over night, then turn boiling water over them and let them lie in it until cool. Squeeze out of the water and put in very strong blue water. At night put them on the grass in the dew. If not white enough repeat the process.

To prevent flies from injuring picture frames boil two or three onions in a pint of water; then with a gilding-brush apply to your frames, and the flies will not light on the article so washed. This may be used without apprehension, as it will not do the least harm to the frame.

Set one quart of water on the stove; put into it a piece of rosin the size of a walnut. The heating of the water will add a peculiar property to the atmosphere of the room, which will give great relief to persons troubled with a cough. The same rosin will do for several weeks.

Panade.—A nice dietetic preparation for the sick can be made, according to the Druggists' Circular, by taking wheat bread, one ounce; cinnamon, one dram; water, one pint. Boil them till well mixed, then add a little grated nutmeg and sugar. Wine or butter may be added, if liked.

Durable Stove-Blacking.—By adding a teaspoonful of pulverized alum to half a package of good stove-polish, wet up with a little water, much time and labor will be saved, as a stove polished with this mixture will remain bright a long time. It should be applied when the stove is nearly cold, and with a dry brush rubbed until it is dry and shining.

Kitchen Recipes.

Rhubarb Pie.—Two cups rhubarb, one cup sugar, four tablespoonfuls water.

Pie Crust.—One and a half pound lard, two pounds flour, one and a half cup of water—ice-water is the best.

Water Sponge Cake.—Five eggs, three cups sugar, one cup cold water, four cups flour, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful soda.

Puff Pudding.—Two ounces each of sugar, shred suet, and bread crumbs, some spice, a little candied peel, and one pint of milk, mix all well together. Bake an hour.

Fritters.—Take two or three eggs; a little sweet milk; stir in a little flour, and beat it well; drop with a spoon in hot pork fat; turn in a second or so, as they cook quickly. These are excellent and very hearty.

Pudding Sauce.—Four tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of flour beaten to a cream. Add the white of an egg beaten to a froth, and pour into the whole a gill of boiling water, stirring it very fast. Flavor with lemon, rose-water, nutmeg or wine.

Ginger Beer.—Six ounces of bruised ginger, five gallons of water. Boil the ginger in three quarts of the water for half an hour, then add five pounds of loaf sugar, a gill of lemon juice, and a quarter of a pound of honey, with the remainder of the water, and strain through a cloth. When cold, add the white of an egg and two drachms of essence of lemon. After letting it stand three or four days, bottle it.

Cracked Wheat.—Rinse thoroughly with cold water two teacups of wheat, add four cups of cold water, place the basin in a steamer, and cover closely. In half an hour or so, stir and salt to the taste. Let it steam four or five hours, stirring once or twice. Good hot, warm or cold, for breakfast, dinner or tea. To be eaten with rich milk, or cream if you are fortunate enough to have it. Many use a little sugar with this and with graham pudding.

'Twas Ever Thus.

He is gone, and we shall never look upon his like again. Feelings of inexpressible sadness gather around his memory, and that of the favorite meerschaum-pipe, which disappeared when he did. Never can we forget the day when he first came to us. A low timid knock at the door announced his approach, and with his hat in his hand and humility in his countenance, he entered the sanctum. How modest was his request for a glance at the American Patron, and how profuse were his thanks for the favor. The generosity of the act bore its full fruit; he came again next day, and each succeeding day found him in our office. Oh! how kind he was, and generous, too—with his advice. The little difficulties that line the path of journalism, under his kind direction, melted like the dew before the sun. And then his stories! Many and many were the hours that were whiled away listening to the tales which like a torrent rushed from his lips. And then his regard for our health. Never while he was present was the poisonous weed allowed to exercise its baleful effects upon our brain—he always used our pipe and smoked our tobacco. With a love that was not born of earth, we had given him tickets to all places of amusement where the floors were considered shaky, and passes for all the steamboat excursions, but in vain; he clung to earth, and would not forsake us. When the stern decree of fate compelled him to absent himself, his love survived, and he bore with him the article which was nearest to our heart and lips—our meerschaum pipe.—Inter-Ocean.

How Long to Sleep.

There has been a great deal of trash written and labeled "Hygienic;" but the following accord with actual experience: The fact is, that as life becomes concentrated, and its pursuits more eager, short sleep and early rising become impossible. We take more sleep than our ancestors, and we take more because we want more. Six hours' sleep will do very well for a plowman or bricklayer, or any other man who has no exhaustion but that produced by manual labor; and the sooner he takes it after his labor is over the better. But for a man whose labor is mental, the stress of work is on his brain and nervous system; and for him who is tired in the evening, with a day of mental application, neither early to bed nor early to rise is wholesome. He needs letting down to the level of repose. The longer the interval between the active use of the brain and his retirement to bed the better his chance of sleep and refreshment. To him an hour after midnight is probably as good as two hours before it, and even then his sleep will not so completely and quickly restore him as it will his neighbor who is physically tired. He must not only go to bed later, but lie longer. His best sleep probably lies in the early morning hours, when all the nervous excitement has passed away, and he is in absolute rest.

Going it Blind.

"I never hear that expression," said a friend the other day, "without thinking of George ——. It was in 1852, I think—yes, that was the year—and a party of us were spending a few weeks in Iberville parish, Louisiana. We boarded with McF——, who kept a livery stable, and had some of the finest horses in the State. They gave us good things to eat and plenty of them; but unfortunately, owing to the near vicinity of the stables, the house was always full of flies, and somehow they would get into the food, often being as thick as raisins in a pudding. I couldn't eat, none of us could eat, except George, who helped himself most bountifully. One day I said to him: 'George, how is it that you always eat so heartily? I can't do it, on account of the—flies.' 'Oh,' replied George, 'do as I do—shut your eyes and go it blind!'"

The Badness of the Press.

And yet the press has not purged its columns of falsehood. There are several persons in the United States besides members of Congress who feel deeply aggrieved by its misconceptions and perversions, and there have been rumors or threats of an Anti-Press Association of some kind in the city of New York. At this period of reaction it is not uncommon to hear American citizens denounce an "unbridled press" along with the other incidents of freedom, and express a wish for some measure of restraint. Nothing could be more absurd or short-sighted than such a desire. The daily press, being a human institution, is a great sinner, of course. But we might as well rail at the Hudson River because of the drainage that pours continually into it from two hundred and fifty miles of inhabited country, as to condemn the daily press on account of its perversions, exaggerations, and falsehoods. The pollution of a dozen large cities mingles with the Hudson's clear and sparkling tide, only to stain the edges of the stream, not to lessen its utility, nor much diminish its refreshing charm; for a living stream is at once a receptacle and a disinfectant. So is it with this flowing tide of publicity, the daily press, whose office is not to lead or reform the world, but chiefly to receive and carry the tidings day by day of what our busy race has done and thought, and, by the mere fact of publicity, preserve and distribute whatever is valuable, while letting the unclean and false sink out of sight or drift to the ocean of oblivion.—From James Parton's Paper on "Falsehood in the Daily Press."

The Sartoris Family.

The President and Mrs. Grant have received several letters from Mrs. Sartoris. Mr. Sartoris' only sister, a married lady, met him and his bride at Liverpool and accompanied them to London, where, Mrs. Sartoris writes, she enjoyed herself very much. Her stay, however, was brief in London, her husband and herself going almost immediately to the Sartoris country seat, where the bride and groom have been given a cottage on the estate. So they are finally settled in their own house, albeit a small one, called a cottage, and Mrs. Sartoris writes that it is covered with roses. Remembering the extravagant wealth of her trousseau and the large number of her presents, one is puzzled to know how Mrs. Sartoris has managed to find room for her husband and herself after stowing away her possessions. No gayeties are proffered the young people by the groom's parents, who are still in deep affliction on account of the loss of their eldest son last summer, who, as has often been stated, was killed by a fall from his horse. Quite recently their grief has been renewed by the death by a similar accident of their dead son's most intimate friend. Mr. and Mrs. Algernon Sartoris when they left Washington expected to return in a year at the furthest, and, perhaps, as early as the fall. The President and Mrs. Grant do not contemplate visiting their daughter until after they have ceased to hold their present high position.

A Telescopic View of the Moon.

By means of good telescope a very distinct view may be obtained of the moon. With a power of 1,000 we are, as it were, brought within 239 miles of its surface, and on very favorable occasions a power even higher than this has been applied. With the highest power, however, yet employed, no trace of any inhabitants has been discovered, though any large town must have been seen, did such exist on the visible side. Even to the naked eye the moon presents the appearance of a rugged and uneven surface, and telescopic observations confirm this opinion. We find that in many parts of its surface very high mountains exist, and the elevation of many of these has been measured by observing the shadows cast by them when the sun shines obliquely. At the time of full moon these shadows, that have hitherto been so conspicuous, disappear, as the sun then shines vertically upon them. Very accurate maps have now been drawn of the moon's surface on a large scale, and the principal mountains have received names, usually those of celebrated astronomers. One peak, named Newton, is found to have an elevation of nearly 24,000 feet, and several others are very lofty.

The Smallest Steam-Engine in the World.

An ingenious Worcester (Mass.) mechanic, D. A. A. Buck by name, has constructed a complete little steam-engine of the following extraordinary liliputian dimensions: The engine, boiler, governor and pumps stand in a space 7-16ths of an inch square, or the area of a silver three-cent piece, and 5-8ths of an inch high, containing 148 distinct parts, mostly of gold and silver, fastened together with 52 screws, the largest of which is 1-80th of an inch and the smallest about 1-100th of an inch in size. All the bearings are supplied with regularly-turned oil cups. The boiler is supplied with a safety valve. There are all the valves, gearing, etc., to be found upon an ordinary horizontal engine, boiler, governor and pumps, and all work admirably. Three drops of water fill the boiler to its proper capacity. The engine alone weighs but 15 grains; the whole together, including base, but 2 dwt. 18 grains, Troy weight. Diameter of cylinder, 1-16th inch; length of stroke, 3-52.

Summer Drink.

In this hot, uncomfortable weather, the desire for cooling drinks becomes quite imperative. How shall we satisfy it? Shall we resort to soda water, ice-cream, and similar preparations? Not if we wish to avoid the epidemics which are sure to come with the hot days of July and August. They are all pernicious. The sirups used in soda water are villainous compounds; many of them contain deadly poison, and some of them are manufactured from such vile stuff as coal tar. Iced-water is also injurious in any very small quantities. Cooling and pleasant drinks can be prepared from lemon, pie-plant, or currant juice, which will be harmles, and palatable.—Exchange.

What is a Defective Flue?

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial gives the following practical answer to this question:

The question is often asked, "What is a defective flue?" It is a flue that has open, unplastered joints in the brick-work, through which flames or sparks can pass into the spaces between the floors and ceilings, or in which soot can accumulate and take fire. If the joints in the bricks of the flue are carefully covered with mortar, no joist built into or touching it, and no floor or wood-work allowed to come in contact with it, the owner of such a flue can retire to sleep with a mind at ease on that score. Safe flues in houses built by contract are exceptions, as the contractor sublets to the bricklayer, and he does not feel responsible to the owner, who gets a defective flue unless he stands by and bosses the job. If he does not he must chance it. I have had some eight or ten flues built for ovens heated to a white heat, but have always stood by to see that every joint was well closed, as the first flue I used fired the building. The last one I built was so dangerous—passing through a hay loft—that rather than to trust it to others, I built it myself; and although it made the loft unbearably hot, I felt perfectly safe, and used it for three years constantly. Another cause of frequent fires is the careless use of matches. A porter in a store sent into a dark cellar or upper story, goes with a lot of matches to strike while hunting what he wants; the match is thrown down; if it goes out, good; if not, and there is straw, paper, shavings, moss or rags lying around loose, presto! there you have a spontaneous combustion. Always take a lantern, and let it be a globe lantern, fed with lard or sperm oil. In looking back through a business life in Cincinnati of thirty years, I find that fire originated eight times on my premises, all, however, got under without calling out the engines. Only once was I burned out, thanks to a neighbor. Once, defective flue; twice, defective stove-pipes; once, pan of hot ashes left on floor over night (Biddy); once, hot ashes in an out house (Biddy); once, wood coals spilled on a floor (Biddy); twice, matches used and thrown on shavings.

Traveling Thoughts.

1. Eat regularly thrice a day, and never between meals.

2. Take with you one-third more money than you calculate on spending.

3. Take small bills rather than large, to avoid having bad money passed on you, in change.

4. Aim to be at your place of starting at least ten minutes before the time, and grow merry and wise at contemplation of the splutterings and mishaps of those who come on the last minute, and half a minute later.

5. See that your baggage is on the conveyance before you are yourself.

6. Remember that you make your character as you go along by the quiet courtesy of your manners.

7. Only boors are boisterous.

8. Do not let the employes excel you in patience and politeness.

9. "Please" should commence every request, and "Thanks" end every service done.

10. A lady is always gentle; a gentleman alwaws composed.

11. Never argue on any subject if there is more than one person present besides yourself.

The Girl Just Married.

"Can she make bread?" is the chorus. No, of course, she can't. "Well our grandmothers made bread." What of it? They didn't live with a steam bakery round the corner. Nobody asks if Frederick can saw wood or mow. His grandfather did both; but Violet is sure Frederick would station himself with his ax directly under the clothes line, and his head would be the first wood chopped. He might, indeed sally forth some summer morning, gaily swinging his scythe; but before night, he would surely be brought home, like some popular actor, "in two parts." However, she feels that she can love Frederick even if he does differ in some respects from his revered ancestors. "Can she knit?" cries the chorus. No. "Well, our grandmothers knitted all the stockings for their families." The absurdity of thinking that Frederick, who cannot endure a darn in his fine hose, would wear those coarse, clumsy, ribbed yarn stockings, even if she could make them. Clearly the woman of to-day is good enough for the man of to-day; but, seeing that some writers are so infatuated with their grandmothers' ways and words, perhaps that apparently useless and absurd canon, that a man shall not marry his grandmother, is not so unnecessary after all.

Among curious wills, that of an officer in the East India Company's service certainly deserves attention for its originality. Being very poor, the testator bequeathed "to the Governor of Bengal the office of paying any sum or sums which may be found at my death that I owe to any person in needy circumstances—the whole cannot amount to more than 300 rupees." The legatee generously accepted this equivocal legacy. The testator, also wished it to be understood that he won the amount of his burial expenses from a certain undertaker at a game of billiards.

A Singular Optical Illusion.—Fix at the height of the eye, on a dark ground, a small round piece of white paper, and a little lower, at a distance of two feet and a half to the right, fix up another, of about three inches in diameter; then place yourself opposite to the first piece of paper, and having shut the left, retire backward, keeping your eye still fixed on the first object, when at a distance of nine or ten feet, the second will entirely disappear from sight.

When Mr. Soberleigh read that a father in the West had chopped his only son in two, he innocently remarked that he didn't think they ought to arrest a man for simply "parting his heir in the middle."

A Kentucky farmer says that three good bull-dogs roaming the yards nights will do more to keep a man honest than all the talking in the world.

Substitute for Coal.

It was stated a short time ago that a Belgian peasant had made the extraordinary discovery that earth, coal and soda, mixed together, would burn as well as, if not better than, any other combustible. The fact has since then been proved beyond a doubt. The Parisian paper, the Moniteur, has gone so far as to make the experiment at its printing-office. A correspondent of the Journal of the Society of Arts has also tested the compound with the most satisfactory results. The mixture was made as follows: To 15 pounds of mold were added 3 pounds of powdered coal; also one pint of a solution of common washing-soda; water, one pint; soda, one ounce. The mass was worked up after the fashion of mortar, and then made up into balls about the size of a large orange. Half a dozen balls in the wet state were put on a coal-fire, which was not burning very brightly. In a short time the moisture was driven off, and the balls quickly became red hot, giving out a strong heat, and apparently burning slowly without falling to pieces, the soda no doubt acting as a flux. The balls, on being touched with a poker, broke into lumps, which burnt like cinders, yielding a fire clear at the top. It was observed that after the moisture was driven off the balls burnt without smoke. The ash was apparently of a heavy character, different from coal-ash.

An Opium-Eater's Experience.

A writer on De Quincey says: "At one moment he dropped upon his acquaintance from the clouds; at another he would vanish into utter darkness for weeks or months together. One day he came to dine with Christopher North—so we are told in the Professor's life—was detained for the night by a heavy storm of rain, and prolonged his impromptu visit for a year. During that period his habits must have been rather amazing to a well-regulated household. His wants, indeed, were simple, and in one sense regular; a particular joint of mutton, cut according to a certain mathematical formula, and an ounce of laudanum made him happy for a day. But in the hours when ordinary beings are awake he was generally to be found stretched in profound opium slumbers upon a rug before the fire, and it was only about two or three in the morning that he gave unequivocal symptoms of vitality, and suddenly gushed forth in streams of wondrous eloquence to the supper parties detained for the purpose of witnessing the display."

There is not on the whole wide earth anything half so pitiful as fallen greatness. Some one has been looking over the leaves of the old register of the parish in Paris that contains the beautiful church of the Madeleine. Under date of October 16, 1793, he found this entry: "Paid seven francs for a coffin for the widow Capet, who was decapitated this day." Now who was this widow Capet? The relict of some miserable laborer or outcast, herself guilty of an abominable crime? Nothing of the kind. It was none other than Marie Antoinette, Princess of Austria and Queen of France. A pure and beautiful woman, whose lineage could be traced back to the days of ancient Rome, and in whose living veins flowed the blood of the Cæsars. She had left one of the most brilliant courts of the world to be mistress of the one that was most brilliant. Glittering in diamonds, crowned as a Queen, seated on a throne one day, another day her severed head rolling in the mire, her body placed in a rough-board box. A sadder history was never written.

Arkansas planters across the Mississippi west of Memphis, say that this last flood deposited over the cotton-fields the richest, thickest layer of alluvium ever before brought down from the Western mountains. It is a quarter of an inch in thickness and full of lime. Crops stimulated by such forces of fecundity grow and mature with extraordinary rapidity, and only vigorous energy in repressing weeds and grass is required through the first few weeks of summer to assure the production, with a favorable season, of an extraordinary cotton crop.—Trade Journal.

It will cost sixty millions of frances and three years' labor to fortify Paris against foreign enemies. The line of defence is to be pushed as far as Versailles and Montmorency, so that an invading army would henceforth have to form a belt of 120 instead of 60 miles. The advanced forts will be four to six miles distant, and the intervening spaces will be covered by the cross fire of powerful artillery. The circle of outworks will thus be sufficiently large to enable the army to subsist and move outside of the city itself, and at the same time sufficiently circumscribed to prevent an enemy from taking up a position between two forts.

Killing animals by the so-called boutrole, first used in Paris, and recently introduced into Vienna, seems preferable to the old method, since an animal can be instantly killed by a single blow with an instrument weighing scarcely five pounds, instead of the ten or fifteen blows with the heavy hammer usually employed. The instrument is simply a very convenient form of ax, with a hollow cylinder (like a gun-wad punch) about six inches long and one inch in diameter, with its edge ground sharp, on the end opposite the blade. A single blow with this and cuts a round hole in the forehead, and produces instant death.

Newspaper Postage.—Under the new law regulating postage on newspapers, the following will be the rates charged upon the several sizes or weights of paper named:

Paper	16	pounds	or less	to ream,	4 cts.	a year.
"	20	"	"	"	5	"
"	25	"	"	"	6	"
"	29	"	"	"	6	"
"	33	"	"	"	8	"
"	37	"	"	"	9	"
"	40	"	"	"	10	"
"	46	"	"	"	11	"
"	50	"	"	"	12	"

This will probably make the postage about nine or ten cents per annum on the newspaper of average size.

Mark Twain is reported to be at present engaged in writing an account of English manners and customs.

MOTHER HUBBARD AND HER DOG.

The aged and venerable maternal representative of a family which descended from an ancestral progenitor known in his time by the patronymic appellation of Hubbard (perhaps from his having been one of the early poets or bards of the Hub)

Wended her way to the small apartment ordinarily devoted to the storage of crockery and such portions of the family provisions as were left unused at the prandial meal,

To obtain, for the gratification of her favorite but emaciated specimen of the genus canis a fragment of an osseous nature once composing an integral portion of the skeleton of an animal (whether bovine, porcine or otherwise the narrator was not able to determine satisfactorily), from which she had reason to believe her petted quadruped would obtain aliment,

When by continuous progressive motion she had arrived at the end of her brief journey, and in fact had reached the objective point and the goal of her desire,

Her fond anticipations were not realized, and her [illegible] the family receptacle before alluded to proved to be entirely denuded of everything in the way of that sustenance which tends to prolong life when received within and assimilated by the animal organism;

Consequently this indigent and long-suffering member of the higher class of vertebrates called mammals, but familiarly known as the "poor dog," failed on this occasion to obtain anything to appease his unsated and voracious appetite, which there is reason to believe had previously been whetted by the anticipation of the favorable result of the visit of his friend and protector to the usual storehouse of his supplies.

Humor.

A pair of drawers—A span of truck-horses.

"Who was the meekest man?" asked a Sunday-school teacher. "Moses." "Very well; who was the meekest woman?" "Never was any."

Why are the ladies the biggest thieves in existence? Because they steel their petticoats, bone their stays, crib their babies, and hook their dresses.

A "mixed train"—The train of an elegant dress on promenade dragging along a hatful of shavings, strips of paper, cigar-stumps and tobacco-quids.

"I tell you," said a Wisconsin man to a neighbor next day after burying his wife, "when I came to get into bed, and lay thar, and not hearing Lucinda jawing around for an hour and a half, it just made me feel as if I'd moved into a strange country."

A Sabbath-school teacher, desirous of waking the dormant powers of a scholar, asked the question, "What are we taught by the historic incident of Jacob wrestling with the angel?" The cautious reply came, "Dunno, 'zactly, but I 'spose 'twas to tell us we mustn't rastle."

A Scotchman went to a lawyer once for advice, and detailed the circumstances of the case. "Have you told me the facts precisely as they occurred?" asked the lawyer. "Oh! aye, sir!" replied he; "I thought it best to tell ye the plain truth. Ye can put the lies into it yourself."

A boy six years old, having been much lectured by his father on the babyishness of crying when any calamity happened, cheered the paternal heart, the other morning, by saying: "Harry Bolton cried nearly all day 'cause his father died; but if you should die, pa, I wouldn't cry a bit."

"Dad, if I were to see a duck on the wing, and were to shoot it, would you lick me?" "O no, my son; it would show that you were a good marksman, and I would be proud of you." "Well, then, dad, I peppered our old Muscovy duck as he was flyin' over the fence to-day, and it would have done you good to see him drop!"

A New Hampshire farmer wanted a farm-hand, and was applied to by an Irishman, who wanted to work. The farmer objected to engaging Pat, on the ground that two Irishmen previously in his employ had died on his hands. "Then you object to hiring me for that, do ye?" said Pat. "Faith and I can bring you recommendations from many a place where I've worked that I never played such a trick!"

The editor of the Columbia (S. C.) Mail, with grateful eloquence, acknowledged the receipt of a milk punch in one column, and in the next published a "Temperance Department." Somebody has complained of his inconsistency, and he explains that the "editor of the Mail has nothing to do with what goes into the temperance column of his paper, nor have the gentlemen who conduct that department anything to do with what goes into the editor of the Mail."

An Accident at Cleveland.

According to a Cleveland paper, the following is the way accidents occur in that part of the country. An old but unusually thoughtful farmer, residing near enough to this city to do his trading here, went into his corn-field last week to hoe his corn, and, in order to give a crow or two a salute, should he see any, strapped his double-barreled shot-gun to his back. As he warmed up to his work he caused his hoe-handle to circulate with more than his wonted rapidity about him, and, finally, the end of the hoe-handle hitting the trigger of the gun, touched it off. The old farmer felt a gill or two of shot pass through his scalp and hat; and, supposing he had been shot at by an assassin in the rear, he, though wounded, seized his gun, and wheeling suddenly around, blazed away at the supposed shooter. He was still more surprised not to see a man, but his dog writhing in the agonies of dissolution. His is out now, hoeing corn again; but his head is covered with bandages and plasters, and his dog does not frisk about his heels as formerly.

A Smart Clerk.—A Whitehall grocery-man marks the prices of provisions on the covers of his barrels and casks. He had a new clerk the other day who mixed things. He got the cover of the sugar barrel, which was labeled "9 cents a pound," upon the lard barrel and straightway began to sell lard at nine cents. The sudden decline in the prices attracted all the people in the town, and the clerk thought he was doing a big thing until the proprietor returned, paid him off and told him to emigrate to Troy where smart people were in demand.—Troy Press.

To Color Yarn Yellow.—Cleanse the yarn, put it in hot alum water; boil peach-tree leaves, making a strong dye; remove the leaves and put the yarn in; simmer half an hour.

The Iowa republicans believe in the "oft repeated pledges" of the party to secure retrenchment and economy.—The average American citizen thinks it about time for some of the "oft repeated pledges" to be redeemed. Here is a beautiful illustration of the state of affairs in South Carolina: in nineteen counties duaing the past years 92,239 acres of land have been sold for the unpaid taxes ,and 343,971 acres have been forfeited to the state. The reason of this is the high taxes, created by stealing upon the part of the negro and carpet-bag officials. If there is no political change every body will have to be sold out for taxes.

Boss Shepherd has written a letter to John M. Francis of the Troy Times, thanking him for his enthusiastic defense. Mr. Shepherd certainly writes like an honest man, grieveously offonded by the heartless ingratitude of his countrymen. Some men are never satisfied. The situation in France daily grows more complicated. It is extremely difficult for one not intimately acquainted with French politics to keep in sight the rapid movements which are constantly made by the party leaders. It is a triangular fight, in which Monarchial, Bonapartist and Republican interests are in opposition to each other.—The Monarchial party is split into the McMahon and Legitimist factions, the latter of which favors the claims of the Count de Chambord. Just now the Legitimists are trying to unseat the Ministry because of the suppression of the Union, the newspaper which published the Chambord Manifesto. It will not require much to produce an explosion in France, the result of which it is impossible to foresee.

The Cincinnati Enquirer considers the Tilton-Beecher scandal a just judgment inflicted upon the Beecher family for the attack made by Harriet Beecher Stowe upon Lord Byron. The source of providential dispensations must have conceived a lively interest in the auther of Don Juan. There was not a feather of the great poet's reputation ruffled by Mrs Stowe's onslaught.

It would be better for the Chicagoans to appoint a Commission to investigate the lives and characters of all the clergymen in the city and have done with the business at once. Scarcely a week passes but some clergyman is hauled over the coals and turned inside out for the inspection of a curious public. The last case is that of one Dandy, a Methodist clergyman, who is charged with the serious offense of smoking cigars, sending his daughter to dancing school, and lying. This is pretty bad, and Dandy should have known better. He is to be tried in regular ecclesiactical style, and there is no doubt that the trial will go hard with him. Who would be a Chicago clergyman?

Darius Green has been double discounted by a balloonist of England. This ardent believer in the efficacy of flying machines went up in a balloon and when at a great distance he launched forth to take the air on his untried pinions Like Icarus, he soared too high. At any rate the mcahine had one trivial defect. It wouldn't work and the unfortunate enthusiast came sweeping down with awful velocity.—He struck the earth as if he had been shot from a catapult. If he had been fooling around a gallon can of nitroglycerine his demolition would scarcely have been more complete. The result of this experiment may have the effect to weaken the confidence of the public in the efficacy of flying machiues.

The question whether men shall labor six, eight or ten hours, is one ever upon the surface. It is easy of solutiou if due consideration is given it. It has been shown that the employer who voluntarily reduces the labor time of his men to five hours is undeniably losing money in unproductive machinery. So workingmen who determine that they shall work but six or eight hours per day are reducing the general product of labor to the detriment of all laberers. The eight hour system does not provide for the deficiency of production all through the country should that system be generally adopted. The burden would fall heaviest upon the poor. The longer the producing time the greater the product and the greater the aggregate wealth and prosperity.

The Cincinnati Gazette has referred to the fact that the editorials of the Enquirer, during the civil war, had to undergo the supervision of General Burnside before publication. The Gazette alludes to the matter as a disgrace to its contemporary, while the Enquirer can only see in it the disgrace of the goverment. The joke of it is that the Enquirer relates how it published selections from the writings of Hamilton, Madison and Jay as editorial matter, and the unspecting Gazette denounced the lucubration of those venerable revolutionary authorities as treasonable and seditious doctrine.—For the benefit of military censors the Enquirer discharged all its hatred of the government in pretended translatious from Tacitus. The good natured man with the whiskers either failed to perceive the track or thought it too good to spoil.

* * *

While Congress has been agitating the question of Mormonism in Utah, and seeking the best means for its ultimate suppression, the missionaries of that church are scouring the world for converts. Seven hundred of these deluded people arrived in New York a few days ago from Sweden and Norway, enroute for the promised land.—Hideous as the doctrines of this peculiar people are, it is difficult to see how we can suppress them. If a citizen can make his religious convictions secure him an immunity from military service they might excuse his bad taste in desiring more than one helpmeet. The question of religion, in its relation to individual liberty or rather license, is a perplexing one, and will be extremely difficult to deal with. With the precedents already established a man might claim the right to violate almost any of our civil statutes on the plausible pretext that his religious convictions demanded it.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 20.

The commodious block house erected by Mr. Allen, as a dwelling, and here I often attended prayer meeting and preaching in "the early day,' Mr. Allen was then a member of the Methodist Protestant church. Among the early settlers of this township, besides Mr. Allen and Mr. Miller, were John Nelson, Christian and Milton Hull, Samuel Eakright, R. R. Lounsbery, B. Bundell, John Crouch, Joseph Johnson, Aaron Vealey, Moses Haines, and many others, perhaps, of whom I am not now informed. Within a few years afterward, quite a number moved in, among whome were George Agnew, Elmor French, Moses Pierson, Elder Henry Cherry, Dr. Isaac Sawyer, Charles D. Handy,(the first Justice in the Township,) Eli Welch, Otis Bartlett, John Helwig and Elder S. B Ward.

As we have already stated, John N' Miller now a highly respected citizen of Newville, was one of the very first settlers in Willmington. We will now give a few items of his experience of pioneer life.—"in the winter of 1836-7," says he; "I took a job chopping of Mr. Lyttle, who had sold out where he had first settled, and enteed the tract of land owned by Edward and Wm' Scoville, in Stafford Township. The job was on the river bottoms where the timber was very heavy —Huge oak and elms, with enormous tops, being rather plenty to get along fast; as I had to take down all the timber and cut it up ready for logging. I only got four or five dollars, (I do not now remember distinctly the wages,)and was to take my pay in potatoes, pork, beans,&c. for potates, I paid, $1 per bushel; for pork 16 cents per pound ;and other things in perportion. The price for chopping was low' and that of the articles of pay high;—yet I could not do better, as provision must be had. While I kept busy on the job, I could just about get provision enough to keep us in the bare necessaries of life, so far as eating was concerned —but I had no time to be sick, and no time to rest but Sabbath. One evening, after choping hard all day. I took a bushel of potatoes and 17 or 18 pounds of pork on my sholder and started for home about dusk. The distance I had to travel along a blind trail, through the darkness and brush, was about six miles. Coming to Buck creek, over which a small limber log was placed, I undertook to walk it with my load but fell off in the water, which was high. I then waded through the ballance of the creek, getting very wet Cold wet and tired I persued my journey with my heavy load, until the long miles were passed: and I set down my pork and petatoes in my cabin.

The worst part of the tale is, that Lyttle was not satisfied with my doing the job so cheap, and taking the pay in high priced trade, but he actualy moved stake first set:—so that the line mite take in several large elms that were just outside of the job; and, besides, wanted me to chop up the curving brush fence, which ran from stake to stake, on one side of my square job, including about a quarter of an acre more than the straight line agreed upon, including, too' the elms fraudulently brought in, I went to Lyttle, in his house' to demand a settlement and the ballance of my pay; but he refused to pay' unless I choped up the brush fence.

This, under the circumstances, with my hands covered with blisters from hard and incessant chopping; (a kind of labor I was not accustomed to;)—This I say, provoked me almost beyond endurance, and I told him I should take it out of his hide, right then and there. I was making towards him. His wife screamed, and Lyttle turned it off in a laugh, and said he would pay me; and thus the matter ended." We will here enterrupt friend Miller, by stating this Lyttle as all the old settlers known,)was a hard customer,—He seems early to have exchanged his conscience (if he ever owned such an article for a gizzard, with which to grind new. comers. He was a very profane man though Bill Mathews declared that Lyttle did'nt know how to swear, he strung has oats together in such an awkward way.

And surely Bill was a competed judge of the matter. Friend Miller tells a good one on Lyttle, which I cannot resist the temptation to put down here. "I used" says John, "to go down to Lyttle's sometimes on Sunday afternoon,to be there on Monday morning, to commence my job Well, one afternoon, Lyttle being an excellent boatman, asked me to take a little ride on the river in his canoe.

The berry marshes have one gatherer to every bush.

Cherries are plenty at 10 and 12 cents per quart.

This has been the dullest business week of the year.

Some Kendallville "roosters" spent last Sabbath here.

The ice cream business is good at Miller and Kinsey's.

Can't we have a harvest dance some where in the country.

The editor of the New Era, at Albion, was in town last week.

The editor is at Indianapolis attending the State Convention.

One of our fellows says, big mouthed girls are in demand.

Frank Beard is around the streets again getting along finely.

Mrs. Little has an up-stairs room to rent to a young man or lady.

There are no end to the new houses now in course of erection.

Candidates for nominations are altogether too accommodating.

Our grain merchants are preparing themselves for the fall trade.

We are in receipt of the Bucyrus Forum one of the best papers published in Ohio.

Horse traders can always be accomodated at this place.

We learn that Howard Griswold is lying sick of typhoid fever.

A blind 'cordeon player has been on our streets, "dishing it up" for the corner gangs.

Ryan & Mader are doing lively livery business. They will soon erect a handsome brick barn.

We understand that a gentleman from Butler will start a picture gallery here in a short time.

Fernando Palmer, who has been very low for several weeks, is getting along quite rapidly.

The catholic church is going up quite rapidly. They have the finest foundation of any building in the place.

The health of the country is uncommonly good. The Doctors are having a fine rest.

Lew Vordermark, our popular boot and shoe merchant, has returned from the east.

Butler must have enjoyed herself hugely on the Fourth. The crowd was large and the features enjoyable.

Last Saturday night was so fearful that it unfitted many people for the proper devotional services on Sunday.

The strawberry crop is passed, but the yield was abundant, and for a short time they were retailed at 10 cents a quart.

It should be remembered that there is an ordinance against using fire-crackers or fire-arms in the coporation.

Hank Brandon, Esq., started west on last Tuesday to look up a location for the hardware business. Our boys will miss him in their circles.

Things generally in town have been dull for a week or so. After harvest we may look for a lively trade.

We see a notice, signed by the Marshal, to put up horses, etc. Our streets should be clear of such.

Thieves and burglars frequently go around in the guise of umbrella makers and repairers' Look out.

It is now said that the comet will show the plainest on the evening of the 22nd of this month.

Nearly all kinds of wild fruit promises to yield abundantly this year. It seems a little scarce yet in the market.

Our merchants and manufacturers may reasonably expect a heavy fall and winter trade.

J. C. Jackson, Esq., the energetic notion merchant from Sedan, called on us yesterday.

There is a clerk in this town that had better "look a lettle out off dot back room, and save droubles."

The inquiry, "cannot the people do with their own as they, please ?" is a cruel sarcasm, when the people have nothing of their own.

A number of new cross walks have been laid in various parts of the town —This is the most expensive parts of our street department.

The social of the M. E. Church will meet with Mrs. Meese, Wednesday afternoon, July 22d, and the mite in the evening.—All are invited.

Quite an extensive and good looking comet appears in the northern sky every evening. To this exhibition there are no reserved seats, nor tickets.

If potato bugs are knocked off of the vines about noon of these excessively hot days, many of them will never again reach the top of the plant.

In Fort Wayne, the Presbyterians have established a dancing school, for the benefit of their children. This is a "sensible idea, and should be adopted in every community."

It is not common to see corn in this vicinity tall enough on the 1st of July to hide a horse if driven through it, but we hear of several fields in this neighborhood that reached the mark this year.

Let our citizens be on the lookout for mad dogs. The heated term seems to contribute to this danger. Several places in this State are already enjoying this luxury. Keep a sharp eye out for them.

One-half of the fruit of Michigan will have to be picked green and thrown away in order to save the crop this year. The trees are so full that otherwise the whole would be ruined.

It was reported yesterday afternoon that Chicago was again on fire, and some thirty-six blocks were destroyed. They seem to have more than their share in this direction.

They had a lively convention over at Bucyrus last week. Some two hundred and fifty balloting were had before a candidate was nominated for Congress.—About the third does the thing in Indiana.

People should be very careful about loading their stomachs with unripe fruit at this season of the year as much as sickness is likely to prevail during the extremely hot weather.

Our accomptished saloonist got handsomly polished last Saturday, by a young man from the country. It dont do to fool around these young sprigs from the rural "deestricts."

Dr J. H. Ford has just erected a fine iron fence in front of his residence on Main-st, It is erected neat and firm and presents a splendid appearance. We would like to see a number of these fences built during the summer.

A gentleman who is supposed to know, tells us that the wheat crop will be much better than last year. The heads of the wheat are large, and although a little thin in places, will turn out more than is expected.

Auburn has a few fellows who call and imagine themselves high toned. They "stand off" the clothing merchant, borrow their neighbor's horse, buggy, and "jew a half hour" to get six cigars for a quarter of a dollar. Gabriel, toot.

A new building is being erected on 7th street, that gives the appearance of a church structure. We know of none, however, to be erected in that part of the town, but hope we are in error, as our place is in want of more buildings of this kind.

Candidates for county office are beginning to develop themselves in a lively manner. It costs just five dollars, in advance, to announce your name in the Courier. Let the people hear from you in time for them to discuss your merits.

Mishawaka has an enterprising individual, Geo. Milburn, who offers to invest $100,000 in a monster manufacturing enterprise at that place, if other citizens will subscribe an equal amount. If Auburn had two Geo. Milburns, and one of them would make that proposition to the other, our farmers might expect some day to have a better market for their surplus produce.

We have not had to chronicle any suicide for a long time. Not even a haunted house has been reported to us for many months. Are the people so enervated by the hot weather that they can do nothing to create a sensation?

By the way, if you want a nice pair of boots or shoes, go to-day and see the fine assortment that they have to show. It costs nothing and is a sight worth money Prices are way down and within the reach of any person's purse. Remember Vordermark & Son's is the name.

Some individuals in town are amusing themselves by writing letters to certain young ladies, and instead of their own signature use that of some of our young men in town. This may be amusing, but should the Grand Jury call on them for an explanation it might call to memory, "Rock of ages cleft for me, &c."

The supposed murder affair, near Waterloo, turns out to be a great farce. Inman was taken from jail on a writ of Habeas Corpus and discharged, and re-arrested on another charge, and again discharged. It is well enough to be on the alert but too much of this sometimes proves unpleasant.

We do candidly believe that our town authorities should take steps towards sending some of our surplus dogs to the "happy land of Canine. We have about 15,000 that are hardly fit for bologna, and others that are worth keeping. A good dog comes handy every now and then and are always in demand; a worthless one to the contrary.

Among the charges which are preferred against the Reverend Mr. Dandy, a Methodist preacher in Chicago, are that he smokes, sends his daughter to a dancing school and speculates in real estate. Add Brother Dandy's cognominal offense against pure religion, and it is clear he burnt at the stake.

Dr. Cowan has been presented with a cane from Mr. Osborn, of Albion, that is worthy of note. It has a complete drug store running down the stick and the handle holds an entire set of surgical instruments. The Dr. swings her with pride the full length of the sidewalk, and in case of any accident he is on hand with any thing required from quinine down to corn salve.

This week our farmers have been making the reapers buzz—it is said that there is an immense crop. The straw and berry have ripened so astonishingly fast, that, to save against loss from shattering off, the cutting has been done mostly early in the morning and late in the evening. The farmers are all, seemingly satisfied, and that is one excellent point. Some of the white wheat was touched with rust, bu not enough to hurt the berry.

We think a man rather a peculiar christian who will sit down to his breakfast table and return thanks to his Creator for the preservation of his life through the night, and the bounties set before him, and as soon as he has eaten the same takes down his gun and kills the little birds that simply want a few cherries off his trees for their breakfast, they having awoke earlier than he and sang praise to the same Creator.

It is said that the iron track on the B. P. & C. R. R. is laid to Ailla, and is rapidly progressing from Millford crossing, in Kosciusko county, eastward. The heavy works west of Blue Grass, and near Bruce's, in Jefferson, constitute about the only obstacles to the almost immediate completion of the road; and we are informed that even with the present forces engaged on those works, they will be finished in two months. It is probable, however, that the force will soon be largely increased.—New Era.

Hon. Henry B. Sayler. our Representative in Congress, has made a creditable record for himself in the National Council. He has attended strictly to business, worked hard, done nothing mean that we can learn, but on the contrary has done his duty in the most able and creditable manner.

The above is from the Steuben Republican and we can readily endorse it as far as that gentleman is personally concerned.

We have been visiting down among the yeomanry of Wayne and Stark counties O. for several days past, and found things unusually dull. The wheat crop is splendid, but the corn and grass is very backward, for want of rain. No rain having fallen there for five weeks until last Saturday. The county seems to be experiencing very hard times every where, and the oldest inhabitant cannot remember when money matters were so close. It is to be hoped that the abundant crop will give relief, for we cannot expect it rom any o ther source.

We give the following recipt for cleaning Wall Paper, which we clip from an exchange: Take a piece of wood of the shape of a scrubbing brush, nail a handle on the back, then upon the face nail a piece of dried sheepskin with the wool upon it; or flax or tow will do, or cotton flannel of several thicknesses will answer very well. Dip this brush into dry whiting, and rub the smoke lightly with the brush, on the upper parts of the room first, protecting the carpet with matting or newspapers, as the whiting dust is hard to sweep off the carpet. The whiting that remains on the wall is easily brushed off with a soft cloth attached to a stick It is is very effectual if the room is not damp and the whiting is dry.

The Defiance Democrat says, in order to facilitate business the B. P. & C. Railway company constructed a temporary trestle across the Maumee River, seven miles west from Defiance, and to-day a gang of track layers will commence operations west of that river. At the same time another gang will start at the St. Joseph River and work eastward. The distance between the two rivers is twenty miles.—When this intervening space is completed the whole track will be completed to Avilla, Ind., a distance of forty six miles from Defiance. At Avilla, junction will be made with the Grand Rapids & Indiana road. At the present rate of work it will be an easy matter to reach Chicago this year.

We append for the local information of our friends in the county, the following receipt,which we have clipped from an exchange. The heated term is upon us, and we think too much cold water is not healthy, and believe that nature craves something else to invigorate and strengthen it whilst necessarily exposed to the rays of a torrid sun.

Take of the best white Jamacia ginger root, carefully bruised, two ounces;—cream of tartar, one ounce; water six to be boiled for about five minutes, then strained; to the strained liquor add one pound of sugar, and again place it over the fire keep it well stirred till the sugar is perfectly disolved, and then pour it into an earthen vessel, into which you have put two drachms of tartaric acid, and the rind of one lemon, and let it remain till the heat is reduced to a lukewarm temperature; then add a teaspoonful of yeast stirring them well together, and bottle for use. The corks must be well secured.—The drink will be in high perfection in four or five days. This is a very refreshing and wholesome beverage, and one which may be partaken of without any unpleasant results, even in the hottest weather.

THE WIFE.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

From school, and ball, and rout she came,
The city's fair, pale daughter,
To drink the wine of mountain fair,
Beside the Bearcamp Water.

Her steps grew firmer on the hills
That watch our homesteads over,
On cheek and lip, from summer fields,
She caught the bloom of clover.

For health comes sparkling in the streams
From cool Chocorua stealing.
There's iron in our Northern winds—
Our pines are trees of healing.

She sat beneath the broad-armed elms
That skirt the mowing meadow,
And watched the gentle west wind weave
The grass with shine and shadow.

Beside her, from the summer heat,
To share her grateful screening,
With forehead bared, the farmer stood,
Upon his pitchfork leaning.

Framed in its damp, dark locks, his face
Had nothing mean or common,
Strong, manly, true, the tenderness
And pride beloved of women.

She looked up, glowing with the health
The country air had brought her,
And, laughing, said: "You lack a wife,
Your mother lacks a daughter.

"To mend your frock and bake your bread
You do not need a lady;
Be sure, among these brown old homes
Is some one waiting ready—

"Some fair, sweet girl, with skillful hand
And cheerful heart for treasure,
Who never played with ivory keys,
Or danced the polka's measure."

He bent his black brows to a frown,
He set his white teeth tightly;
"'Tis well," he said, "for one like you
To choose for me so lightly;

"You think, because my life is rude,
I take no note of sweetness;
I tell you love has naught to do
With meetness or unmeetness.

Itself its best excuse, it asks
No leave of pride or fashion
When silken zone or homespun frock
It stirs with throbs of passion.

"You think me deaf and blind; you bring
Your winning graces hither
As free as if from cradle time
We two had played together.

"You tempt me with your laughing eyes,
Your cheek of sundown's blushes;
A motion as of waving grain,
A music as of thrushes.

"The playing of your summer sport,
The spells you weave around me
You cannot of your will undo,
Nor leave me as you found me.

"You go as lightly as you came,
Your life is well without me;
What care you that these hills will close
Like prison walls about me?

"No mood is mine to seek a wife,
Or daughter for my mother;
Who loves you loses in that love
All power to love another!

"I dare your pity or your scorn
With pride your own exceeding;
I fling my heart into your lap
Without a word of pleading."

She looked upon the waving grass
So archly, yet so tender,
"And I will give you mine," she said,
"You will forgive the lender?

"Nor frock nor tan can hide the man;
And see you not, my farmer,
How weak and fond a woman waits
Behind the silken armor?

"I love you; on that love alone,
And not my worth, presuming,
Will you not trust for summer fruit
The tree in May-day blooming?"

Alone the hangbird overhead,
His hair-swung cradle straining,
Looked down to see love's miracle—
The giving that is gaining.

And so the farmer found a wife,
His mother found a daughter;
There looks no happier home than hers
On pleasant Bearcamp Water.

Flowers spring to blossom where she walks
The careful ways of duty;
Our hard, stiff lines of life, with her,
Are flowing curves of beauty.

Our homes are cheerier for her sake,
Our door-yards brighter blooming,
And all about the social air
Is sweeter for her coming.

ORIENTAL JUSTICE.

The last number of the Evangelist contains a letter addressed to the editor, the Rev. Henry M. Field, by a friend in Japan, dated April 21, from Kai-sei-gakko Tokei, announcing that a Japanese acquaintance of theirs, named Katski, who appears to have been educated in this country, has been beheaded for rebellion against the civil authorities. The writer gives the following account of the method of the execution:

In a case of this kind the condemned are led together in an open spot and made to kneel down. One by one they are placed beside the straw matting which are to be used to wrap their bodies in, and as each head falls, another victim is brought forward to the horrible death. Those considered least guilty die first, and their wretched companions are made to look on at what their own fate is to be. The executioner pours water on his sword after each blow (and one strike is usually sufficient) and the whole thing is finished up in short and solemn order. The bodies are then wrapped in mats and buried in a pit, the heads of the most guilty exposed on posts, and the bloody tragedy ends. The writer, in straying about within the inclosure, came at last across what he calls a "peculiar spot," devoted to the process of hari-kari. A little path turns off to the right, which conducts you into an open space, about ninety feet square, and surrounded on either side by the prison walls. In the center the earth is raised a few inches, and over the square plot thus formed is built a kind of shed or stall, with slanting roof. This faces toward another shed or covered platform about a dozen paces in front of it. Under the first-mentioned shed is the spot where the condemed Samourai perform "Hara-kiru," and upon the platform mentioned the yaconims sit to see that the thing is properly done. There has been no self-execution there recently, the latest being last year; but the usual manner of its performance was graphically described to us by the communicative prison-keeper who conducted us politely around. Without going into particulars, however, I will only say that on proper occasions the three sides of the shed are surrounded with awnings, and straw mats are placed in the center, upon which the Samourai seats himself, the officials take their seats on the raised platform directly in front. Without much delay the short sword is placed upon a little table in front of the victim, and with solemn dignity he takes it and draws it deliberately across the pit of his stomach, more or less deeply as the may be. In former times it was the custom to thrust one's self severely at the outset; but at present it has degenerated into simply the idea, so that the man takes the sword, a short or long one, and wrapping paper about the blade, allows only the point to project. With this (according to the latest fashion) he gives himself a respectable scratch, sufficient to show his chivalry, and then allows the assistant who stands behind him to complete the work by dispatching him as rapidly as possible. But, as I say, this spot and method are but little used nowadays, either because the Samourai distinctions are becoming obliterated, or else because the guilty people are usually of the common order. However, do not think that this little square court-yard of which I speak is at all lacking in modern horrors, even if the hari-kiru is falling out of date. For while we were standing underneath the little shed of such peculiar associations, the prison-keeper directed the attendants to remove a small roof-like cover placed over a spot a few paces from us. Walking up to the little square hollow in the ground thus exposed we saw, with a suppressed shudder, what the placed really was. It was only a small hole, a few feet each way, and half a foot deep, with four beams of wood lined about it on either side; but in his little space was the most sickening sight I ever saw. Straw mats clotted with human blood lay piled in the hole, while strips of paper with bands or cords still attached to them, and both covered with gore, showed the manner in which the victims had been blindfolded, ere their heads fell on that terrible spot. Looking upon the beam of wood on which I stood, I saw that its end, near the corner, was hacked away to the depth of several inches by the repeated blows of the sword which had fallen upon it for years gone by. It is probable that hundreds of unfortunates have perished at this very corner, for the spot has been used for the purpose of capital punishment for a long time. Twenty-five persons have been beheaded there this year, only since Jan. 1, and two were executed last Thursday, the fresh mark of whose blood we then saw. I inquired if a victim was led up to the spot in the condition in which it was at the present time. The yaconim said yes, but that he was blindfolded before he entered the gate, and could not see what was in store for him, though the odor of the place was quite enough to tell him. He was made to kneel at the fatal corner, and bow his head forward, and in a second or two all was over. Just beyond this unpleasant spot at the end of the court-yard, is a long black shed, looking something like a boat-house, only it is mounted up higher, and is reached by two flights of steps. At first I thought it was a kind of gallery for the spectators of the yaconims; but on going up the steps to the platform above, I soon saw by the rings, the pully, and the open trap what the place really was. It was a gallows, built in the most approved Jap or foreign style, and upon which four men may be hung at once; and in fact, fifteen victims have already fallen from that fatal trap the present year since the 1st of January. In order to explain the modus operandi to us more fully, the prison-keeper caused the rope to be brought, which he placed over one of the pulleys and attached to the iron ring in the usual manner. The rope was very strong, and as fine a specimen of hemp-work as one would ever desire for the purpose; the slip-noose was also excellently made, and had an ingenious front catch to it. The trap-door was drawn up to its proper position, and securely bolted; the end of the rope was placed upon it loosely, and at a signal the drop fell with a loud thump. A man's neck would thus fall six or eight feet and was pretty sure to be broken. They seldom fail in producing death immediately. The gallows has only been introduced here recently, and this scaffold was erected last year, probably in imitation of foreign countries. This manner of execution is not considered quite so bad or disgraceful as decapitation, and it will possibly come more and more in vogue. It was a strange contrast, however, to see in the same square the three different modes of execution, combining the ancient and modern ideas of the subject, viz.: the spot for performing hari-kiru, the hole for decapitation and the gallows for hanging. The latter is an innovation here, and the three methods are quite as queer a mixture of Jap and foreign styles as anything to be met with in more peaceable affairs. But we will hasten out of this subject; for though I might describe the old strangling-posts, with their hidden holes and pulleys and stone weights, which we saw by the side of the wall, yet I think it is time for us to step into the guard-house at the entrance and take a cup of tea to refresh ourselves. While we were sipping our tea, two long swords in black sheaths, and with black handles, were kindly brought in for our inspection. Laying aside our cups, we drew out the swords from their scabbards, and both the edges of the blades and the ador which accompanied their withdrawal, told distinctly what they were. These were the executive swords, and one of them especially had evidently done good and frequent service. Though often sharpened, its edge was nicked in so many places (where it had struck bone) that it was somewhat dulled; but a heavy blow overcomes all obstacles presented by the nicks. Justice, and not unfrequently injustice, is sure and speedy in Japan, for a man is executed the same day he is condemned.

WHAT IT IS TO BE BASHFUL.

It is not a pleasant thing to be bashful. If anybody thinks it is, let him observe the misery, the utter wretchedness of a bashful man in company, and he will be convinced of his mistake.

I have a friend who is perhaps the most bashful man ever produced by this, or any other country. He will walk a mile out of his way any time rather than meet a lady he knows. He has been known to threaten suicide to avoid the agony of an introduction to a young lady.

Once, in the excitement occasioned by a lady's speaking to him, he sat down on a hot stove. Persons who were present say they never saw a man manifest so strong an aversion to any object as Jenkins did to that stove. He seemed animated by a strong desire to go through the wall on the opposite side of the room.

A few days ago he allowed himself to be entrapped into accepting an invitation to a private entertainment, with the understanding that he was to go after a certain young lady and take her to the house. When the eventful evening arrived, he was, of course, detained at the store an hour longer than usual. At last he left and hurried home, haunted by the reflection that he would be too late—he would incur the everlasting enmity of the young lady—and other thoughts equally well calculated to quiet a disturbed mind. When he reached home he found that he had forgotten to stop at a barber's to be shaved. That operation he had to perform himself. He slashed around promiscuously, and as he had not shaved himself since he was a baby, it is not to be wondered at that he cut several beautiful gashes across one side of his face, forgetting altogether in his hurry to shave the other side.

Having at length, as he thought, completed his toilet, he started off in the direction of the house wherein dwelt the young lady whose escort he had been forced to become. After he had reached the house he walked by it several times before he could summon the courage to go in. At last he walked up the steps and pulled the bell gently. It was not answered, and he rang it again. Still no one came to the door. Then he got mad and jerked at it wildly. This time it was heard quite distinctly. When the servant opened the door, Jenkins was sitting quietly and calmly on the pavement, leaning against a tree in front of the steps. The bell-knob was still in his hand. The servant turned and whispered to some one beeind her. The gentle breeze wafted to the ears of Jenkins these few but expressive words, "Drunk as a fool."

Now, Jenkins was strongly averse to having that servant entertain any such opinion respecting his condition, and to convince her that he had not reached that state of intoxication supposed to be peculiar to fools, he jumped up, and walked steadily up the steps. His appearance, however, was not such as to impress her with a belief in his sobriety. The suddenness with which he had taken his seat on the pavement had made a rent of considerable size in a tender portion of his pantaloons, and from this rent a quarter of a yard of "canvass" fluttered gaily in the wind. Of this he was fortunately ignorant, and, consequently, unable to account for the half-smothered laugh that broke from the servant as she closed the parlor door.

The young lady was at once informed of the supposed condition of Jenkins, and he was in a few minutes informed that the young lady was suffering with a severe headache and couldn't accompany him. Jenkins had a vague suspicion that the headache was due to the first remark of that servant. It can hardly be said that he was disappointed in being deprived of the company of the young lady, but then it was not pleasant for one of the most sober, moral and church-going men in the world to be suspected of being drunk, and on such an occasion. His feelings toward the servant were not such as should be indulged in by a meek and lowly Christian.

He started off alone and in a few minutes reached the house whither he had been invited. Here he had no trouble with the bell, and after divesting himself of hat, overcoat, etc., was invited into the parlor.

Now, Jenkins has a peculiar horror of entering a room where there is more than one person, and he'd much rather that one were somewhere else.

From the amount of laughing, talking, piano-playing, etc., going on in the parlor, he judged there were about seventy-five persons in there, and the very thought of going in there almost made his hair stand on end. It was too late, however, to back out, and he opened the door to go in. The look of surprise on everybody's countenance, and the tittering that he heard in some parts of the room, did not restore his tranquillity. Somebody came to his rescue, and proceeded to introduce him to the company. While he was thus pleasantly engaged, another fellow entered the hall, and while Jenkins was engaged on his seventh bow and just as he had brought his head into the most convenient position for looking through his legs, the door opened. The door was brought into contact with the rear end of Jenkins' pants, and he at once assumed a sprawling position.

He was a beautiful object to contemplate, as he lay reclining gracefully on the floor, his feet stretched widely apart, his hands clutching at the floor, his nose mashed into the carpet, and that white flag spread out in all its beauty.

He didn't stay there long, however, but by the united exertions of the crowd he was enabled to rise, and was invited to "take a seat" (most anybody to judge from appearances would have thought he already had a seat). He made a rush for the nearest chair, and turned to sit down. As he did so, some playfully disposed youth removed the chair. He did sit down, but with such force as to shake the whole house. The old folks up-stairs were actually thrown out of bed by the force of the "sit down." As his body descended to the floor, his feet flew heavenward. A young lady was sitting in front of him. In a moment she too was on the floor, and her chin bore the mark of a boot.

Again he was assisted to his feet, and seeing a chair in the farthest corner of the room, he went for it. While crossing the room, he stepped on a lady's dress. In trying to get off, he stepped on it higher up and tore off about two yards of trail. Then he backed off, and into another lady's lap. Those who were present say the suddenness with which he left this seat reminded them of their school days, when they used to fix pins in the benches to see the boys go through the ceiling.

After this leap, Jenkins brought up against a center-table. In an instant that table was no more. He had made about nine marble slabs out of one. Fancy toys, pieces of glass, flowers, etc., were scattered about in the greatest profusion.

Just about this time he caught a glimpse of himself in an opposite glass. He drew nearer and for a moment he was transfixed with horror, wonder, amazement and everything of that sort. His eyes assumed the size of an ordinary saucer. And no wonder; for in the glass he saw his face, one side of which was covered with bloody scratches, the other with a beard of a week's growth; he saw his head which had not been combed since morning; he saw his shirt put on hind-side-before; he saw his vest the bottom button fastened in the top hole; then, as he turned, he saw the flag floating in the breeze.

All this he saw, and with a cry which was a howl, a shriek and a yell altogether, he made a rush for the door, and then for the street. He ran about three miles and stopped on a corner to commune with a lamp-post. It grieves me to say that, for a time, he forgot his Sunday school teaching. It is hardly necessary to repeat what he said. Some of the expressions he used are familiar to most persons; but most of them he manufactured for the occasion. Those in ordinary use he thought would not do the subject justice.—Danbury News.

More About the Press Gag-Law.

[Washington (July 1) Cor. Chicago Inter-Ocean.]

Good lawyers of this district, who have seen Judge Poland's card explaining the law which, it is claimed, gives the Criminal Court here power to arrest editors for alleged libel wherever they may reside, express surprise that he should have claimed that it is necessary to make the provisions of the Judiciary act of 1789 applicable here, in order to be able to arrest criminals who might commit offenses here and escape to the States. The fact is, that the courts of this district have long had ample power to arrest criminals who, after committing offenses in the district, fled from it. But to arrest persons who have never been here, and who have only constructively violated laws of the district, is quite another thing which the bill as passed is held to make possible. There has been no such condition of affairs here as Judge Poland's card implies, namely: That if a person committed a crime in the district and was indicted in the courts, there was no way of arresting him if he crossed the river into Virginia or stepped over the boundary into Maryland. Arrests of persons after indictment are made by a United States officer bearing with him to any State a copy of the indictment, certified by the clerk of the court; and arrests before indictments are made by sending the warrant of the United States Commissioner to the United States Marshal of the district where the criminal is. The effect of the second section of Judge Poland's bill was not mentioned in either House. The brief explanation was confined exclusively to the question at issue between the Police Court and the Criminal Courts. Whether the bill was passed with special reference to the press cannot be known, but it is true that before any attention had been attracted to the bill, or its peculiar provisions had become known, that Congressmen who had been anxious to obtain some hold on the press were boasting quietly that a bill had been slipped through that gave them all the power they wanted.

A Night in the Country.

About 11 o'clock the dogs take a tongue in. The faithful watch-dogs generally form themselves into granges, each containing about 700 dogs, for mutual aid and benefit in the distillation of mutton. Every night 100 dogs steal away silently to kill sheep, while the other 600 bark furiously, to induce their owners to believe they are, like the Hon. Elijah Pogram, "active to their trust," and to cover the bloody operations of their fellows. At midnight the cow whose calf has been reft from her, having reflected upon her loss, lifts up her voice and laments. The lament of a sorrowful cow in a barn is something sui generis in the matter of sounds. In the first place, it takes her a long time to become loud, and an equally long time to fill the barn with noise. But when the building is filled with "moo," and it begins to leak out at the windows and doors in muffled and melancholy thunder, she has a long interval of rest to prepare another blast ere the first ululation has been exhausted. About two in the morning she is drowned out and silenced by a jackass somewhere in the country, who, having nerved himself for the effort by a silence of twenty-four hours, delivers himself by a bray that makes the sky bright with a responsive shower of shooting stars. There is an awful silence for about twenty minutes, no animal daring to call his voice his own; then the jackass sings again. Just as the country-side is congratulating itself that the infliction is over for another interval of twenty minutes, he discharges a third volley, and then is heard no more. You, however, do not know that he has broken a blood-vessel or gone to sleep; but, with a dreadful uncertainty as to when the next bray will occur, put your head under the clothes, and your thumbs in your ears, and wait.

A Fish Story.

The curious fate of a fish caught in the Sassafras river, in Kent county, Maryland, is thus related by a correspondent: A fish-hawk stole a very fine pickerel from the seine of some fishermen, when an eagle who had been watching the operation gave chase, and compelled the hawk to drop his prey. This was seized at once by the eagle and appropriated to his own use. William Shallcross, who resides there, had been looking on, and succeeded in frightening off the eagle. As the fish was not injured, he took it home, intending it for supper. While the cook was looking another way the cat in her turn captured the pickerel, and began devouring it. Just then a hound belonging to the family came along, and concluded to assert his rights in the matter. He drove away the cat and ate the fish himself—which closes its history. And this is a true "fish story."

THE ORIGIN OF "GROG."—Until the time of Admiral Vernon the British sailors had their allowance of brandy or rum served out to them unmixed with water. This plan was found to be attended with inconvenience on some occasions, and the Admiral therefore ordered that in the fleet he commanded the spirit should be mixed with water before it was given to the men. This innovation at first gave great offense to the sailors, and rendered the commander very unpopular. The Admiral at that time wore a grogram coat, and was nicknamed "Old Grog." This name was afterward given to the mixed liquor he compelled them to take, and it has hence universally obtained the name of grog.

AMONG the choicest ingredients of melodrama is a gambling scene in which a human life is the stake. Such an incident actually occurred three months ago in Algeria. A French soldier, being incensed against one of his officers, played at cards for his Captain's life, and, having lost, took a gun, stole to the cafe where the officer was, and fired, but as another officer, just entering, struck up the weapon as it went off, the intended victim escaped. The soldier was shot.

Training of Children.

Let children grow. Give them time for slow and natural development. Give them freedom and liberty in things not positively and permanently hurtful. What matter if all their daily behavior is not quite pleasant or perfect, if they show improvement and progress. Sow good seed, anxious parent, cultivate with care, but wait patiently for harvest if you wish good fruit. Suppose a child does not sit as straight as a ramrod at table; suppose a cup or tumbler does slip through its little fingers, the food deluged, the goblet smashed, and the table-cloth ruined—do not look cross, and break out with reproof of what was unintended as if it were a willful wrong. Did you never let a glass slip through your fingers? Instead of sending the child away in anger, or with threatening words, why not be as generous as to a guest, to whom you would kindly say, "It is of no consequence." It is generally wise to take little notice of mishaps or bad behavior at the time, and even to divert attention from them at the instant. Afterward, at some appropriate time, draw the child's attention to the impropriety, fault, or lack of suitable care, and point out kindly the remedy.

A Texas Tragedy.

[Corsicana Cor. Galveston News.]

Quite a serious shooting affray occurred in this county last week, between Mr. Harrington and his brother-in-law, Mr. Boggett, two well-known and respected citizens, between whom an old family feud had existed for some time. Harrington left his home shortly after dinner and proceeded to the river to fish, leaving his rifle on the bank. He then descended the bluff to the water's edge. He carried with him a pistol, to shoot the large fish if he should catch any, the better to enable him to land them safely. He had been fishing but a short time, when he heard a noise above him, and, looking up, beheld Boggett over him with an oar upraised to strike him, and who said, "Now, Harrington, d—— you, I've got you just where I want you, and you can't get away. I am between you and your rifle. You've been talking about my father long enough, and I'm going to kill you." Harrington immediately raised his pistol and fired, the ball taking effect in Boggett's breast, ranging upward and lodging in his left shoulder. He immediately fell into the water. After floating around for some little time, he begged Harrington to help him out, as he had already killed him. This Harrington consented to do, and, after much trouble and hard work, he succeeded in getting him to land and upon the bank. Boggett then said, "For God's sake run for a doctor, for I am dying." Harrington immediately shouldered his shot-gun and started on a run. As soon as his back was turned, Boggett reached for his rifle and exclaimed, "Hold on, you've killed me and I can't wait for a doctor to come and I'll be d—d if you are going to get off so easy." He deliberately aimed and shot at H., the ball striking him in the right side and passing nearly through. Harrington then exclaimed: "God d— you, I've shot you once, and now I'll shoot you again," and shot a load of shot into Boggett's right arm. He then walked all the way up home and told his friends the whole circumstances.

Boggett was found lying on the ground, where he had received the last shot. He was at once conveyed to his home and medical aid summoned. Strange to say, both are still alive, and Harrington is in a fair way of recovery, while hopes are entertained of Boggett's recovery.

A Terrible Case of Lunacy.

A remarkable case of lunacy has just been made known in Green Village, N. J., by the death of Charles Crowell, at the age of 70, who had been a raving maniac for over 45 years. He was kept chained to the floor of his home, and would never allow clothing to be put on him. He was confined in a small apartment made for his use. No furniture was in the room, the only thing in it being straw. His mother took care of him for the first 15 years, during which time he tore to pieces over 100 bedquilts which she made for him. At times he would be perfectly harmless, and would allow his mother and sister to stop in his room and feed him. But for months he would pace his small room and no one dared venture near him. In his room was a very small window, through which food and water were given him. Sometimes he would not eat for a week; at other times enough food could not be given him to satisfy his voracity. His mother died from the great burden, and his sister took charge of him. She, too, died after some years, from the constant care and anxiety with which she watched him. Lately his niece, Mrs. Burt, has cared for him. The most remarkable fact in connection with the case was that just before he died his mind was clear and he called an attendant by name.—New York Tribune.

VEGETINE

Purifies the Blood and Restores the Health.

GENERAL DEBILITY.

In this complaint the good effects of the VEGETINE are realized immediately after commencing to take it, as debility denotes deficiency of the blood. There is no remedy that will restore the health from debility like the VEGETINE. It is nourishing and strengthening, purifies the blood, regulates the bowels, quiets the nervous system, acts directly upon the secretions, and arouses the whole system to action. It has never failed in this complaint.

MARVELOUS EFFECT.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:—Dear Sir—I have used the great blood remedy, VEGETINE, and feel it a duty to acknowledge the great benefit it has done me. In the spring of the year 1862 I was sick from general debility caused by overwork, want of sleep and proper rest. I was very weak and much emaciated. I tried many remedies without receiving any benefit from any of them, until I was persuaded to try VEGETINE. Before I had taken this one week my improved condition gave me renewed hope and courage. I continued to take it every day, gaining more strength, until I was completely restored to health. The effect of this remedy, in case of general debility, is indeed marvelous.

Saving is Wealth.

One great cause of the poverty of the present day is the failure of our common people to appreciate small things. They do not realize how a daily addition, be it ever so small, will soon make a large pile. If the young men and young women of to-day will only begin, and begin now, to save a little from their earnings and plant it in the soil of some good savings bank, and weekly or monthly add their mite, they will wear a happy smile of competence and independence when they reach middle life. Not only the pile will itself increase, but the desire and ability to increase it will also grow. Let clerk and tradesman, laborer and artisan, make now and at once a beginning. Store up some of your youthful force and vigor for future contingency. Let parents teach their children to begin early to save. Begin at the fountain-head to control the stream of extravagance—to choose between poverty and riches. Let our youth go on in habits of extravagance for fifty years to come as they have for fifty years past, and we shall have a nation of beggars, with a moneyed aristocracy. Let a generation of such as save in small sums be reared, and we shall be free from all want. Do not be ambitious for extravagant fortunes, but do seek that which is the duty of every one to obtain, independence and a comfortable home. Wealth, and enough of it, is within the reach of all. It is obtainable by one process, and by one only—saving.

It is an absolute crime to be poor. It is dishonesty of the rankest kind. A young man, for instance, spends every dollar of his income; he is taken sick—what is the consequence? why, his companion must take out of his hard earnings, money saved at the rate of twenty-five cents per week, to buy him the necessaries of life, medicine, etc., and perhaps furnish him money with which to go home to his friends, who, in their turn, must spend their savings to provide for his wants.

My readers have all heard of the Communists of Paris. Their philosophy was that the man who saved should divide with the man that didn't save. Now, this is exactly the doctrine that young men set forth in their daily actions when they fritter away all their earnings and throw themselves, when sick or disabled, upon some already overworked, industrious sister or aged parent, whose bent form bears the marks of long years of hard labor in trying to keep the wolf from the door. This wasting course of life is, I repeat, a downright, absolute crime. Men who have for years worked in some remunerative situation, and have squandered away every dollar, without a thought of the future, and then, when the rainy day comes, throw themselves upon the saving ones, are Communists capable of carrying off the palm, whose counterpart pillaged Paris and slew the innocent.

Terrible Tragedy—End of a Wild Career.

A Cleveland, Ohio, dispatch of June 30 says: A terrible tragedy was enacted at Rockport to-day, in which John Beneda shot and killed Kate Koxlice, and then blew his own brains out. It seems that Beneda and the murdered woman, both married, eloped from Bohemia several years ago, and lived as man and wife and this city. The current of their unholy love not running smoothly, they separated, the murderer, going to Chicago with another woman, with whom he returned about five years ago. Tiring of his second mistress, they separated, since which time Beneda, it is said, has been living with different women. Becoming dissatisfied, he made overtures for a return to his former mistress. During the absence of Beneda, the real husband of the victim immigrated to this country, searched out his erring spouse, and, being of a forgiving nature, once more took her to his bosom. The advances of Beneda were rejected with scorn, but of late has been very persistent in his efforts to induce her to leave her husband, accompanying his request with violent threats. To-day Beneda, after stealing a shot-gun and a pistol, proceeded to Rockport, where Kate was engaged in picking berries, and while she and her companions were "nooning" under the shade of some bushes, he approached from the rear and emptied the contents of the shot-gun into her left side and breast, from which she died in a few minutes. An alarm was immediately given by others present, but Beneda almost immediately drew the stolen pistol, placed the muzzle to his temple, and put an end to his miserable existence. The murdered woman leaves two children. The affair has caused considerable excitement.

Linseed Oil.

Linseed oil is obtained from flaxseed, by grinding the same under heavy stones, set on edge and made to revolve on beds of stone. Attached to the edge-stone are scrapers which throw the seed into the circular track of the roller. The ground-seed is placed in strong, woven woolen bags, which bags are covered with mats made of horse-hair and sole-leather, of a proper and sufficient width to protect the bags in the operatien of pressing. These mats with their contents are subjected to an immense hydraulic pressure, and the expressed oil flows off into large iron tanks, where it is allowed to settle. What remains in the bags after the pressure is known as oil-cake. About 8,000,000 gallons of linseed oil are used annually in the United States.

Chafing of Infants.

Q. C. Smith, M. D., writes to the Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal that he values bismuth very highly as a preventive of chafing, and says: Take sub-nitrate of bismuth, in fine powder, and put in a thin flannel bag, and use as the old nurses use the old style "starch bag" in dusting over the chafed parts, or those parts that are likely to or have already become sore from any cause whatever. Should the parts be too tender for the use of the powder in this way, it should be sprinkled on plentifully. The good effect will, in many instances, manifest itself very quickly after the application. I have found bismuth an excellent external remedy for raw, blistered surfaces, and many other more or less superficial ulcerated surfaces.

Some Facts About Hydrophobia.

There is reason to hope that fresh accessions to medical knowledge of the character of hydrophobia will accrue from the observations made in the McCormick case, both before and after death. The autopsy appears to have been conducted with unusual scientific care and skill. It is not yet ascertained whether the poison of rabies acts directly upon the blood or the nerves, and this important question is likely to be decided in the course of the investigation. The explanation of the effort of patients afflicted with the disease to "bark like a dog" is very satisfactory; the fact of its being merely an endeavor to get rid of an extraordinary flow of saliva, having been demonstrated by the cessation of the symptom when a powerful medicine checked the flow. The expression of alarm in the countenance of the patient, the convulsive action of his muscles, and the congestion within the cranium disclosed by the post-mortem examination, indicate that the brain was affected; and these and other features of the case distinctly show that at the time of the illness the irritation from the wound had long since ceased to be an active factor.

We draw attention to these observations because they appear to teach a lesson of value. The poison from rabies must penetrate the system before its most serious effects can be elicited, and fortunately it is slow in making its way from the seat of injury to vital parts. Obviously the thing to do when bitten is to prevent the transmission of the virus into the system, and there is plenty of time to carry out measures for this purpose. In most cases a bandage can be immediately applied above the wound, which will temporarily obstruct the circulation. It is probable that sucking the wound would at once withdraw the poison; at all events the knife of the surgeon and the cautery offer absolute security. This view is corroborated by the observation that in most cases of hydrophobia, and notably in the one under consideration, the wound has not bled freely: a flow of blood being likely to wash away the poison.

So that, after all, people who are timorous on the subject of hydrophobia may console their fears with the reflection that in the extremely improbable event of their being actually bitten by a dog that is really mad, a tightly bound handkerchief and the nearest apothecary shop can provide the means for promptly and completely eliminating all possibility of serious results.—New York Tribune.

Home-Made Marriage.

A marriage according to the creed of the Spiritualists is the sensation in New Albany, Ind. The daughter of a respectable physician, Dr. Seth Hobbs, was married recently to Gardner Knapp, without ceremony by a minister of the gospel or Justice of the Peace. The following written agreement, signed by the bride and groom, in the presence of a large number of invited guests, was what made the pair husband and wife:

Friends and Fellow-Citizens, Ladies and Gentlemen—We, Gardner Knapp and Lamira P. Hobbs, believing that our hearts and souls are already matrimonially united, appear before you now, thus publicly to celebrate the commemoration of our union. We hold the opinion that neither Church nor State has any moral or equitable right to interfere with, or any just claim to be consulted in reference to, the arrangements that our spontaneous sentiments and sympathies have prompted us to make. Therefore, in non-conformity to, and disregarding the rules and regulations in such cases made and provided by what is called society, we adopt such form and ceremony as in our judgments and consciences seem most just and proper; and now, in the presence of these witnesses, and our invisible spirit friends here assembled, we proclaim, publish, and declare ourselves husband and wife; and may God and the angel world add their blessings.

The Work of Congress.

Some idea of the amount of work imposed on the Congressional committees, and of tht pressure there must have been in both houses, during the past session, may be gained from the statement that there were 3,769 separate bills introduced in the House and 960 in the Senate. The joint resolutions numbered 114 in the House and 10 in the Senate. Of these bills probably not four hundred passed both houses and were approved by the President. All the balance of the work thus prepared goes over to the next session, and, with the new bills which will be introduced next winter, will present a bulk of matter which no Congress has probably ever faced. The work of the committees on these bills is shown in the various reports submitted with them. Hundreds of these reports have been printed, and vary in size from one page to a thousand pages of printed matter. The reports of the Senate Ttransportation Committee, of the committee investigating affairs of the District of Columbia, and the report on the moiety buisness make immense printed volumes, which it would take a member of Congress half the session to read through.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Continue rubbing—do not give up so long as there is any chance of success.

June Earthquakes.—The month of June is noted for terrible earthquakes. On June 7, 1692, 3,000 persons were destroyed by an earthquake in Jamaica; on the same day of the same month in 1755, 40,000 persons perished in Persia by an earthquake; again, on June 7, 1773, Santiago with its inhabitants was swallowed up. Several other instances of bad June earthquakes might be mentioned, one even so late as June 10, 1867, in Java, when 400 persons were destroyed.

A Few Words to Feeble and Delicate Women.

By R. V. Pierce, M. D., of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.

Knowing that you are subject to a great amount of suffering, that delicacy on your part has a strong tendency to prolong, and the longer it is neglected the more you have to endure and the more difficult of cure your case becomes, I, as a physician, who is daily consulted by scores of your sex, desire to say to you, that I am constantly meeting with those who have been treated for their ailments for months without being benefited in the least, until they have become perfectly discouraged and have almost made up their minds never to take another dose of medicine, nor be tortured by any further treatment. They had rather die and have their sufferings ended, than to live and suffer as they have. They say they are worn out by suffering, and are only made worse by treatment. Of anything more discouraging, we certainly cannot conceive, and were there no more successful mode of treating such difficulties than that, the principles of which teach the reducing and depleting of the vital forces of the system, when the indications dictate a treatment directly the reverse of the one adopted for them, their cases would be deplorable indeed. But, lady sufferers, there is a better and far more successful plan of treatment for you; one more in harmony with the laws and requirements of your system. A harsh, irritating, caustic treatment and strong medicines will never cure you. If you would use rational means, such as common-sense should dictate to every intelligent lady, take such medicines as embody the very best invigorating tonics and nervines, compounded with special reference to your delicate system. Such a happy combination you will find in my Favorite Prescription which has received the loudest praise from thousands of your sex. Those languid, tiresome sensations causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet or ascend a flight of stairs, that continual drain that is sapping from your systems all your former elasticity, and driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces that renders you irritable and fretful, may all be overcome and subdued by a persevering use of that marvelous remedy. Irregularities and obstructions to the proper workings of your systems are relieved by this mild and safe means, while periodical pains, the existence of which is a sure indication of serious disease that should not be neglected, readily yield to it, and if its use is kept up for a reasonable length of time the special cause of these pains is permanently removed. Further light on these subjects may be obtained from my pamphlet on diseases peculiar to your sex, sent on receipt of two stamps. My Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists.

Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word and maintains its reputation unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession, and prescribed daily in the Charity Hospital and other Hospitals in New Orleans. Wilhoft's Tonic is thus highly recommended by the leading medical men of the country, and is worthy of such indorsement. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans. For sale by all druggists.

In a recent letter to Messrs. Remington & Co., Capt. E. W. Whittemore, 15th Infantry, U. S. A., thus speaks of the Remington Sewing Machine:

"If your sewing machines are as much of an improvement over others as your double shot-gun in its breech mechanism is superior to the English guns, I shall want one."

The Secret of Captivation.—Features of Grecian mold, a well-turned neck, and beautifully rounded arms, are no doubt very nice things to have, and ladies who possess these charms have reason to be thankful to Mother Nature; yet, after all, the most captivating of all womanly charms is a pure, fresh and brilliant complexion. This superlative fascination any lady may secure by using Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

Ye Old Mexican Mustang Liniment has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, sprains, scalds, burns, salt rheum, sore nipples, swelling, lameness, chapped hands, poisonous bites, stings, bruises, &c., &c., on men, women and children, and sprains, strains, galls, stiff joints, inflammation, &c., in beasts, than all other liniments put together. It will do what is promised or ye money refunded.

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that Plantation Bitters is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

Reanimating the Hair.—When the hair ceases to draw from the scalp the natural lubricant which is its sustenance, its vitality is, as it were, suspended, and, if not promptly attended to, baldness will be the certain result. The one sure method of avoiding such an unpleasant catastrophe is to use Lyon's Kathairon, which, when well rubbed into the scalp, will speedily reanimate the hair and prevent it from falling out.

THIRTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE OF AN OLD NURSE.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP IS THE PRESCIPTION OF one of the best Female Physicians and Nurses in the United States, and has been used for thirty years with never failing safety and success by millions of mothers and children, from the feeble infant of one week old to the adult. Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

Waukesha, Wis., June 9th, 1874.

C. C. Olin & Co., Proprietors Mineral Rock Spring: I have been drinking the water from your spring since the middle of March last for a kidney difficulty that I have had since I was six years old (I am now twenty), and I must say that it has had a wonderful effect upon me. I have been a great sufferer in the region of the kidneys for years. It has been with the greatest difficulty that I could urinate, and its effects have been such upon my general health that I have not been able to labor but a part of the time for years; but since I began to drink Mineral Rock Spring Water my health has steadily improved, and I can now do a good day's work without fatigue, and I consider myself well on the road to health and happiness. I would recommend the water from your spring to all those that have been afflicted with the kidney difficulty, as a sovereign remedy for that obstinate disease, as it has done for me what medicine could not reach.
Respectfully yours,
HARVEY CLARK.

This is to certify that I am the father of Harvey Clark, the above named, and I am knowing to the suffering that he has undergone during almost all his life with the kidney difficulty, and I fully corroborate all of the above statements that he has made, believing and knowing them to be true.
LUCIAN CLARK.

Lansing, Mich., April 4th, 1874.

C. C. Olin & Co.—Dear Sirs: It gives me pleasure to add testimony to the value of the waters of your Mineral Rock Spring. My wife has been afflicted for the past six years with disease of the kidneys. Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to come to Waukesha to drink of its healing waters. We tried the Mineral Rock Spring Water. Mrs. Van Loon has been greatly benefited, and is still using it, feeling that in time it will make a permanent cure.

which you can get at my store for less than you are aware of as I can say what the most of my competers cannot, as I am now engaged in all the above line of goods for the last 20 years. I have paid a good tuition which others will have to pay yet, and this will be the best assurance that S. Lauferty can sell you his line of goods for less than any other house around or about. I also keep in connection with the above, a fine and well selected stock of Plain and Fancy French English, German and Domestic

Cassimeres

Broad Cloth and Vestings. I have also engaged one of the best Tailors west of New York or east of Chicago. All I ask is to come and examine my stock and prices and I will assure you will buy of me and go home well pleased and satisfied. I sell now strictly for cash. S. LAUFERTY.

MANHOOD:

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

Just published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the Radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHŒA or Seminal Weakness Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also, CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY and FITS, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance; Piles, &c.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a road of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Sent under seal ina plain envelope, to any address post-paid on the receipt of six cents, or two post stamps. Also DR. SILSBEE'S REMEDY FOR PILES. S [illegible] for circular Colorado Excursions—Go West Thro St. Louis.

During the Summer Season, the Missouri Pacific and Kansas Pacific Through Line, via St. Louis and Kansas City, will sell Excursion Tickets from St. Louis to Denver and Return, good ninety days from date of sale, at extremely low rates thus afforded every one an excellent opportunity to visit the famous resorts of Colorado, among the beautiful Parks of the Rocky Mountains.

To all who are seeking new homes and are about to take a trip to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Nebraska, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route by the way of St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Through Line. It is equipped with fine day Coaches, Buco's Reclining Chair Cars, Pullman's Palace Sleepers the famous Miller Safety Platform and the celebrated Westinghouse Air Brake and runs its trains from St. Louis to principal points in the West without chance. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first-class all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R., via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R., via Vinita.

For full information in regard to Colorado Excursions, or trips to any point in the Great West, address or call upon either of the following named Agents of the Line: J. F. Thompson, 157 Exchange St. Buffalo, N. Y.; S. H. Thompson, Union Depot, Columbus Ohio; or E. A. Ford Gen'l Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street St. Louis, Mo. The Candidates

Below are given brief sketches of the prominent Democratic candidates for official position. The first candidate, the Hon. John E. Neff, nominee for Secretary of State, was born in Winchester, Randolph county, Ind., and is now but 28 years old. He has live it the place of his native, and grown up without going west, and built up a deserve popularity in his own county. His education was obtained at the state univerity in Bloomington, and there, as at home, he won everybody to his enduring friendship. When the Monroe delegation were delicately approached in the interest of another candidate, the young man repiied: We knew John when he was with us in college, and he is our man. An older delegate said, Neff boarding in my family and I know his worth, and he must have my support. For seven years he has been in the practice of law at Winchester. He came within twenty-three votes of winning the last election to congress over the Hon. J. P. C. Shanks, and is the most popular young man in the State of Indiana He is a fluent and eloquent speaker on the platform, a modest and genial man, a zealous democrat, and every way worthy the confidence and honor of his countrymen.

The Democratic candidate for Auditor of State is Mr. Ebenezer Henderson, a farmer of Morgan county, who is one of her native born sons, and tried and trusted public servant. He is now forty-one years old, a man of fine physique and established charater. He received his education at the State University, and belongs to the class of intelligent, thinking laborers of the State. In 1860 he was elected treasurer of Morgan county, and in that capacity won the favor of his fellow citizens. He was a member of the State Senate from Morgan and Johnson continues in 1869 and 1871, and recieved the nomination of the farmers' convention on the 10th of June for the same office as that which he was named for yesterday. He is emphatically the people's candidate, and will receive the deserved support of the democratic party which he has always supported with a constant and unwavering fidelity.

Col. B. C. Shaw, the candidate for treasurer of state, was born in Oxford Ohio, in the year 1831. At the age of 17 he removed to Greensburg, this State where he learned the trade of carriage making. He continued at his trade at Greensburg until the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted, going into the service as second lieutenant of the Seventh regiment of Indiana volunteers. He was finally promoted to the position of major in that regiment. At the battle of Winchester he recieve a severe wound, from the effects of which he was compelled to resign his position. Soon after arriving home he was appointed by Governor Morton a recruiting officer of the fourth congressional district, and raised the 68th regiment of volunteers, with which he again went to the field, but declining health originating from the wound he received at Winchester, once more compelled him to retire from military service. And in the fall of 1863 he came to Indianapolis a mere shadow of his former self. By undergoing proper medical treatment he has almost entirely recovered from the effects of his injury. He has been engaged in the carriage business ever since he removed here, and is the chief member of Shaw & Co., carriage manufacturers.

Superintendent of Public Instruction. The convention had special regard to the qualifications of its nominee, and selected a man who has, for many years, rendered conspicuous service to the educational interests of the State. Professer James H: Smith has been for nine years the successful builder of the Fort Wayne public schools, and has given them a reputation co-extensive with the stato. During the same time he has been an active member of the State Board of Education, and at this time is president of the State Teachers' Association Mr Smart who was born in Center Harbor, New Hampshire, and obtained his education in the excellent schools of the State. In 1866 he accepted a position in the schools of Toledo, Ohio whence the Fort Wayners took him into the educational of the Hoosier State. Professor Smart is, therefore, a tried man for the position to which he is called by the democracy of the State. He is a working member of the party and will receive its undivided support in the campaign.

Attorney General. Southern Indiana makes up in quality what she lacks in numbers on the ticket, the Hon. Clarence Buskirk being a staunch democrat and a young lawyer of decided talents in his profession, Mr. Buskirk is but thirty-one years old and has been in the practice of his profession at Princeton, Gibson county, where he now lives, for eight years past. Consequently he must have begun life for himself in the locality from which he now dates. He was born in Alleghany county, N. Y. and graduated in the law course at the State University of Michigan, an 1863. He was a member of the late legislature, and is conceded on all hands to be a good choice. He appears well on the platform, speaks with force and freedom, and will honor the ticket wherever he represents it in the canvass. Judge of Supreme Court. Judge Horace P. Biddle, the gentleman nominated yesterday for a seat on the Supreme branch, is not unknown in the history of Indiana. In proressional and public life he has been conspicuous for 40 years past. He was born in Ohio but his entire life since childhood has been spent in this state. He is now about 60 years old 35 of these years have been devoted to faithfull professional labor. From 1846 to 1852 he was judge of the Circuit Court of the Eighth judicial district, and again from 1860 to 1862 he occupied the same position, making 18 years in all of judicial service. On the occasion of his last election to the office, not a soitary vote was cast against him, showing an instance of an election to the judgeship in which party consideration were holly lost sight of in the merits of the man. In 1850 he was a member of the constitutional convention, and one of the hard workers in framing the organic law of the state which is to-day a monument to his honor. He was elected in 1857 to the same office for which he is now nominated, a supreme judge of the state. He did not, however, take his seat. There was a question as to the vacancy, and Gov. Willard decided that the incumbent was entitled to hold over, and decline to issue a commission to the judge elect. Judge Biddle is a man of letters and literary tastes. Perhaps more exclusively so than any other citizen of Indiana.

The Third Term Platform.

Since it is settled that Gen. Grant intends to run for the third term, it is time that the platform should be announced. It will be as follows:

1. Grant is to be re-elected as many times as he desires. Or if he should conclude to be President for life, that shall be arranged to suit him

2. His salary and perquisites to be doubled immediately after each four years.

3. Mileage to be allowed him at the rate of $5 per mile for all his journeys while President. A law to be passed compelling all railroads and steamboats transporting him free, and all hotels to entertain him without charge.

4. Every horse that can trot in 2:20 or under, to be his property without paying, as a token of public and private gratitude.

5. Lieut-Col. F. D. Grant to be General of the Army in place of W. T. Sherman dissatified.

6. The financial policy of the country to be settled on alternate principles of resumption and inflation, at the discretion of the President. Thus we shal move toward contraction and specie payments until the price of gold is brought low, and then we will have a burst of inflation until it is up again. By applying the one and the other of these measures with prudence, the President will be able in time to save something handsome as he ought.

7. In the new Cabinet, Babcook to be Secretary of State, Boss, Shepherd Secretary of the Treasury, Kellogg of Louisana Secretary of War, and W. H. Kemble Postmaster General Delano, Landaulet Williams, and Secor Robeson to remain as they are,

8. No more high offices to be regarded by being conf rred in return for paltry gifts of $1.000. The ready money rates paid in Nevada for places in the Senate to be adopted as the standard of value for these great honors of the Government. All receipts from such source to be the Personal property of the Chief Magistrate.

9. All newpapers that do not praise the President and his personal friends and relations to be instantly suppressed, and their editors, publishers, reporters, and correspondents to be imprisoned for life in the county jail of Washington city.

10. All such criminals to be brought to Washington for trial before a court appointed for the purpose by the President.

With a candidate so popular as Grant, and with such principles and policy honesty and frankly presented, there can be no doubt of the result.—He will be triumphantly re-elected, everybody will be happy, and the reform of the civil service will then commence —N. Y. Sun.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

On last Thuasdry Baltimore celebrated the opening of a new ship channel which will admit to her warves the large ships in the world, and this in connection with the extension of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad to the northwest is expected to give her a strong hold upon the commerce of the West. The Baltimone, Pittsburg & Chicago railroad, now under construction by the Baltimore & Ohio railrord company, will be the shortest line in the northwest from the seaboard. New York has been hitherto the objective point to Chicago on the Atlantic, but by this new line Baltimore will be one hundered and fifty two miles closer to Chicago than by the average distance of the exsisting lines used to New York. By the New York Central road from Chicago to New York it is 185 miles further than from Chicago to Baltimore; by the New York Erie, 166, and by the Pennsylvania road the distace is 104 miles greater to New York than by this new rout from Chicago to Baltimore.

The great line is in wonderfully sound financial condition. During the year the New York Central and New York & Erie have had a severe struggle to meet their current obligations. The Pennsylvania road obtaind from the Legislature last year authoity to increase its capital stock by 36,000,000 and paid divided in scrip. The Baltimore & Ohio railroad, in the same period, paid out of its own current and accumulated earnings a cash divided of ten per cent; expended 10,000,000 cashsin new rolling stock, bridges, steel tracks and new roads; reduced its indebterness, and added $2,800,000 to its surplus fund. Discarding fractions, its gross earnings in the year were $15 500,000; expences' $10,000,000; net earnings, 5,500,000. Of the year before the next earnings were $5,000,000. Despite the extraordinary expenitures, the company added 2,882,000 to its surpluse fund, which on the 1st of October, 1873, amounted to 29,034,404 The company enjoys a credit at home and abroad, superior to that of any other railroad company in the United States. It does business on the cash principle. It buys and builds with its own money.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE Register in the bankruptcy case of Jay Cooke & Co. is ready to pay 7 per cent., and will do so as soon as directed to pay by the court.... A Philadelphia dispatch states that another child, aged 4 years, was kidnapped July 23 by two men, one colored, who prevailed upon the little fellow to enter a wagon in which they were riding.... Pomeroy, the boy-murderer, has confessed that he murdered the boy Miller on the 22d of April last, describing in detail how the murder was committed.... An application for the appointment of a Receiver to the Erie Railway Company has been considered by the Attorney-General of New York, and he finds in it sufficient reasons for bringing a case into court. The allegations in regard to corruption and the wilful violation of law are rejected utterly; and the application will be based on the charge that the company has transcended its charter-powers. The specifications under this head relate to the making of illegal leases, especially in the case of the Atlantic and Great Western road, and to the division of a dividend out of capital stock.

PROF. DONALDSON and five journalists have made a balloon trip from New York up the Hudson river, landing several times, without accident.

The number of lives lost in the recent deluge at Pittsburgh, Pa., is over 200, and the estimated value of the property destroyed at about $5,000,000.

THREE men attacked a mining boss at the Jermyn mines, in Wilkesbarre, Pa., in the upper part of these coal fields, on the morning of July 29, and intended to murder him. One of them was killed. These men demanded work, and, on being refused, attacked the boss and fired ten shots at him in rapid succession, some of which took effect on his body. He fell to the ground, as they supposed, dead. The clerk in the mining store heard the firing and took a gun, ran to the door and fired upon the assassins as they started to run off, the ball taking effect in the head of one and killing him instantly.

The West.

A TERRIBLE tragedy was enacted at Bull City, a town on the Solomon river, in Osborne county, western Kansas, on the 17th of July. A merchant by the name of Chas. Cook, who has been out of his right mind for some time, thrust a knife through the brain of his infant child, and then seized a hatchet and struck himself several times in the forehead, penetrating the brain.... The Peoria (Ill.) base-ball clubs have arranged for a grand tournament in that city, beginning August 11 and continuing four days.... The grasshoppers have destroyed 1,500,000 bushels of wheat in Minnesota.

THE following call, directed to the Railroad Commissioners, of Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota has been issued from the office of the Illinois Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners:

SIR: Upon consideration by this Board of the informal correspondence had with the several Railroad Commissioners of the Northwestern States concerning a proposed joint conference, it has been decided by this Commission to call a convention at Dubuque, Iowa, Aug. 12, next, at 1 o'clock p. m., at the Julian House. Your participation therein is respectfully requested. I am, very respectfully, yours, JOHN PEARSON, Chairman.

.... An organization called the Citizens' Association has been formed in Chicago, "to promote the general welfare of the city." It is an outgrowth of the feeling created by the last great fire.... John T. Carlisle suffered death by hanging at Marshall, Mo., July 24, for the murder of George Micker, two years ago.... A terrible tornado visited Milwaukee on the 26th of July, causing considerable damage to houses, trees, fences, circus tents, etc. .... A boat was capsized on the Wabash river, near Grand Chain, Ind., on the 22d of July, and six out of fifteen men drowned.

A DISTRESSING accident befell the town of Eureka, Nevada, on the 24th of July. A rain cloud burst on the mountain just above the town, releasing an immense volume of water, which rushed down the canon in which the city is situated, sweeping all before it. Some thirty houses, mostly of the poorer class, were swept away, and twenty or thirty persons drowned.... On the 26th of June another lamentable and probably fatal accident occurred in the coal mine of the McLean County Coal Company in Bloomington, Ill. John Arbuckle, a coal miner, while working in a room in the pit, was crushed beneath a mass of roof rock, and received injuries from which he will probably die. A man named John Reynolds, who rushed to his assistance was also crushed, but will probably recover.

THE most diabolical and cunningly plotted attempt to commit arson ever brought to the light in Chicago was discovered recently in a two-story frame, owned and occupied by Nicholas Staaden, a hardware dealer at No. 219 North Clark street. The premises were soaked with kerosene, and a train laid to three kegs of powder. The alarm of fire was given and the designs of the criminal frustrated. There was an insurance of $18,000 on $6,000 worth of property, which is supposed to be the cause which led to the attempted arson. .... Judge Williams, of Chicago, has decided that the sons of Stephen A. Douglas are entitled to $100,000 each, as their share in certain Chicago property, and that Daniel Rhodes, Thomas S. Dobbin, and Richard Gregg, executors of the Senator's will, must make the amount good.

THE fire-fiend, Nicholas Staaden, who attempted to blow up his store in Chicago, in order to get an enormous amount of insurance, has been held in $14,000 bail, in default of which he has been committed to jail. .... Dr. Earll, the notorious abortionist, is on trial for his life in Chicago, for the murder of Rosetta Jackson.... There were eight cases—all fatal—of sunstroke in St. Louis on the 28th of July.

THE Chicago fire-bug, N. Staaden, was indicted by the grand jury of the Criminal Court of Cook county, Ill., on the 29th of July.... Mrs. Clem, of Indianapolis, Ind., is going to remodel her house and live in fine style.

THE Hon. N. B. Bradley, M. C., from the Saginaw (Mich.) district, presided over a meeting of representatives of lumber and salt interests and all opposed to the pending reciprocity treaty, on the 29th of July, at East Saginaw.

A DUPLICATION of the celebrated Swing case, which disturbed Chicago society, is on the carpet in Indianapolis, except that it is the Methodist Episcopal Church that is to be torn up in this case, instead of the Presbyterian. The accused is T. A. Goodwin, of Indianapolis, a graduate of Asbury University.

The South.

THE first bale of the new cotton crop of Texas was received at Galveston July 25, from Mrs. M. Hainsmann, of Meyersville, Dewitt county; 442 pounds; class, low middlings; sold at 27 cents.

Washington.

A WASHINGTON special says: "Atty.-Gen. Williams had a conference with Secretary Belknap concerning the alleged troubles in Vicksburg. The Attorney-General is of opinion that the Acting Governor, Davis, is unnecessarily alarmed, and that there is no real cause for anticipating violence.".... The Secretary of the Treasury has decided that when extensive repairs are made to a steamer, or an old boiler or old machinery is repaired, a reinspection must be made, and new certificate issued based on such inspection.... A large number of bids for the new loan have been received at the Treasury Department. Several prominent bankers of New York and Boston were in the city and desired to be present, claiming that the opening of the bids should be public, but their request was denied. First bids to the amount of $75,000,000 have been received, but it is believed if the Secretary disposes of $50,000,000 at home, he will be doing well; German, French and Holland investors stand ready to take the balance.

SECRETARY BRISTOW has succeeded in placing the new five per cent. loan through the American agents of the Rothschilds and J. and W. Seligman & Co. These parties made an absolute subscription for $45,000,000, coupled with the option of taking the remainder of the loan at any time within six months. The loan is taken at par, to be paid in coin or 5-20 bonds, the parties to receive one-quarter of one per cent. commission.... The Evening Star prints a very thin story relative to the existence of a race of albinos in New Mexico, somewhere south of Santa Fe. The story has been told before, but so little credence was attached to it that no one ever thought to explore the region in search of the phenomenal creatures.

SECRETARY BRISTOW, in his negotiation of the new five-per-cent. loan, has taken measures to prevent the lapse of interest on the exchange of bonds, by which the syndicate has heretofore reaped so large a profit.... Four hundred and seventy-five thousand five hundred dollars in national bank currency was received at the Treasury on the 29th of July, for redemption, making the total receipts $9,359,099.... The National Grange has compiled statistics showing the strength of the granges in the various States. It is estimated that the aggregate number of granges is not much less than 20,000. On the 1st day of June, Iowa had the largest number being 1,994; Indiana had 1,968; Missouri, 1,929; Kansas, 1,321; Illinois, 1,481, and Kentucky 1,101. The Cotton and Gulf States alone had 4,065 granges. There are now granges in all the States, and about 30 in the Canadas.

General.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "Fred Douglass, in his paper, complains of outrages against the negroes in the Southern States. He suggests, as a complete remedy for those oppressed in States having Democratic majorities, emigration. He advises the colored people to leave those States in which they are a minority, and go into those States where they have a majority. He also takes up the case of Cadet Smith, and says: 'Cadet Smith, who was the pioneer colored cadet at West Point, was in the city last week. His dismissal from West Point is a disgrace to the nation. Had he been allowed to enter the fourth class, he would have become a cadet officer, and white cadets would, of necessity, have become his subordinates. Hence he was found deficient in philosophy. We shall recur to this case again.'"

A BOTTLE has been picked up on the Florida coast containing the following message:

STEAMSHIP CITY OF BOSTON.—To all whom this message may come: That I, the undersigned, a passenger on this ship, write the following statement: On Sunday night a heavy storm arose.

12:30—Increasing.
1:30—All hopes lost.
2 o'clock—Going do—

The Morning Post asserts that Germany will propose in the Brussels Congress a recognition of the present Government of Spain.

Beecher-Tilton.

NEW YORK, July 23.—Mrs. Tilton has also prepared a statement concerning the case in which she denies utterly all the criminal allegations made in the affidavit of her husband. She charges that Tilton's hatred and jealousy of Beecher have led him to concoct and put forth his accusations. The document proceeds:

"The implication that the harmony of home was unbroken till Mr. Beecher entered it as a frequent guest and friend is a lamentable satire upon a household where he himself years before laid the corner-stone of free-love, and desecrated its altars up to the time of my departure; so that the atmosphere was not only godless, but impure for my children. And in this effort and throe of agony I would fain lift my daughter's and all womanhood from insidious and diabolical teachings of these latter days. His frequent efforts to prove me insane, weak-minded, insignificant, of mean presence—all rank in the category of heartlessness, selfishness and falsehood, having its climax in his present endeavor to convince the world that I am, or ever have been, unable to distinguish between an innocent or a guilty love.

"In summing up the whole matter, I affirm myself before God to be innocent of the crimes laid upon me: that never have I been guilty of adultery with Henry Ward Beecher in thought or deed; nor has he ever offered to me an indecorous or improper proposal. To the further charge that I was led away from my home by Mr. Beecher's friends, and by advice of a lawyer whom Mr. Beecher had sent to me, and who in advance of my appearing before the Committee, arranged with me the questions and answers which were to constitute my testimony in Mr. Beecher's behalf, I answer that this is again untrue, having never seen the lawyer until introduced to him a few moments before the arrival of the Committee, by my step-father, Judge Morse."

NEW YORK, July 24.—In an interview with a reporter to-day, Mr. Tilton said the Committee had made a grave blunder in inquiring into the standing of his female acquaintances, as it gave him a right to institute a similar investigation concerning Mr. Beecher. He deprecated such a plan of action, but, if it was forced upon him by the counsel of the Committee, he could draw a sword with two edges to their one. Tilton says he gave to the Committee the names of several persons to whom Beecher has confessed his crime, and that he asked that they should be summoned for examination.

Beecher remained in his residence, and saw no visitors. Gen. Tracy called on him in the morning and in the evening, and says that he was jovial and in good spirits, and at work on his testimony. He will testify before the committee very soon, and Mrs. Tilton is to testify again at length. Then Moulton is to be called on. There is a prospect of reaching an end by next week, when all the testimony that has been taken will be made public, with the verdict of the committee.

NEW YORK, July 26.—The Tribune this morning furnishes the cross-examination of Mr. Tilton. It makes ten columns in that paper, and was given to it by the committee, because untrue reports concerning Mr. Tilton's testimony had been printed. The testimony essentially corroborates Tilton's statement. The counsel endeavored to get from him an admission that he had declared his wife to be pure after her alleged wrong-doing; but Tilton affirmed that he had never so said. After he had forgiven her he sought, in speaking about her, to give her a good character by a "strange, technical use of words," but was careful not to say she was "pure."

It is said that Mr. Moulton will not offer any testimony whatever. His reason is said to be that, having received all his information in confidence, he will not divulge it unless compelled to do so in a court of law.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The Brooklyn Argus publishes a card from Mr. Tilton wherein he states that the committee, in their published report of his examination, have omitted one most important item which he related with his utmost plainness of speech, namely, "the criminality which my sworn statement charged upon Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and his religious victim, was confessed to me not only by herself, but by Mr. Beecher. Furthermore, that it was confessed by her and him to Mr. Moulton, as the friend and counselor of both. And still further, that Mr. Moulton's office as mediator for four years between Mr. Beecher and me, was based on the one side fact of this pre-existing criminality between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton."

There are rumors that the case will certainly go to the courts, and that, whatever the result, Mr. Beecher will vacate Plymouth Church pulpit.

TILTON ARRESTED FOR LIBEL.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Theodore Tilton was arrested on two criminal charges of libeling Henry Ward Beecher, and brought before Justice Reiley, of Brooklyn, at 6 o'clock this afternoon. He was seated in his parlor when arrested, and treated the matter with the utmost composure. His bail was fixed at $2,500, but upon giving his word of honor that he would appear at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, with bondsmen, he was allowed to go till that time on his recognizance. The prosecution is based upon his recent statement arraigning Mr. Beecher. He was arrested at the instance of William J. Gaynor, recently from Boston, where he had a law office. He is now a member of the Brooklyn Argus staff. Gaynor says his only object in causing the arrest is to bring out all the facts, and it does not appear that he acted at the instigation of either of the parties to the case. Great excitement prevails in Brooklyn, and the matter is discussed in all the leading New York hotels.

The Brooklyn Union says: "Not half the evidence has yet been received by the committee. Moulton will be invited to testify before Mr. Beecher, whose statement will be reserved until the last moment. Mrs. Tilton will be again called, and possibly Tilton."

NEW YORK, July 29.—The Brooklyn Eagle says: "We are informed and authorized to announce that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher has very recently written a letter to Frank Moulton, in which Mr. Beecher earnestly asks and adjures Mr. Moulton to go before the committee and exhibit all he has, and tell all he knows with reference to 'the matters and controversy between Theodore Tilton and Henry Ward Beecher.' This letter is declared to be long, explicit, earnest, unmistakable, and to the effect that Mr. Beecher has no wish and Mr. Moulton no alternative but for the latter to go before the committee, fully and frankly to say all he can say forthwith. This earnest letter of request from Mr. Beecher, coming in with the request of the committee itself, will reach, or has reached, Mr. Moulton at Narragansett Park, where he has been with his wife."

Gen. Tracy said to-day the committee would end the whole thing this week. Mr. Moulton, Mr. Beecher and one or two minor witnesses were all there were to be examined.

The Sun of this morning says: "We are authorized to state that Mr. Beecher's full answer will probably be made as soon as the allegations and testimony against him shall all have been put in."

TERRIBLE RAIN-STORM.

The Vicinity of Allegheny City and Pittsburgh the Scene of an Awful Flood—The Damage to Property Estimated at $150,000—Loss of Life Set Down at 150.

A Pittsburgh, Pa., dispatch of July 27 says: The rain-storm which visited this city yesterday and last night was the heaviest known to the oldest inhabitants, and the result the most disastrous in the history of this city. The storm of the morning only inflicted some damage on the sewers and individual property; but at about 9 o'clock the windows of the heavens were opened and the deluge was fearful. Solid masses of water flung themselves in angry volume upon every square foot of the town and country, the thunder and lightning were terrific, and the death-cry of scores of victims rose upon the air from a dozen submerged localities. The exact course of the cyclone as yet is not precisely known, but seems to be a semi-circle, embracing the northern, western and southwestern parts of our city in its arc, leaving the main portion of the city unharmed. In Allegheny the calamity is utterly appalling, not only in the loss of property, but in lives of human beings.

The great fire, so recent within its borders, was nothing compared to this disaster. People in the vicinity where the greatest destruction occurred say they could get out of the reach of the fire, but the water overwhelmed them and put life in as great jeopardy as property. In all parts of the city more or less damage was done; but great loss occurred in the bottom districts, where the torrents swept from the hills. In these the greatest distress prevailed. Families in the peace and quiet of the Sabbath evening, were compelled to their uttermost exertion to save their lives. The devastation along the line of Butcher's and Sawmill run was almost beyond description. The work of destruction commenced at a point about two miles north of Ohio street. The valley proper commences at a point just above the line of North avenue, where Spring Garden run and Butcher's run unite and flow into an immense sewer leading into Allegheny river. Butchers' run valley, at its mouth, is probably between 400 and 500 feet wide, and at the point where the work of destruction commenced it is not more than 150 feet wide. Between North avenue and this northerly point numerous ravines empty into Butchers' run valley. Along this route houses were built directly over the natural water course to the river, and involved an immense number of houses that were not on the line of the culverts. When the rain commenced falling but little apprehension was entertained; but those who lived near the head of the valley state that suddenly it seemed as if the heavens were literally opened, and the immense volume of water came down as if discharged from an immense pipe. The volume was so large that the narrow valley was filled with the raging torrent. The force of the water was irresistible. The frame dwellings, stables and slaughter houses gave way like pipe-stems, and the debris from the wreck was swept down along the plank-road, their weight being augmented every moment. In the district lying west of Chestnut street and north of a line parallel with North avenue, the water rose to a height of fully 20 feet. In some places the occupants of dwellings were unable to escape in time to save their lives, and in many instances the force of the water rent the structures into splinters. The storm continued until about half-past 10 o'clock, and from various localities the loss of life to-night is set down at 160, distributed as follows among the different localities: Butcher's Run—Found, 74; missing, 76. Wood's Run—Found, 5; missing, 5.—Castle Shannon railroad—Found, 10; missing, none. Ohio river—Found, 4; missing, none. Soho—Found, 1; missing, none. Chartier's creek—Found, 14; missing, 3. Bridgeville to Washington county—Found, 24; missing, 3.

The brief telegraphic announcements on Monday morning, of heavy rains in and about Pittsburgh gave no intimation of the frightful disaster which is reported above. Pittsburgh is situated at the confluence of the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers, with steep hills all about it. Allegheny City is on the opposite shore of the Allegheny river, to the northwest of the city. The hill-sides are intersected at irregular intervals with runs or gulches, which form natural channels for any large waterfall from above. The heavy rains of Sunday night filled these gulches, and the water swept down the hills with resistless impetuosity, carrying death and desolation in its course. The area over which this flood is said to have extended is described as from 20 to 25 miles in diameter, and astonishment is expressed that the torrent did not sweep down over the entire city. As it was, the damage done was confined mainly to the less attractive suburbs of Pittsburgh and Allegheny City, including Temperanceville and one or two other neighboring boroughs. The devastated district was filled up with slaughter-houses, small manufacturing establishments, and the homes of the working classes. The value of the property destroyed is not, therefore, so great as if the flood had reached other and richer sections of the city. But this is insignificant as compared to the loss of life. More than 100 bodies have already been recovered; it is known that nearly 150 lives have been lost; and it is believed with good reason that 200 men, women and children have perished.

The Pittsburgh horror is one of a class over which we can only mourn. It seems to belong to the category of catastrophes which are called unavoidable. When such a storm comes suddenly upon a city, as did this, and nature provides the channels for a free passage on its way of destruction, there is nothing to be said that will atone for the sufferings it brought with it, not even in the way of pointing out protection for the future. The flood carried everything before it. Its force was as great, sudden and impetuous as that of the Mill River Reservoir when it broke away from its barriers. There was no running away from it. It washed away iron bridges, picked up houses and set them down in new places, tore up stones in the street to assist in the work of destruction, and even overturned stone walls which vainly endeavored to impede its angry progress. Strong men were helpless as children, and women died from fright. People who had gone to church returned to find their homes swept away, and might have gone back to church to thank God they had left those homes in time to save their lives. The scenes and incidents related of this great trial have all the varied and terrible interest of great struggles for life, and, in reading the accounts that come to us, we can only rejoice that the city of Pittsburgh escaped.

In Cincinnati the storm was not so severe, though the railway trains have been behind time, the roads being damaged by the flood.

Throughout the West—Michigan and Wisconsin in particular—the storm made fearful havoc of grain, shade-trees, houses, barns, vineyards, etc.; also putting out the forest fires which have been raging some time in these States.

THE PENNSYLVANIA FLOOD.

[Special to the Chicago Tribune, July 28.]

The scenes presented at the ruins and debris of Sunday night's flood are utterly indescribable. I do not believe that the worst of the loss of life has yet been told. The ruins present a scene of devastation unparalleled. A storm like that of the fatal Sunday night was never before known. The Mill river disaster dwindles in comparison with this one. For two days and nights I have been over the ruins, yet I cannot realize the fearful extent of this last calamity. It seems as though there was no end to the ruin. The mind cannot picture anything so utterly heartrending as this scene presents. Yet withal there is no realization by the people generally of the loss, neither is there much sympathy expressed for the afflicted. Whole families were buried to-day. The sight was one of sadness—funerals all the afternoon, bells tolling, and children who had lost their parents weeping, while parents who had lost children mourned and would not be comforted. There were not enough hearses, and open wagons carried many bodies to their last resting place, while in some instances there was no minister to officiate. Now and then some unrecognized corpse was hurried off to the Potter's field, neither friend nor relative following to the grave. The Catholic Church took care of its own dead. Crowds gathered around the churches and undertakers' shops, but they were curiosity-seekers, nothing more. Twelve more bodies were recovered to-day—six in Allegheny, two at Wood's run, two at Saw-Mill run, one in the Allegheny river, in this city, and a body in the Ohio. Two little children were rescued from the ruins alive. One, a little boy, was found in a pile of rubbish on East street, nearly exhausted, life just being discoverable. He was taken by a lady and cared for. The other was a little girl, found in the attic of a house on the same street, and was brought out. Though much emaciated and nearly dead, it is thought that these children will survive. The militia are on duty in the flooded district, under Gen. Pearson, and, in conjunction with the police, guards have been placed across the streets, and gangs of laborers are at work clearing up the debris and searching for dead bodies. The Board of Health and Mayor Fleming are at work with ax and pick, like other laborers. This afternoon the citizens in this city held a meeting, when some $1,500 was subscribed. The suffering among the victims will be great and it seems as though other cities will have to be appealed to for aid. All is still confusion, and business is virtually suspended. From the surrounding country the reports keep coming in as to the damage done by the floods, which increase in their estimates of the loss of life. The Chartiers creek for its whole length has not a bridge left across it, and the crops in the valley have been washed away. In some instances 10 feet of dirt and driftwood has been covered over the land in this vicinity. In many places the lots, as well as the houses, were literally washed away, and the street lines entirely obliterated.

A dispatch to the Chicago Times of July 30 says: "The work of digging among the debris of Butchers' run for the bodies of Sunday night's victims still continues. A warm sun shines to-day, dispelling much of the gloom that has surrounded the place since the hour of the disaster. The dead animals are being removed rapidly, and in consequence the danger of a pestilence is being hourly diminished. Some nine bodies were taken out at Butcher's run to-day, and the list as footed up to-night shows the number of bodies recovered to be 102. There is but little chance of any additional bodies being found in the Saw-Mill run district. It is probable that the remaining missing ones were carried into the Ohio river. Some of the bodies will be buried without identification. A child was found this morning in a cradle floating in the Ohio river, at the head of Montgomery Island, 32 miles below this city. It was recovered by Joseph Allen, a river pilot, near the head of the island, and, to the surprise of everybody, was alive and kicking."

The Pittsburgh Chronicle of the 29th says, editorially, that one of the most remarkable circumstances connected with the great flood disaster is the fact that no list of injured appears. The list, as published, reads almost invariably dead and missing. In the terrible rushing torrent which swept down the numerous runs, there was no middle ground, and for those who came in its course there was only one choice, "sink or swim." Unlike a railroad accident, the flood leaves no list of maimed and wounded, and along its raging pathway the only issue is life and death.

A Ducal Sportsman.

A correspondent of the Boston Post says: "The leading amateur coachman of the present day is the jovial and handsome Duke of Beaufort, who is, indeed, in every respect the reigning prince of British sportsmanship. It is to this quality he owes the distinction of the Garter and a popularity such as rivals that of statesmen and generals. The Duke keeps the most hospitable of open houses at Badminton, his noble country-seat, and I suppose has several tolerable fortunes in horses and vehicles. He is the happy possessor of the finest coach in England, and he does not disdain to show it off by himself handling the ribbons of his famous four-in-hand. I believe he has won the Derby at least thrice and the Chester Cup, the Doncaster, and the Oaks I know not how many times. Let me add that there is not a more genial, easy-going, fine-spirited person in the whole range of aristocracy; his fine jovial face is a treat to look upon. And he has brought up a family of children who inherit his sportsmanlike tastes and sunny temperament. Last year one of his daughters accompanied him in the saddle from London to Epsom to see the Derby, and this young lady, who was but seventeen, performed the journey of more than twenty miles in about two hours. His eldest son, the Marquis of Worcester, who has recently came of age, is praised on all hands as one of the most promising sportsmen in England, and has won a special renown for handling the 'four-in-hand' in a manner which one of the papers says 'nearly approaches perfection.'"

Sad Fate of a Nevada Inventor.

A gentleman who has just arrived from the borax field of the desert regions surrounding the town of Columbus, in the eastern part of the State, gives us the following account of the sad fate of Mr. Jonathan Newhouse, a man of considerable inventive genius: Mr. Newhouse had constructed what he called a "solar armor," an apparatus intended to protect the wearer from the fierce heat of the sun in crossing deserts and burning alkali plains. The armor consisted of a long, close-fitting jacket made of common sponge, and a cap or hood of the same material; both jacket and hood being about an inch in thickness. Before starting across a desert this armor was to be saturated with water. Under the right arm was suspended an India-rubber sack filled with water and h[illegible] small gutta-percha tube leading [illegible] top of the hood. In order to keep the armor moist, all that was necessary to be done by the traveler, as he progressed over the burning sands, was to press the sack occasionally, when a small quantity of water would be forced up and thoroughly saturate the hood and the jacket below it. Thus, by [illegible]vaporation of the moisture in the armor, it was calculated might be produced almost any degree of cold. Mr. Newhouse went down to Death valley, determined to try the experiment of crossing that terrible place in his armor. He started out into the valley one morning from the camp nearest its borders, telling the men at the camp, as they laced his armor on his back, that he would return in two days. The next day an Indian, who could speak but a few words of English, came to the camp in a great state of excitement. He made the men understand that he wanted them to follow him. At the distance of about twenty miles out into the desert the Indian pointed to a human figure seated against a rock. Approaching they found it to be Newhouse still in his armor. He was dead and frozen stiff. His beard was covered with frost, and—though the noonday sun poured down its fiercest rays—an icicle over a foot in length hung from his nose. There he had perished miserably, because his armor had worked but too well, and because it was laced up behind where he could not reach the fastenings.—Virginia City Enterprise.

Blown to Atoms.

The terrible effects of the explosion of six cans of nitro-glycerine (150 pounds) near Parker's Landing, Pa., by which a young man named Osborn was blown to atoms, are thus described: "Osborn started from Emlenton to Petrolia, where he was to fill several orders. When he reached Parker it was too dark to proceed further with any degree of safety, and he was persuaded by a relative to remain over night. He was called early in the morning, and obtaining a horse and buckboard, started from Parker over the roughest road that was possible, although it is conjectured he went that way to make time, as it is the nearest route. He had crossed Bear creek and was over a hundred feet up the slope of the hill when the explosion occurred. Osborn's body was terribly mangled. The head and body, from above the hips, and portions of the arms were thrown over 300 feet from the scene. Entrails, parts of clothing and debris could be seen hanging in the tops of the trees though they were over 100 feet high. The head and portions of the stomach were found in Bear creek, over 100 feet distant. The right hand was found over half a mile away, and in a radius of a mile numerous other portions were found, but it would be utterly impossible to distinguish them from portions of the horse, whose body was scattered in all directions by the terrific concussion. The shoes were torn from the horse's feet, which may be termed the most singular incident of the disaster. The rear of the buckboard and parts of the structure were found scattered over hill and ravines, and could not be distinguished except by a previous knowledge of what it was. The trees were stripped of foliage for rods around, many of them being barked. The excavation of the road caused by the explosion was four to five feet deep, and most of it was from solid rock.

Thin Teachers.

Teachers ought to be persons full of information. They ought to be persons of broad culture. The teacher who simply knows his text-books, is always a thin teacher. He never will inspire his pupils with a desire for anything beyond the book answers.

"The children are not very far advanced in the district where I am going to teach, and I am sure I can teach the school if you will only give me a certificate." "Can't you excuse me from being examined in that branch? There will be no class in it in the school I have engaged," are statements familiar to examiners.

The teachers who use these words belong to a large class of persons who think that "anybody can teach children."

Never was there a more fatal mistake. No person can teach the elements of a subject well who does not have a comprehensive knowledge of that subject. And no other grade of pupils is so difficult to teach well as in the primary. Small children do not know how to study, and they learn but little the first years of their school life, except by the assistance and careful direction of the teacher; when they become older they can learn in spite of the teacher.—Indiana School Journal.

Intemperance.

Chief of Police Savage, of Boston, who has kept a record of the cases of drunkenness and the crime attributable to intemperance in that city for several years, says that during those years they have had at one time free rum, at another a license law, at another a prohibitory law badly enforced, and yet again for a time a prohibitory law vigorously enforced; and yet there is no variation in his statistics furnishing the least indication of when one policy prevailed and when another.

IT is reported on good authority that on the last pennies coined at the British mint the head of the Queen really resembles her.

FARM AND HOME.

Practical Suggestions.

IF a little lime is dissolved in the water applied to the soil, nearly every species of worm that is found will be killed, and the plants not injured. Tobacco will also destroy most kinds of worms; but lime is preferable, because it aids in dissolving the plant-food in the soil, thereby stimulating growth. Watering the plants with lime-water, once a week, will be sufficient to kill the worms in the soil and stimulate growth.

BEETS may be transplanted successfully. The proper time to transplant is when the root is an inch or more in diameter, which will be in this month or next. The tap-root should be cut off and the leaves at the top. This will insure growth. The leaves, if left upon the root, would draw all the moisture from it, and the plant would die. When the leaves are cut off half an inch above the crown the evaporation cannot take place, and the growth of root and new leaves is simultaneous.

A NEATLY-KEPT cellar is a pretty good guarantee of health of the family whose members are breathing the air from it day and night. Everybody believes in having pure air to breathe; but we are sorry to tell the truth, that thousands are breathing impure air on account of foul cellars. What are the essentials of a good cellar? It must be dry; it must have stone walls outside and division walls of either stone or brick; the floor of cement, upon a foundation of cobble stones previously imbedded into the earth by means of a heavy maul, handled by two men; plastered ceiling and walls; complete ventilation by means of large windows. If these points are secured, the cellar becomes the most important room in the house.

THE simplest and surest remedy for scours in a sucking colt is to give the dam an ounce of prepared chalk once a day in her feed. If the colt can be made to drink, half a pint of rice water sweetened with crushed sugar may be given to it. The rice water is made by boiling a teaspoonful of rice in a pint of water until it has become reduced one-half. It should be given warm. If the colt will not take it, four times the quantity should be given to the dam once a day with the chalk. Possibly the colt may be induced to eat some boiled rice sweetened or salted; if so, that would be useful; or it may be induced to lick some chalk mixed with sugar or salt. Any of these methods may be tried with probable success.

MR. POTTER WARREN, of New Hampshire, at a recent agricultural convention, gave the following easy and cheap method of reducing bones. If the farmer will set aside a cask, in some convenient place, for the reception of bones, and throw all that are found on the farm into it, he will be likely to find a collection at the end of the year that will prove a valuable adjunct to his manure heap. Place them in a large kettle, mixed with ashes, and about one peck of lime to the barrel of bones. Cover with water and boil. In twenty-four hours all the bones, with the exception, perhaps, of the hard shin-bones, will become so much softened as to be easily pulverized by hand. They will not be in particles of bone, but in a pasty condition, and in excellent form to mix with muck, loam, or ashes. By boiling the shin-bones ten or twelve hours longer, they will also become soft.

A CORRESPONDENT at Mulberry Grove sends us what he recommends as the best cure for hog cholera known. The recipe was first published in the Prairie Farmer some years since. The quantity given is sufficient for 100 hogs, and is mixed with slop enough for a few doses, say a pint of the slop to the hog each time. This is the recipe: Take of sulphur two pounds; black antimony, one-half pound; arsenic, two ounces. Our correspondent says he has tried the above on a lot of fifty hogs, and cured all that were able to walk to the trough to eat the slop. Prof. J. B. Turner also published the following preventive in the same paper in 1864, which our correspondent says he has seen used with perfect satisfaction: "One peck wood ashes, four pounds salt, one pound each of black antimony, copperas and sulphur, one-fourth pound saltpeter. Pulverize and mix, moisten, and put in a trough under a shed where the hogs can have free access to it."—Greenville (Ill.) Advocate.

THE North British Agriculturist, in an article on vermin on cattle, gives some suggestions as how to treat the pest. It would take time by the foretop, and on the slightest indication of their presence, make a prompt examination, and if lice are detected apply a remedy. It is senseless, it says, to wait until the unfortunate wretch has removed the hair from his own skin and spread his tormentors among his fellows. The pediculi or lice, of which every animal has its own peculiar species, are not difficult to kill. A good scrubbing with soft soap and water will remove them. Linseed, or any other oil, prevents their migrating and destroys them; but the efficacy of the oil is increased when to every pint is added an ounce of impure carbolic acid, or of Burnett's zinc chloride solution. Decoctions of tobacco, and stavesacre also poison the vermin, an ounce to the pint of water being generally used. Where the animals have been much infested, a second dressing should take place about a week after the first, and brushing, cleanliness, and usually a more liberal dietry, also enjoyed.

Useful Recipes.

BROILED SWEETBREADS.—The best way to cook sweetbreads is to broil them thus: Parboil them and then put them on a clean gridiron for broiling; when delicately browned take them off and roll in melted butter in a plate to prevent their being dry and hard. Some cook them on a griddle, well buttered, turning frequently; and some put narrow strips of fat salt pork on them while cooking.

LEMON PIE.—The grated rind of one lemon, yolks of three eggs, one spoonful melted butter, one cup sugar, three fourths cup of water, one-fourth cup of corn starch; mix together, put in the crust and bake until done. Beat the whites of the three eggs to a still froth, put in about three teaspoons of sugar, spread it on the top and bake to a light brown.

WAFFLES.—Beat well the yolks of four eggs; add 2½ pints of sweet milk and ½ a teaspoonful of salt; add enough sifted flour to make rather a stiff batter; beat the whites of the eggs very stiff, and stir in lightly the last thing before baking; bake in waffle irons; serve hot and eat with butter and sirup. If but two eggs are used add one heaping teaspoon of baking powder to the flour.

FLOUR CHOCOLATE.—Put one teacup of flour in a small iron kettle and set it over the fire to scorch; stir it constantly to keep it from burning on to the sides of the kettle. When the flour is of a dark brown color, pour boiling water over it, say two quarts or more, if the drink should be more desirable to be thin. Let the whole boil up for a few moments. Add one pint of sweet milk, and sugar to suit the taste. Use for drink the same as coffee.

BEAN SOUP.—Is a dish that many people, and especially children, would relish if properly made. It requires about half a pint of cooked beans for a quart of soup. Mash and boil until well diffused in the water, and then run through a cullender to take out the skins. Thicken with about a gill of wheat meal, and add a sprig of thyme if desired. Boil five minutes, and salt to the taste. The wheat meal makes it much richer than a thickening of fine flour.

APPLE JELLY.—Soak one quart of apples in four quarts of water, over night, boil until the apples are soft, strain the water off carefully, and to one quart of juice add a quart of sugar and boil until it jells. If the apples are nice, you may sweeten them and they will do very well for sauce, especially if you have a little lemon to put in them. But you can use apples for this that are not fit for the table. In looking over dried apples to stew, throw all that are not first-class into a dish by themselves for jelly.

WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE.—A correspondent of The Garden gives a recipe for this popular sauce. He says: "I do not offer it as Lea & Perrin's, but I do say that it is equal, if not superior, to it, in my opinion. It is not a recipe copied out of a book, but one I have known for a long time. Half a pound shallots; 1 oz. pimento, powdered; ¼ oz. mace, powdered; ¼ oz. cayenne; ½ nutmeg, powdered; ½ lb anchovy fish; 1 oz. salt; 3 pints vinegar; 6 oz. soy; chop or bruise the shallots, beat up the anchovy fish; mix all together; let it stand for a month or two, and, lastly, strain through a coarse sieve."

The New Pension Law.

A soldier asks that we publish the new Pension law passed at the last session of Congress. As we find it in a Washington paper it is as follows:

An act approved June 18, 1874, entitled "An act to increase the pension of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled," provided: That section four of the act entitled "An act to raise, consolidate and amend the laws relating to pensions," and approved March 3, 1873, be so amended that all persons who, while in the military or naval services of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have been so permanently and totally disabled as to require the regular presence, aid and attendance of another person, by the loss of the sight of both eyes, or by the loss of the sight of one eye, the sight of the other having been previously lost, or by the loss of both hands, or by any other injury resulting in total or permanent helplessness, shall be entitled to a pension of fifty dollars per month, and this shall be in lieu of a pension of thirty-one dollars and twenty-five cents per month, granted to such persons by the said section. Provided, That the increase of pension shall not be granted by means of any of the injuries herein specified, unless the same shall have resulted in permanent, total helplessness, requiring the regular personal aid and attendance of another person.

SECTION 2. That this act shall take effect from and after the 4th of June, 1874.

A person entitled to the benefit of this act will be required to file a formal declaration setting forth the degree of the disability from which he is suffering, and stating the extent to which he requires the person laid and attendance of another person. The declaration should be accompanied by the testimony of two credible witnesses to the extent to which the claimant requires the personal aid and attendance of another person. In the case of an insane person, the declaration should be made by the guardian, and medical evidence of the claimant's mental and physical condition should be furnished, to show whether he requires the regular personal aid and attendance of another person. The application should be accompanied by the person's certificate.—Des Moines Register.

Blue Sky and White Clouds.

The ethereal blue color of the sky is due to minute particles of matter which float in the air. Were these particles removed the appearance of the sky would be dead black. It is a fact in optics that exceedingly fine portions of matter disperse or scatter the blue rays of light, coarser portions scatter red rays, still coarser portions scatter all the rays, making white light. An atmosphere is full of aqueous vapor, the particles of which diffuse white light in all directions. When these particles are enlarged they become visible in the form of clouds. The vapor particles of the white clouds are supposed to be finer and lighter than those of the dark clouds. That the diffusion of light in our atmosphere, the blue coloring of the sky and the color of the clouds are due to the presence of matter floating in the air, has been conclusively proven by Tyndall. On passing a beam of sunlight through a glass tube the beam is rendered brilliantly visible by the reflection of light from the dust particles floating in the air contained in the tube. But on removing the dust particles, which is done by filtering the air by cotton wool, or causing the air to pass over a flame, the beam of light is no longer visible in the tube.

THE sting of a reproach is the truth of it.

A Night Balloon Voyage.

The San Francisco Call of the 9th says: "M. Etienne Buislay and his son returned from their balloon trip yesterday, both of them highly elated with the success of their voyage. The description given by M. Buislay of his experiences is interesting. Immediately upon leaving Woodward's Gardens, preparations were made to light up the fireworks. As a precaution against accident, a platform had been rigged over the iron ring to which the cords are attached, and the only passage through this from the car was an aperture resembling the lubber's hole of a ship's tops. The son of M. Buislay took his station on this platform, and held himself ready to climb into the netting should any of the sparks from the pyrotechnical display alight on the cotton envelope and threaten a fire. Beneath the platform M. Buislay grouped around the large car, which formerly belonged to Capt. Barber's exploded Le Secours and with the requisite amount of care set off the brilliant-colored lights which formed part of the illumination. When it came to the turn of the spread-eagle, measuring ten feet from tip to tip of the wings, it was found that the fuse would not ignite, and all thought of lighting up the eagle was abandoned. One of the bengolas, however, accidently set the eagle in a blaze and M. Buislay was not a little disconcerted by the occurrence. The eagle at that time was only twelve feet below the car, and it was in dangerous proximity to the gas of the balloon. Doing all that he could, under the circumstances, in the most expeditious way, M. Buislay unwound the rope in the car and lowered the eagle about 100 feet. Thus swung, it continued to blaze away until all the combustibles had been exhausted. When the illumination had exhausted itself, father and son prepared to pass the night in the car. Sleep eventually overcame the son, and he dozed away comfortably in cloud-land until morning. The fall in temperature experienced was only trifling, and, as there was no biting wind to chill the body, the exposure to the night air was not attended with discomfort.

After a run across the bay at a low elevation, the balloon struck a new current and drifted northwest until it hovered over Alcatraz. The roar of the ocean surf and of tide and stream current could be distinctly heard, and the voyagers were a little concerned lest they should be carried out to sea. A favorable breeze soon dispelled their fears, and they observed with feelings of pleasure that the Sierra Nevada was sailing over Angel Island and continuing in a northeast course. It successively passed over Richmond Point and Point San Pablo. Over the San Pablo basin it hung in airy stillness until about 1 o'clock. With the rising of the moon came a fresh, spanking wind, before which the balloon scudded at exhilarating speed. Having passed Benicia, it stood over toward Monte Diablo, and in an incredibly short time the mountain was straight ahead like a huge breaker. Overboard went the eagle and the platform, piecemeal, and thus lightened, the air-ship soared aloft and left the mountain far beneath. From this point the balloon took a direction toward Stockton, and then toward Sacramento, at terrific speed, passing up the valley at the rate of forty miles per hour. In the vicinity of Sacramento, when day had dawned, the balloon had fallen to a very low elevation. Observing a wide-awake native abroad, M. Buislay hailed him, and asked his situation. On catching the reply, "Sacramento," the aeronaut lightened his ship of ballast, and was soon at an elevation of 8,000 feet. Onward the balloon kept, and as the morning advanced M. Buislay found himself over Folsom. Here the breeze failed him altogether, and for three hours, in the unrealized expectation that a fresh current would spring up, the balloon remained almost stationary. The warmth of the sun's rays caused a great expansion of the gas, which, during the night, had remained in a very condensed state, and M. Buislay had to open the valve frequently. At length, about 7 o'clock, the valve-cord was pulled for the descent, and in a very steady, graceful manner, a safe landing was accomplished, three miles from Folsom.

Heroism of a Little California Girl.

We were witness to an act of bravery on Monday afternoon that is seldom equaled, never surpassed. A little child of Mrs. Saul, some two or three years old, was playing or running around near the flume that conveys water to the foundry, when in some manner it chanced to fall in. The flume was full of water running very rapidly. There was no one near by but the little daughter of Edward Keegan, who instantly jumped into the flume, caught the child, and screamed for help. The water was running so rapidly that it took her off her feet instantly. Still she clung to the little one, and to a great extent kept its head above water, at the great risk of being drowned herself, until assistance arrived and rescued them from their perilous situation. The little girl seemed perfectly oblivious of self in her efforts to save the child, and unless assistance had been speedily rendered would have become a martyr to her noble heroism.—El Dorado Republican.

Linseed Oil.

Linseed oil is obtained from flaxseed, which is raised in large quantities in Europe and India. The seeds are ground under heavy stones, set on edge and revolved on beds of stone. Attached to the edge stone are scrapers, which throw the seed into the circular track of the roller. The ground seed is placed in strong, woven woolen bags, which are covered with mats made of horse-hair and sole leather. The whole is then subjected to an immense hydraulic pressure, sometimes with a steam heat of 200 degrees Fahr., and sometimes without. The expressed oil flows into large tanks, where it is allowed to settle. When pure, the oil is colorless. That which is expressed without heat is of the better quality, but the yield is from 4 to 9 per cent. less than when heat is applied. The contents of the bags, after pressure, is known as oil-cake, and is used for feeding cattle. About 8,000,000 gallons of linseed oil are used annually in the United States.

Valuing Beauty.

The Persian Embassador, Mirza Aboul Hassan, while he resided in Paris, was an object of so much curiosity that he could not go out without being surrounded by a multitude of gazers, and the ladies even ventured so far as to penetrate his hotel. On returning one day from a ride, he found his apartments crowded with ladies, all elegantly dressed, but not all equally beautiful. Astonished at this unexpected assemblage, he inquired what these European odalisques could possibly want with him. The interpreter replied that they had come to look at his excellency. The embassador was surprised to find himself an object of curiosity among a people who boast of having attained the acme of civilization; and was not a little offended at conduct which, in Asia, would have been considered an unwarrantable breach of good-breeding. He accordingly revenged himself by the following little scheme:

The illustrious foreigner affected to be charmed with the ladies. He looked at them attentively, alternately pointing to them with his finger, and speaking with great earnestness to his interpreter, who, he was well aware, would be questioned by his fair visitors, and whom he, therefore, instructed in the part he was to act.

Accordingly, the eldest of the ladies, who, in spite of her age, probably thought herself the prettiest of the whole party, and whose curiosity was particularly excited, after his excellency had passed through the suite of rooms, coolly inquired what had been the object of his examination.

"Madame," replied the interpreter, "I dare not inform you."

"But I wish particularly to know, sir."

"Indeed, madame, it is impossible."

"Nay, sir, this reserve is vexatious. I desire to know."

"Oh, since you desire, madame, know, then, that his excellency has been valuing you."

"Well, that's whimsical enough. And how much may that lady be worth, according to his estimation?"

"A thousand crowns."

"And the other?"

"Five hundred crowns."

"And that young lady with fair hair?"

"Three hundred crowns."

"And that brunette?"

"The same price."

"And that lady who is painted?"

"Fifty crowns."

"And pray, sir, what may I be worth in the tariff off his excellency's good graces?"

"Oh, madame, you really must excuse me, I beg."

"Come, come, no concealments!"

"The prince merely said, as he passed you—"

"Well, what did he say?" inquired the lady, with great eagerness.

"He said, madame, that he did not know the small coin of this country!"

The Head.

The "Fat Contributor" thus discourses: This is doubtless the most important "organ" we have. We lose our hearts with impunity, but let a man once part with his head, and the jig's up. A lost leg or arm can be supplied but when the head is once off there is an end of it. Not but that we have wooden heads enough among us, but they were born so. Art has never successfully supplied a wooden head where the original article had been carried away.

No one can expect to get ahead in this world if he hasn't a head to start with. Yet having a good head at the onset there is danger of losing it if we are not on our guard. The head is the receptacle for the brains, and it is sad to see how much waste stowage-room there is in some men's craniums. The less brain a man has the more liable he is to get the "big head." A man ought to be tolerably satisfied with the head he has and make the best of it, particularly as he must carry it as long as he lives, yet we see thousands of poor, struggling mortals scheming and contriving day and night how to get ahead of each other and after they get it they an't always satisfied with it. The fascinating daughter of Herodias adopted a very unfair way of getting ahead of John the Baptist. When she danced before Herod, it was good-by John. She afterward got ahead of him on a charger, which shows that her charger was faster than John's was.

The head affords employment to a great many people, of whom the hatter stands at the head, though he probably isn't at the head oftener than the barber is. Then there is the dentist, who pulls teeth and nearly pulls your head off at the same time; and the aurist, who attends to your ear; and the oculist, who prescribes for your eye; and the phrenologist, who will examine your head when you are ninety years old, and tell you just what occupation you ought to adopt in order to succeed in the world.

There was a popular delusion for a long time to the effect that when a man's brains are out the man dies, but it is not so. Look at Congress! And look at some heads of the department.

There are a great many kinds of heads. Some men have heads so round—bullet heads—that a square idea can never get into them. Others have flat heads, and everything is flat that emanates from them. A few heads are perfectly level, and occasionally one that is square. Hot heads and bull heads are found in abundance among all classes and conditions of men. Finally, my advice is, dear hearers, under all circumstances, try and keep your heads level and cool.

BASSWOOD BARK.—The inner bark of the basswood, or linden tree, is in Russia manufactured into a great variety of articles, including grain-bags, wagon-covers, sails, ropes, etc. A million trees are annually required to supply the material, the value of the products amounting to $2,400,000. The bark is collected by the peasants in May and June, when the circulation of the sap renders peeling easy. The bark of the lower part of the stem, generally used for roofing, is procured in pieces about 5½ by 3½ feet, and is heated and pressed to prevent curling. That of the upper part of the trunk is tied in bundles, and rotted in water until September, when it is dried and ready for weaving. The heaviest fiber is sold at the Nishni-Novgorod Fair for $24 per cwt.

The Granger.

We take the following from a late leader in the New York Sun, under the heading of "What is a Granger?"

"A Granger is a person little known but much discussed. He is very mysterious, and in some parts of the country where the politicians have looked for him with straining eyes, but have thus far failed to recognize him in the flesh, he is almost as mythical as a Ku-Klux to a Georgia darkey. But the Granger is coming. He is frequently about some time before he is recognized. He is a great and powerful man in the Far West, where his brethren are many and his progeny legion. But no pent-up Utica will answer him. He is just now pouring over the Alleghany Mountains in astonishing numbers. But a few months ago he had not a single lodge in the State of Pennsylvania, and the State rings and the city rings, and the little court house rings in the various counties, stole on and slept soundly, regardless of him and his. But the other day he was at Mechanicsburgh, in Cumberland county, with a great turn-out of his people, and showed beyond doubt that he was at home in the East, as well as the West, and was able to smash things generally, if he was so minded.

"There were sharp eyes bent on this smiling little village while the Granger was there. Some people thought his ambition was rising already, and that finding himself unexpectedly formidable, he would begin to cut capers, break slates and other political fixings, and dance around in the exuberance of his strength, to the certain discomfiture of all parties, his own among the rest. But he did nothing of the kind. He calmly resolved to ignore politics, and went into secret session on his own business, which is understood to have related principally to the purchase of his supplies, and the sale and transportation of his crops. His conduct on this, as on so many other occasions, was disappointing to others; but nobody can say that it was indiscreet. It is indeed strong evidence that the Granger is a sensible, sober-minded, solid kind of a person, who is in no danger of getting drunk with his new prosperity and seeking strange adventures outside of his appropriate field of labor.

"But who and what is the Granger after all? He goes off to deliberate in a room with the blinds down, has passwords and signs and grips, and allows nobody to hear what he says or to see what he does. He must have many secrets. Most assuredly he has; and The Sun, looking down impartially upon everything mundane, and imparting health and vigor to everything good, knows what his secrets are. In the first place they relate entirely to his own affairs, and it is for that reason alone that he has failed to gratify the general curiosity by publishing them at large. For instance, the Grangers make their hard living by tilling the soil. When one of them begins life it is a great matter to him to get his reaper, his mower, his thresher, and his hundred other machines and implements, as well as the household furniture, his clothing and his groceries, his "one-horse-shay" and his parlor organ, at something near half the price of the retail merchant or the manufacturer's agent. This he does by co-operation with others situated like himself; but how and where he does it is one of his secrets, and a very precious one at that.

"In like manner, when at the end of a season of incessant toil, he sees his fields yellow with the harvest of bread and his fatted herd lowing in the pasture, he reflects that he and the consumers of all this produce are frequently situated far apart, and that a host of intermediate agents and traders absorb a large portion of its value in money. He resolves to put in his own purse the difference between the price paid by the consumer, less transportation, and the price usually paid to the farmer. He does this by means of the Grange; but the precise method of it is another of his grand secrets. When he has accomplished these two capital operations, he has made and saved enough to make his business profitable, and to give his wife and children some of the luxuries and advantages in which the families of flourishing middle-men are commonly indulged.

"An association which promises him such results, and which at the same time vindicates the independence of him and his class, opens to him a prospect full of roseate and radiant hues as compared with the servile and beggarly condition from which he is rising. Heretofore he has taken what was offered and given what was asked. Henceforth he will, like other classes of men, combine with those whose interests are identical, and do himself the justice of which he has been so long deprived. His power in virtue of this widespread and coherent organization may well be considered tremendous. A million of members to-day will be two millions by the next spring, and when they begin to hold back crops or send them forward according to their own good pleasure, New York and Chicago, Wall street and the produce exchanges, will begin to count a new and terrible, because unknown and unmanageable, force in the business of the country.

"To the Granger and grange an unmixed good; to the speculator an unmixed evil. The manufacturer and the wholesaler find their accounts in the certain sales and the cash payments which are a part of its economy; so that nobody but the blood-suckers, the speculators in grain, the middlemen and the politicians, have anything to fear."

PERHAPS the most gratifying intelligence that the country has received from Washington in fifteen years is the announcement of the extensive weaning that is now making among the able-bodied babies that have so long been nursed at the "public teat." According to a Washington telegram, not less than 8,000 of these stalwart nurslings have been ruthlessly torn from the maternal bosom since the adjournment of Congress. Just imagine 8,000 big lubberly babies all roaring in chorus for the maternal nipple, from which they have been suddenly divorced. This is the edifying spectacle now witnessed at Washington, among the discharged army of supernumerary officeholders. The cause of regret is that instead of 8,000 there were not 20,000 of them.

A SONG OF A NEST.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

There was once a nest in the hollow
  Down in the mosses and knot-grass pressed,
Soft and warm, and full to the brim;
  Vetches leaned over it, purple and dim,
With butter-cup buds to follow.

I pray you hear my song of a nest,
  For it is not long;
You shall never light in a summer quest
  The bushes among—
Shall never light on a prouder sitter,
  A fairer nestful, nor ever know
A softer sound than their tender twitter,
  That windlike did come and go.

I had a nestful once of my own,
  Ah! happy, happy I!
Right dearly I loved them; but when they were grown,
  They spread out their wings to fly;
Oh, one after one, they flew away,
  Far up the heavenly blue,
To the better country, the upper day,
  And—I wish I was going too.

I pray you, what is the nest to me,
  My empty nest?
And what is the shore where I stood to see
  My boat sail down to the west?
Can I call that home where I anchor yet,
  Though my good man has sailed?
Can I call that home where my nest was set,
  Now all hopes have failed?

Nay, but the port where my sailor went,
  And the land where my nestlings be,
There is the home where my thoughts are sent,
  The only home for me.

Humor.

WHO is the greatest terrifier? Fire.

WHY do honest ducks dip their heads under water? To liquidate their little bills, of course.

"HE fell dead and expired in two minutes," says a Georgia paper of the death of a negro.

WHY are your eyes like friends separated by distant climes? They correspond but never meet.

IT is a rule of etiquette in Arkansas that no true gentleman will eat with his leg thrown over the back of his neighbor's chair, if he can help it.

THE Spaniards say: At eighteen, marry your daughter to her superior; at twenty, to her equal; but at thirty to anybody that will have her.

THE latest verdict recorded was upon a gentleman who expired in a fit of inebriation. The jury returned: "Death by hanging round a grog shop."

"HAVE you 'Blasted Hopes'?" asked a young lady of a librarian with a handkerchief tied over his jaw. "No, ma'am," said he; "it's only a blasted toothache."

"IF a man bequeathed you a hundred pounds, would you pray for him?" said a Sunday-school teacher to a pupil. "No," said he; "I would pray for another like him."

THE man who will keep a paper a length of time, and then send it back "refused" and "uncalled for," would swallow a blind dog's dinner, and then beat the dog for being blind.

SAID Mrs. Jenkins on her return from the church: "When I see the shawls of those Johnsons, and then think of what I have to wear, if it wasn't for the consolation of religion I don't know what I would do."

SOME singers at a concert were somewhat startled the other evening by finding that the selection, "When wearied watchers sink to sleep," had been printed on their programmes, "When married wretches," etc.

"I'M afloat! I'm afloat!" screamed a young lady of powerful lungs and fingers to match, as she exercised both at the piano. "I should think you were," growled an old bachelor, "judging from the squall you raise."

"DOES the train start this evening at thirty-five minutes past six, as usual?" asked an elderly lady of a railroad employe. "No, it leaves at twenty-five minutes to seven," was the reply. "Dear me, dear me, how they do change these trains."

A YOUNG man, who knows all about it, states that his experience has taught him that a flirt is a fool, who delights in fooling fools, and the fool who is fooled by such a fool is the foolishest kind of a fool. He's been fooled badly, we should judge.

"THAT'S just the sort of umbrella that people appropriate, or, in other words, hook," said Smiggles to a companion one morning, showing him a very handsome paraclute. "Yes," said his companion, "I thought so when I saw you have it."

A LITTLE orphan boy, who was nearly starved by the stingy uncle, his guardian, with whom he lived, meeting a lank greyhound one day in the street, was asked by his guardian what made the dog so thin. After reflection, the little fellow replied, "I suppose he lives with his uncle."

A MAN who was born blind can have no idea of colors. A man who was born deaf can have no idea of sounds. A man who never had the use of his olfactory nerves can have no idea of the odor of a rose. These ideas enter, respectively, by the sensations of seeing, hearing and smelling.

THE following lines were found upon a lawyer's table, in the court-house, the other day:

"Fair woman was made to bewitch;
A companion, a nurse,
A blessing, a curse,
Fair woman was made to be which?"

COLUMBUS' TOMB.—Writing of churches in Havana, a correspondent says: "The church of most interest to the tourist is the cathedral of Havana, at the corner of Emperado and San Ygnacio streets, an edifice constructed of soft brown stone, which, however, has become somewhat blackened by the age, having been erected as far back as 1724. The large doors in front, of polished mahogany, you approach by flights of stone steps, and as you enter on the left, there is the little tomb which contains the ashes of Columbus. Above it is a slab of stone on which is a bust of the great discoverer. He died in 1506 at Valladolid, and his remains, after resting in various places, were finally brought and deposited here, amid much pomp and ceremony, on the 15th of January, 1796. And yet I find few of the residents of this city and few tourists even who are aware of this fact."

SQUASH beetles may be driven off by sprinkling anything that smells strongly of ammonia, as finely-powdered hen-droppings or Peruvian guano, upon the plants. Lime or plaster, ground up with one part of carbolic acid to a hundred, would answer the purpose. Soot is also a good remedy.

Democratic State Ticket.

Secretary of State,
J. E. NEFF, of Randolph County.
Auditor of State,
E. HENDERSON, of Morgan County.
Treasurer of State,
B. C. SHAW, of Marion County.
Superintendent of Public Instruction,
J. H. SMART, of Allen county.
Attorney General,
C. A. BUSKIRK, of Gibson County.
Judge of the Supreme Court,
H. P. BIDDLE, of Cass County.

Democratic County Convention.

A delegate convention of the Democracy of DeKalb County will be held at Auburn on SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1874,

at 10 o'clock A. M., to nominate candidates for each of the following offices:

One candidate for Clerk, Auditor, Treasurer, Sheriff, Representative in the General Assembly, Commissioner for the Northern District, Coroner, Assessor and Surveyor.

It is, therefore, requested that the Democratic voters of the county and all others opposed to the present administration of national affairs, meet at the voting places in the several townships on SATURDAY, August 1st, 1874, at 3 o'clock P. M., to select delegates in accordance with the following basis of apportionment to represent said townships in the county convention:

Butler township, 13; Jackson, 15, Concord, 16; Newville, 5; Stafford, 6; Wilmington, 18; Auburn, 21; Waterloo, 16; South Richland, 12; North Richland, 10; Fairfield, 21; Smithfield, 17; Franklin, 16; Troy, 4.

By order of the Democratic Central Committee. T. C. MAYS, Chairman.

It is the opinion of the General BUTTLER that Massachusetts will this fall elect a Democratic Governor and then Democratic Congressmen. The Boston Globe (Republican) gives some reasons why this result is not improbable. We have only to say that Massachusetts has our consent.

The closing appeal of the address put forth by the Congressional Republican Committee, that Republicans be sent to Congress instead of Democrats, does not entirely please the Boston Advertiser. It says: "That is very well. But there are hundreds of thousands of Republicans scattered all over the land who are tired of the old party jugglery, and, if they cannot have honest men to vote for, will answer all such solicitations in the true Scripture fashion, 'Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing.

It will not be long before every Southern State, excepting Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina.—where carpet-baggers and negroes most abound—will send a unanimous democratic delegation to Congress. The civil rights bill to degrade all whites in the South to a common level with the late negro slaves, is the last feather which breaks the power of the republican party in those States. It is an eye-opener which was needed to put the finishing stoke to republican rule.

Rules of Jackson Grange.

The following rules were adopted by Jackson Grange at their meeting on July 25th 1874.

1st. United by the strong and faithful tie of agriculture we mutually resolve to labor for the good of our order and mankind.

2nd. We heartily endorse the most to, in essentials, unity; in non-essentials liberty; in all things, charity.

3rd. We shall endeavor to advance our cause by laboring to accomplish the following objects: To develop a better and higher manhood and womanhood among ourselves, to enhance the comforts and attractions of our homes and strengthen our attachments to our pursuits, foster a mutual understanding and co-operation, to maintain inviolate our laws and to emulate each other to labor, to hasten the good time coming; to reduce our expenses, both individual and corporate; to buy less and produce more in order to make our farms self supporting; to diversify our crops and crop no more than we can cultivate; to condense the weight of our exports, selling less in the bushel and more on the hoof and fleece; systematize our work and calculate intelligently on the probabilities of the discontinuance of the credit system, the mortgage system the fashion system, and every other system tending to prodigality and bankruptcy. We propose meeting together talking together, working together, buying together, selling together, and, in general acting together for out mutual protection and advancement, as occasion may require. We shall avoid litigation as much as possible by arbitration in the Grange. We shall constantly strive to secure entire harmony, good will and vital brotherhood among ourselves, and to make our order perpetual. We shall earnestly endeavor to suppress personal, local, sectional and national prejudices, all unhealthy rivalry and selfish ambition. Faithful adherence to these principles will insure our mental, moral, social and material advancement.

4th. For our business interests we desire to bring producers and consumers, farmers and manufacturers into the most direct and friendly relations possible. Hence we must dispense with a surplus of middlemen—not that we are unfriendly to them but we do not need them. Their surplus and their exactions diminish our profits. We wage no aggressive warfare against any other interests whatever. On the contrary all our acts and all our efforts, so far as business is concerned, are not only for the benefit of producers and consumers but also for all other interests that tend to bring these two parties into speedy and economical contact. Hence we hold that transportation companies of every kind are necessary to our success; that their interests, and harmonious action is mutually advantageous, keeping in view the first sentence in our declaration of principles of actions, that individual happiness depends upon general prosperity, we shall therefore advocate for every state the increase in every practicable way of all facilities for transporting cheaply to the seaboard or between home producers and consumers all productions of our country. We adopt as our fixed purpose to open out the channels in nature's great arteries that the lifeblood of commerce may flow freely. We are not enemies of railroads, navigating or irrigating canals, nor any corporation that will advance our industrial interest, nor any laboring classes in our noble order.—There is no communism or agrarianism. We are opposed to such spirit and management of any corporation or enterprise as tends to oppress the people and rob them of their just profits. We are not enemies to capital, but we oppose the tyranny of monopolists, and long to see the antagonism between capital and labor removed by common consent and by an enlightened statesmanship worthy of the nineteenth century.

5th. We are opposed to the excessive salaries, high rates of interest and exorbitant per cent profits on trade. They greatly increase our burdens and do not bear a proper proportion to the profits of producers. We desire only self protection and the protection of every true interest of our land by legitimate transactions, legitimate trade and legitimate profits. We shall advance the cause of education among ourselves and for our children by all just means within our power. We especially advocate for our agricultural and industrial colleges that practical agriculture, domestic science and all the arts which adorn the home taught in their course of study. We emphatically and sincerely assert the oft repeated truth taught in our organic law, that the Grange National, State or Subordinate, is not a political or party organization. No Grange, if true to its obligations, can discuss political conventions, or nominate candidates nor even discuss their merits in its meetings. Yet the principles we teach underlie all true politics, all true statesmanship and if properly carried out will tend to purify the whole political atmosphere of our country; for we seek the greatest good for the greatest number. But we must bear it in mind that no one becoming a Granger gives up that inalienable right for every member to do all in his power, legitimately to influence to good the action of any political party to which he belongs, it is his duty to do all he can in his own party to put down bribery, corruption and trickery; to see that none but competent, faithful and honest men who will unflinchingly stand by our industrial interests are nominated for all positions of trust, and to have carried out the principles which should always characterize every Grange member; that the office should seek the man and not the man the office. We acknowledge the broad principle that differences of opinion is no crime and hold that progress toward truth is made by differences of opinion, while the fault lies in bitterness of controversy. We desire a proper equality and fairness, protection for the weak, restraint upon the strong, in short, justly distributed power. These are American ideas, the very essence of American independence. And to advocate the contrary is unworthy of the sons and daughters of an American republic. We cherish the belief that sectionalism should be buried with the past. Our work is for the present and the future. In our agricultural brotherhood and its purposes we recognize no North no South no East no West. It is reserved by every patron in his right as a freeman to affiliate with any party that will best carry out his principles.

6th. Ours being peculiarly a farmers institution we cannot admit all to our ranks; many are excluded by the nature of our organization not because they are professional men or artizans or laborers, but because they have not a sufficiently direct interest in tilling the soil, or many have some interest in conflict with our purposes. But we appeal to all good citizens for their cordial co-operation in efforts toward reform. That we may eventually remove from our midst the last vestige of tyranny and corruption. We hail the great desire for fraternal harmony equitable compromise and an earnest co-operation as an omen of our future success.

7th. It shall be an abiding principle with us to relieve any of our oppressed and suffering brotherhood by any means at our command [illegible] but not least, we proclaim [illegible] among our purposes to inculcate a proper appreciation of the [illegible] ties and sphere of woman, as is [illegible] by admitting her to membership and [illegible] imploring the [illegible] and assistance of our Divine Master to guide us in our work. We here pledge ourselves to faithfully and harmoniously labor for all future time, to return [illegible] our united efforts to the wisdom, justice, fraternity and political purity of our forefathers.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 23.

After Freeman had kept shop alone awhile, he and Nelson Payne formed a partnership. After Freeman and Payne, came Payne and Governor Wallace, who who kept in the front of the house now occupied by Mrs. Bodine as a residence. It had just been erected by Payne. Next came Payne and Ralston in the same room After wards store and groceries "too numerous to mention" sprang up in our goodly town.

The first tavern kept in town, was by T J. Freeman, in the same house where his store was. A few years afterwards, he built the house now known as the Griswold house," and removed into it. At quite an early day J. O. P. Sherlock kept tavern in the old frame now owned by T. Baldock Parson also kept a public house in the same building where his store was.

Some tell me that the first lawyer in town was one W. Smith—of the respectable family of John H. Smith, or his cusin "Bill," so often mentioned in our newspapers; while others tell me there never was a lawyer of that name here.

'Who can decide when doctors disagree Certain it is that Judg Mott was the second lawyer to locate in town. He came in the fall of 1843. Judge Morris was next, and then Judg Dickinson,(surely he deserves the title with the rest, having occupied the bench as circit Judge pro. tem during several sesions.) Judg Dickinson, I say came next, and here we close the list of pioneer lawyers. Morris came in the fall of 1844, and Dickinson perhaps a year after.

Judge Mott informs me that, after Mrs Beck and Mrs. McCrum, of Richland Township, had built the first school house in town, the court was removed from Park's cabin to the school house. A rough platform of boards was erected at the end for a Judgment seat"—a fence of unplaned boards fixed across for a bar, and the house warmed by an old cracked stove that made such eloquent pleas, whenever a fresh supply of fuel was put in, as to remove the whole court and bar to tears, not excepting even the hardest harted lawyer, with "eyes unused to weep On such occasions, to give vent to the deep emotions of the court,(or perhaps to give vent to the smoke,) the door of the house had to be opened.

At that early day clients, were rather scarce. People had little or nothing to go to law about, and still less to pay lawyers fees, and very little time to spare from their strenuous efforts to get the necessaries of life, to spend in court. A few of late years, seem disposed to make ample amends for this neglect of the members of the bar. Judge Mott informs me that his first winter in town was spent in the honorable employment of village schoolmaster. The following anecdote of Judg M. comes second handed from the, Judge himself. He was at home, rather "hard up" for funds, as was fashionable in that day, and, his wife being in rather poor health, he was scrubing the house with his coat off, sleeves and pants rolled up, and in a perfect deluge of sand and suds, when up stepped a gentlemen, from the vicinity of Enterprize, and inquired where "Lawyer Morris" was to be found. The man with the mop modestly replied that Morris was his name, when the stranger eyeing him askanse, told him that he had a case before squire somebody, in woich "Doc Ladue" was his antagonist, and that he wanted to get two good lawyers on his side "being as the old Doc was rather crafty." During this short speech' Morris was a deeply interested auditor; and, when it was finished, he quickly laid his broom and mop, rolled down his sleeves and pants, put on his "fix ups" dressing his "lower extremities" with one boot and one shoe, for want of mates. and in a very short period he and Mott were n the trial for squire somebody's away up in Franklin Ten dollars was the fee received, and perhaps never X came more opportunely. Relating the above to Judge Mott, as I had heard it, he re marked that chills and fevers prevailed to such a distressing degree often, in the early history of Auburn, that there was scarcely a man but that at some periods, was under the necessity of plying the mop handling the skillet, or bending over the wash-tub; and that owing to the above cause and the fact that female help was like the man pursued by the learned constable. "non came at ibus," he himself has been compelled, for two weeks at a time, to preform all kinds of household and kitchen service. Mott and Morris have succeeded quite well in their profession, not only acquiring honorable names, but also a competence of "world year."

The last mile of iron between Auburn and Defiance was laid on Thurday, in four hours. The Hon. A. P. Edgerton of Hicksville drove the last spike, hitting it five times out of sight. A. P. ain't so slow with a maul. Thus are we connected with the east by one of the greatest lines in the country.

We take pleasure in informing our readers that we have given the Practical Cycoledia a thorough examination, and are convinced of its great value, as it is a book that just suited to the times, both in subject and price. We predict a large sale. The general agents want 20 good agents. Here is a chance.

The Democrats of the Eighth Indiana District, Voorhee's old stamping ground, have nominated Dr. H. J. Rice for Congress. The salary grab record of Mr. Voorhees kept him out of the field and would have slaughtered him if he had chosen to make the effort for a nomination.

It appears from returns to the Department of Agricultural that an increase in the corn area of fully 2,000,000 acres is apparent, or six per cent above the breadth of last year. This does not include three acres we have planted this year south of town, and which now promises a good yield.

Good Yield—Messrs. Sheets and Hoffman set their fine threshing machine at John A. Ditmar's last Monday, and threshed out fifty-eight bushels from sixty dozen. Nobody ought to growl at that. Perhaps some threshers turn out more than others. If so, this machine should be engaged at once.

The Baltimore and Ohio road are still pushing their work through as fast as possible. We do not know how soon a train will be put on between here and the east, but suppose as soon as the line is sufficiently ballasted, two trains being engaged at that work now. The pay rolls for the month of June from here to the Junction, in Ohio, amounted to forty thousand dollars.

From Druggists.

There is no case of Dyspepsia that Green's August Flower will not cure. Come to the Drug Store of Davenport & Co., and inquire about it. If you suffer from costiveness, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, or derangement of the System, try it. Two or three doses will relieve you.

Boschee's German Syrup is now sold in every town and City in the United States We have not less than five hundred letters from Druggists, saying it is the best medicine they ever sold for Consumption, Throat or Lung disease. 75 cents per bottle.

Excursion to Logansport.

When Mr. Quirk built the railroad to Butler last fall he promised to give a free ride to those who subscribed stock, some time this year. He made arrangements to comply with this and this (Thursday) morning a large train is to leave for Logansport. It only includes those who reside at Butler and this place.

A. W. Hempleman, Esq., the enterprising agent of Eldridge, Swain, Nickerson & Co., manufacturers of School and Church Furniture at Indianapolis, has furnished the seats for the new Catholic church at this place. They are handsomely made of ash and walnut, beautifully covered, with cross and oval to correspond with the architecture of the building. It will be a splendid piece of work and speaks well for the manufacturers.

Fashions—The cheapest and best way for our patrons to obtain the Genuine Fashions, is to get Smith's Illustrated Pattern Bazaar; it imports every new design in Foreign Fashions in paper patterns and supplies these patterns to its subscribers with little cloth models of the garment already made up, so that any lady can make and complete her own wardrobe without any assistance from anyone.

Send one dollar to A. Burdette Smith, 914 Broadway, N. Y. and get it.

Gov. Hendricks thinks 9 o'clock inconveniently early for closing saloons.—There are a good many people whom it would benefit, if the closing hour was five in the afternoon; but the Gov. of the great State of Indiana ought to know about these things, and no doubt speaks from a Democratic stand-point.—Indianian.

Yes, there are a few no doubt who would be benefitted perhaps by an early hour. We have one in our minds eye, and he don't live a thousand miles from Warsaw. A Democratic stand-point of that kind would accommodate a large number of Republicans, and we hav'nt it in our heart to disappoint them.

The Fair.

The Northern Indiana Fair, to be held here in September bids fair to prove a gratifying success. The ground of the Agricultural Society are exceeding well-fitted for the accommodation of exhibitors and the completion of the splendid race course has been added an attraction that will draw a full attendace. The sloping hill at the east and south sides of the track will give any number of spectators a full view of the speeding upon it.

It should be remembered that the fair grounds are open to the competition of all Northern Indiana, and we hope our neighboring counties will join us in making such an exhibition as has never been equalled before in this part of the State. applications for space are increasing every day, although the entry books will not be open till next week. The premium list is especially alluring and must attract the favorable notice of exhibitors in all departments—Fort Wayne News

For Congress.

We beg leave to mention in connection with the coming Congressional Canvass, the name of Freeman Kelly Esq., of this county. Mr. Kelly is a farmer, a laboring man, and consequently an honest man.—As four-fifths of Congress is generally composed of lawyers and dead-beats, and the other fifth farmers and honest men, and as that body has given the major part of its attention to Credit Mobiliers and other stealings, for the last twelve years, we now propose to change the order of things, and have the farmer and laboring class to predominate. Mr. Kelly is just the man. His greatest enemy, if he has any, will give him the credit of being scrupously honest, and all know that he possesses good abilities to prosecute an honest calling. It is not the man that can blow and fume that we want to represent us; we've had that kind long enough, for instance Billy Williams; we prefer a little more honesty and a little less mouth. Mr. Kelly is a good speaker, an indefatigable worker, and should he be nominated we feel that every farmer and laborer in the district will have good cause to stand by and cast their votes for him.

SUPPOSED INFANTICIDE.

A Sensation at Waterloo, Indiana.

We learn that a case similar to that which occurred at the Auburn House in this place about two years ago, transpired at Lenis' Hotel in Waterloo, a week ago last Sunday evening. The affair seems to have been kept very quiet, and the Press failed to give any particulars last week.

Miss Minn's Shinneman was employed at the above hotel as a servant girl. On Sabbath evening she was taken sick, and the next morning taken to her step father's house. She seems to have concealed the fact of giving birth to a child. A doctor was called in on Tuesday and her terrible condition revealed. On last Wednesday evening the body of a dead infant was found by two women near the hotel in a paddle of mud, or water. It was properly taken care of and there is but little doubt that it was abandoned by its inhuman mother soon after its birth The girl refuses to say anything in regard to the matter. She has scarcely eaten anything since and it was thought she could not long survive.

We do not know anything about the girl's former reputation but suppose it is one of those sad cases of seduction and abandonment by some human fiend, and an effort should be made to bring the guilty to punishment.

President Quincy, Vice President Keyser, A. P. Edgerton, Judge Patton, Supt. Lee, and several others passed over the line from Defiance to Avilla on the first train last Thursday evening. and returned the next morning. A large number of our citizens were at the junction to confer with them as the location of elevator and depot, but the train was three hours behind the appointed time, and only a few were there when it came in sight. There seemed to be a general desire to have these buildings at Sheets' crossings, and an offer of five acres was made for that purpose, this amount to be given by Mr. Sheets and Stamets. The latter gentleman has made an offer of two acres, and we beleive Mr. Sheets will make up the balance. He will certainly stand in his own light it he does not, as he will reap the advantage of their location at this point. Mr. Keyser thought we ought to grade and tie a side track for them, but it is certainly asking too much. The citizens of this place contributed one thousand dollars to make a survey that brought this road in the lower part of town, but that did not suit a few rich nabobs east of us, who had land to speculate upon, and so a good line was abandoned for a much inferior one, that leaves us a mile further away. Now, they want us to give them grounds and grade a side track. We can't see it. Had they constructed on the former line they could hardly have asked any favor that would not have been granted, but as they have run their own machine so far, we suppose there will be no objection if they continue to do so in the future. While our citizens are willing to aid them so far as they can, they have already contributed so largely to railroad interests lately that they feel inpoverished and are positively unable to make money donations.

A neat and commodious dwelling, in the lower part of town, can be had cheap by applying to C. F. MADER

LIFE AND DEATH.

Does Life survive the touch of Death?
Death's hand alone the secret holds,
Which as to each one he unfolds,
We press to know with bated breath.

A whisper there, a whisper here,
Confirms that hope to which we cling!
But still we grasp at anything,
And sometimes hope and sometimes fear.

Some whisper that the dead we knew
Hover around us while we pray,
Anxious to speak. We cannot say;
We only wish it may be true.

I knew a Stoic who has thought,
As healthy blood flows through his veins
And joy his present life sustains,
And all this good has come unsought,

"For more he cannot rightly pray,
Life may extend, or life may cease;
He bides the issue, sure of peace,
Sure of the best in God's own way.

"Perfection waits the race of man;
If working out this great design,
God cuts us off, we must resign
To be the refuse of His man."

But I, for one, feel no such peace;
I dare to think I have in me
That which had better never be,
If lost before it can increase.

And all the ruined piles of mind,
Daily discovered everywhere,
Built but to crumble in despair!—
I dare not think Him so unkind.

The rudest workman would not fling
The fragments of his work away,
If ev'ry useless bit of clay
He trod on were a sentient thing.

And does the Wisest Worker take
Quick human hearts, instead of stone,
And hew and carve them one by one,
Nor heed the pangs with which they break?

And more: if but creation's waste,
Would He have given us sense to yearn
For the perfection none can earn
And hope the fuller life to taste?

I think, if we must cease to be,
It is a cruelty refined,
To make the instincts of our mind
Stretch out toward eternity.

Wherefore I welcome nature's cry,
As earnest of a life again,
Where thought shall never be in vain,
And doubt before the light shall fly.

A FLASH OF LIGHTNING.

Did you ever hear of Pawpaw village? Probably not. Don't look for it on the map. It may changed its name long ago. It may have been baptized anew for our story. It was certainly too inconsiderable when the events that it narrates took place, to be worthy of the notice of any compiler of geographies. I am sure that you will never find it. However, I will tell you that it hid itself in the heart of the State of Ohio, and was as pretty as it was small. Pawpaw trees were numerous there, and after the frost came the delicious fruit scarcely known in the Eastern States was very plentiful. As for oaks, they were not to be counted. Whoever the early settlers were, they had not the hatred of trees which most country folks seem to entertain, and every porch was shaded, and every garden set about with relics of the primeval forest.

Even in the midst of broad fields stood great chestnut trees, under whose branches spread a soft oasis of shade, where the laborers sat to eat their noontide meal, and gather strength for the long sunny afternoon.

Master and man worked together in the same rough garments. The rich farmer toiled as anxiously as the poor fellow who had come to ask for work, with all his worldly possessions tied in a handkerchief; and the mistress of the house was as busy as her maid from dawn until dusk during all the burning harvest-time.

Still, people who "had money" were as proud of it as people could be anywhere; and people who had none envied its possessors as angrily as they do where the insignia of wealth are white hands, fine dress and idleness.

There were perhaps a dozen works of fiction in all Pawpaw. The clergyman alone possessed a volume of poetry. There was one old resident, a certain Granddaddy Long, who had been born in New York city, who in his childhood had seen a play yclept "Agnes, or the Bleeding Nun." No one else had had personal cognizance of any dramatic performance of greater merit than that given by the circus company that once a year paid Pawpaw a visit. But do you suppose that there was no romance there in consequence—no love-making, no jealousy; no eligible matches favored by mercenary parents, no ineligible ones toward which young hearts had a leaning; that in none of those little mounds in the old churchyard rested one who had staked all on love and lost it, or any gray-haired woman who had "gone maiden to her grave" because of broken troth? If you do, you are mistaken. Love's passions, joys and woes are wild flowers that grow everywhere. Fairer and finer among cultivated people, it is true, but hardier and stronger among the uncultured.

The belle of Pawpaw was Rose Unwin. She was the daughter of the richest man in the place, and the prettiest girl by far for miles around. She counted her beaux by twenties, and could have married any one of them if she would; but girlhood was too attractive to her, or she waited for the young prince for whom most girls wait. She said "No" to every one who proposed to her, but she said it in such a way that she angered none of them. The free bird refused a cage, that was all.

Some of these lovers had given up the chase in despair and had fallen in love with other girls and married them. Some still bided their time; among them Warren Lawrence, the miller's son. The miller was an old man, who had made money—a friend of Rose Unwin's father.

Warren was his only son. He was handsome and graceful, and, what was more highly valued in that part of the world, he was very strong and very large—six feet two in his stockings, and, like Robin Hood, a cloth-yard broad from shoulder to shoulder.

It was said that Warren had sworn that no one save himself should marry Rose Unwin, that the life of any man who should "cut him out" would not be safe for an hour; and many believed it. Rose only laughed at the tale. Even if it were true, a Western woman of that day would have had no dread of such savage wooing. She scarcely liked Warren less for being so much in earnest.

"None of them," she said to herself so often that she believed it, "none of them will ever call me wife. I will be my own mistress, my father's pet, my happy self forever. Love is something a woman does not experience. I, at least, shall never feel it for anyone."

But one day the clergyman's nephew came from Massachusetts to visit him, and she said this no more. Charles Dorset was not handsomer than many of the men who wooed her; he was by no means so large. He was a scholarly man, prematurely bald, and with a mild, quiet, gentlemanly face. But she had never seen anyone like him before, and he fascinated her. His admiration pleased her. She respected him, and her coquetry deserted her in his presence. No woman ever flirts with a man whom she either respects or loves. She ceased to think solely of herself and her power over hearts. She thought a great deal of him. At last she knew the truth—she loved him. Long before this he had known that he loved her.

No one else suspected the truth. The men saw nothing dangerous in Charles Dorset; the women were not penetrating enough to discern, in the absence of all those high arts of flirtation in which Rose was such an adept, the fact that she felt for once in her life a veritable passion. As for the old father, it never entered his mind that a girl who could stand out against Warren Lawrence's six odd feet of burly, florid, young manhood, would succumb to a plain, almost middle-aged man, not much taller than she was herself.

But it was so. Rose no longer said no man could win her heart. She knew that one had won it. Still she flirted, rode, boated, danced, with all save that one; still she had glances that set men's hearts beating, and smiles that thrilled them through, for all save him; but when he sat beside her her eyes sought the ground, and her cheek flushed, and her tongue was silent.

One evening, when the moon was high over Pawpaw, the old farmer took his evening nap on the broad lounge, and Rose and Charles Dorset were alone upon the broad veranda. Neither had spoken for a long while. What had been said by Charles before this silence had fallen upon them had set Rose's heart beating wildly. He had spoken of leaving the place, of going away from Pawpaw. Now he leaned toward her and looked intently into her face. She knew that his eyes were upon her, but she did not lift hers. As they sat thus, some one came unheard along the path that led from the other side of the house, and stood motionless in the shadow of the trees watching them.

It was Warren Lawrence.

"The outrageous flirt!" he said to himself; "how she leads that parson fellow on. It would be fun to hear him get his dismissal, and see how he'd take it. Does he think he has a chance with her?"

Just then the "parson fellow" put his hand on the girl's arm.

"Rose," he said, softly.

Warren chuckled softly to himself.

"Rose, when I go hence, will you go with me? I love you very dearly. I will do all I can to make you happy. Do you love me enough to let me, Rose?"

Warren Lawrence heard no answer, but, in a moment more, he saw Rose's head lying on Charles Dorset's shoulder. He could not believe his senses. He saw the man shower kisses on the fair young face. He heard words of endearment pass between them, and still fancied himself in a dream. At last he stole away, his rage overpowering his surprise as time passed on, and he felt that the girl he had sworn to win had given herself to another.

He sat down on a fallen tree not far from the farm-house, and tried to think. He had been out gunning that day, and his errand at the Unwin's had been to offer them the contents of his game-bag. It lay at his feet, his rifle leant against the great oak behind him. He held his head between his hands, pressing the temples tight between his palms, and tried to think, but thought deserted him. Reason fled. Blind jealousy, led by blind passion, took possession of his soul; for the time being he was a maniac.

For a long while he sat thus, grinding his teeth and muttering threats between them. He had no definite purpose in remaining; he only felt that he could not meet any one, kinsman, friend or stranger, until he felt calmer. The moon still rode through the sky, but now she scudded through black clouds which were gathering rapidly. Now her bright rim peeped from behind the dark masses; now she lay in a little sea of clear dark blue; now she has gone again, and anon he saw her burst brighter than ever before from her imprisonment. Low mutterings arose. The wind began to play pranks with the scattered leaves and to toss the branches about overhead. A sudden thunder-shower was about to break over Pawpaw. Warren Lawrence understood the signs of the weather as well as any man living, but he did not stir. What was the tempest to him in whose heart a wilder tempest was raging?

Soon the thunder rattled overhead. The moon was blotted out, and only bright lightning-flashes lit the scene. Prudent people had made the best of their way home, and some belated pedestrian was hurrying along past the place where the young man sat. He He came with a pert, light step, and whistled as he ran. It was Charles Dorset going home to the parsonage.

He saw the slender form a mere black shadow in the grayer darkness; and remembering how he had seen Rose's head upon its shoulder, he grew mad with fury. He seized his rifle and stood up. The broad tree boughs stretched over him, and the dark trunk stood behind him like a wall. Not even his outline could have been seen by any one who looked that way, as it might upon the road.

He lifted the rifle to his shoulder, and took aim and fired.

At that moment a flash of lightning such as he had never seen before, illuminated the sky. The road, the wood beyond, the distant church and parsonage, were all distinctly visible. The light was more intense than that of broad day. It was as though all the objects within sight had been plunged into a great fiery furnace. The figure on the road had turned, and clasped its hand to its heart, and fallen on its face, and Warren Lawrence had been flung forward upon the ground insensible. Horrible peals of thunder rattled through the sky. A sound as though great balls of incalculable weight had been rolled over the earth, was prolonged for several minutes. Then the rain poured down with a fury impossible to describe.

It brought Warren Lawrence to his senses, and enabled him, after awhile, to stagger home. But, at dawn, some farmer, early on the road, found Charles Dorset lying dead, shot through the back of the head in a most horrible manner.

He had not an enemy upon earth as far as was known. No one guessed that he had been a suitor of Rose Unwin, or that she had favored him.

Suspicion could not rest upon Warren Lawrence—upon any one.

It was decided that some one bent on plunder had attacked the young man on his way home. There had been tramps in the woods that day—unknown fellows of unpleasant looks. The crime was laid to their charge, and search was made for any trace of them in vain.

Those to whom Charles Dorset was dear bore their grief as best they could. His betrothed suffered in silence. Only one man knew her grief—the man who had caused it.

Weeks passed—months glided by. The sod grew green above the murdered man's grave, and his murderer was wooing the woman who had loved him with all the power that in him lay.

She was changed and saddened, but she was a woman still and young. By degrees she yielded to his entreaties, and at last promised to be his wife. Before Charles came she had liked him better than any one else. She liked him still. She could love no one, she said. Her one love was past; but she could be a good wife and true, and be proud of this great, blooming, beautiful animal who was so fond of her.

But, when she had pledged herself, she was more sorrowful than before. A love like this was but a mockery of that sweet feeling she had once experienced; and she sobbed herself asleep that night, thinking of Charles Dorset.

It was but natural that she should dream of him.

She thought he came to her bedside, and knelt down there; that he took her hand, and held it in his own; and, though she knew he was no living man, but a spirit, that she had no fear of him.

"I have come to warn you," he said. "Do you remember how it stormed that night—the night I died? Do you remember the last flash of lightning?"

Then every particular of the storm seemed to return to her memory.

"Go look at the oak," he said—"the old oak at the head of the long road. Look at that before you marry Warren Lawrence."

Then he was gone. She started, wide-awake, cold, trembling, horror-stricken, but all was calm. The stars shone in through the small window-panes. There was not a sound to be heard.

"Only a dream," she said, "and troubled minds give birth to dreams."

And she prayed, and strove to sleep again. With sleep, the dream returned; and thrice before the day-dawn the self-same words were whispered in her ear:

"Before you marry Warren Lawrence, look at the oak tree at the head of the long road."

Look at the oak-tree! Within sight of it her lover had been shot dead. The oak-tree itself had been smitten. Was there some proof by which the murderer could be traced lingering about that tree? Was the dream merely the folly of disturbed slumber? or was it a warning not to be slighted? In any case, she would have been more than woman could she have refrained from obeying the mandate which had been uttered; for, though natural good sense taught her that only in dream-land had she met her lost lover, still the impression that his lips had uttered the words which she had heard was too strong to be cast aside.

In the bright dawn of the early June day which followed this dream-filled night, Rose Unwin took her way to the spot indicated by the vision. Ever since that fatal night ten months before she had avoided this road. Now, for the first time, she trod it. Slowly, and with an aching heart, she passed the pretty, scattered cottages and came to the head of the long road. On one side arose a green hill, on the other a bit of beautiful woodland; at its head, like a gigantic sentinel, towered the mighty oak tree under which Warren Lawrence had cast himself down after seeing Rose in the arms of Charles Dorset, in the shelter of which he had taken aim at the unhappy man.

Green and fresh as ever stood this oak on one side. The other was dead and seared. The horrible flash of lightning had splintered it and cut away a long, smooth slab on one side of the trunk.

The night that had left its mark on her heart had also left its mark on this great tree. It stood a monument of that awful hour, when, with his love-kiss fresh upon her lips, Charles Dorset breathed his last, the victim of mad jealousy. "But why am I sent here?" asked Rose of herself. "What can I gain by this sight—I, who have never forgotten—who will never forget?"

As she spoke she approached the tree and placed her hand upon it. Her eyes rested on the side of the tree over which the lightning had passed. It was bereft of bark and comparatively flat and smooth. Had some one been drawing upon it? What was this? Her heart gave one wild bound, and then stood still: a cold moisture bedewed her forehead, and for a moment she was dumb and motionless. For this is what she saw upon the tree: A photograph of Warren Lawrence, with his rifle lifted to his shoulder. His profile, delicately defined, as though drawn by the most careful artist, expressed, in its bent brows and set teeth, the passions of hate and revenge.

Gazing upon it, any ordinarily intelligent observer would have said: "The man is about to commit a murder," and as her eyes told her this, Rose knew, as well as though she had been a witness of the awful deed, that Warren Lawrence had killed Charles Dorset.

An hour after she stood ghost-like and pallid beside him, and bade him follow her. She led him wondering to the great oak, and pointed, with her trembling finger, to that which she had seen upon it.

"You knew of our love. You laid in wait for him. You slew him," she said. "I am a woman, and do not thirst for your blood, but we cannot breathe the same air. I give you twenty-four hours before I make your crime known. After that I arouse the place. You know what a favorite I am in Pawpaw. You know what Lynch is. Ah, I have too much mercy on the man who murdered him, against whom Heaven's hand has written an accusation."

And the man who listened only looked wildly at the strange memorial of his awful deed, and, with a horror of he knew not what upon him, fled from the fearful sight, and left the town forever.

The flash of lightning which had illuminated his deed had turned witness against the murderer by photographing him upon the tree; so said one of the two scientific men in Pawpaw. The other shrugged his shoulders. It was night; there was no sun; but there was the figure—so good a likeness, too, that no one could fail to perceive it, now that it had been discovered.

The majority of the Pawpawians viewed the thing in a supernatural light, and the head of the long road rejoiced in a ghostly reputation for many months. At last, however, the photograph faded. By close observation, one could make out marks that might be resolved into the figure of a sportsman taking aim at something, just as cracks in old whitewash or the embers of a fire may be by any imaginative person. And the wise men of Pawpaw are inclined to think that Rose saw no more, but that the intuition common to women led her by degrees to the truth and to her denunciation of young Lawrence. As for the women, they have taken the artistic ghost to their hearts, and refuse to part from him.—New York Ledger.

A Startling Rumor.

The San Francisco Commercial Herald of July 9 publishes the following:

Very important information has reached us from what we deem an authentic source, to the effect that overtures have been made by the Mexican Government to that of the United States to cede all the territory of the forme lying north of a line of latitude draw directly from the mouth of the Ri Grande to the Pacific Ocean, and that the matter will engross the attention of Congress at its next session, with the greatest probability of its acceptance. What are to be the considerations for this cession of territory we are not informed, and it is likely that the point has not yet been settled. One thing is positive, a number of our heaviest capitalists and bold operators have very recently been actively in pursuit of mines lying in the territory to be ceded. Several in Lower California have already changed hands, and mining engineers have been dispatched to Sonora and Chihuahua. It is evident to us that much commotion exists about this matter in certain circles, and that there is good foundation for the report. By this arrangement the United States will acquire Nueva Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua, Sonora, Lower California and portions of Sinaloa and Durango. It is probable that the postponement of final decision by the Mexican and American Joint Commissions was based upon this consideration, and it is not unlikely that the Mexican Government may have been influenced by the attitude taken by the United States Government in reference to Mexican inroads upon our territory. Mexico has need of money, the States named are distant from the capital, and there are no railroads or other even moderate means of connection. They cannot be controlled by their Federal authorities, and are almost constantly in an uproar. In these and similar reasons may be found the inducements which have actuated the Mexican Government.

Remnants of His Grace's Possessions.

The sale of a part of the collection of jewels belonging to the late Duke of Brunswick, consisting of his jeweled orders of the various European courts, which were not disposed of at the recent sales in Geneva, was begun on the 25th of June, in London. The auction gallery was crowded, and considerable competition was evinced for the various lots brought under the hammer, the prices realized being as follows: The Cross of St. Etienne of Austria, emeralds and brilliants, 170 guineas; the Star of St. Etienne of Austria, emeralds and brilliants, 160 guineas; the Star of "Fidelite de Bade," rubies and brilliants, 225 guineas; the Star of the "Lion de Zaehringer de Bade," rubies and brilliants, 230 guineas; Order of the "Golden Fleece," rubies, brilliants and sapphires, some very large, 158 guineas; the collar of the above order, sixteen ornaments, connected by scroll work, in diamonds, 350 guineas; the order of "Henri le Lion," brilliants, rubies and emeralds, 197 guineas; the Star of "Henri le Lion," large brilliants, 215 guineas; the collar of the above order, very fine brilliants, rubies, emeralds and other precious stones, 315 guineas; the Cross of St. Hubert, specimen brilliants, rubies and sapphires, 136 guineas; the Star of St. Hubert, in brown and white brilliants, £225; the Grand Cross of the "Ordre Guelphe," in white and colored brilliants, 108 guineas; the Star of the "Orure Guelphe," large and fine brilliants, 302 guineas; the Star of the Order of Louis of Hesse, fine white brilliants, 218 guineas, and the order of the "Lion and Sun," of Persian workmanship, 45 guineas.

MR. CONRAD WEISS, of Cincinnati, had a grand blow-out the other day, and it cost him $50 fine and thirty days in jail. The Volksfreund gives voice to the complaint of Mr. Weiss, who thinks the charges excessive, as in Berlin he could have done the whole business for a dollar. The inferiority of American institutions is shadowed forth by the incident, and American liberty is not visible to the searching eye of the Volksfreund; in fact, it says that "personal liberty in America has gone to the dogs."

THERE is trouble between the Japanese and the British in relation to the invasion of diplomatic rights of members of the British Legation.

Old Gov. Reynolds, of Illinois.

There is nothing in the history of the country which so strikingly exhibits the material growth and expanding political power of a State as the wonderful increase in the wealth and population of Illinois. Long after the writer of these sketches had arrived at his majority the State had but a single member in the House of Representatives. It was beyond the limits of civilization, reached only after a wearisome journey of many weeks, unknown to the Atlantic States. Chicago, which before the late fire was larger than New York then, consisted of a block-house and the hamlets of a handful of Indian traders. Now Illinois is the fourth State in the Union in point of population, and has the elements of national wealth to an extent unsurpassed by any of her sister commonwealths. She is treading close upon the heels of Ohio, and will pass her at the next enumeration of the people. When Illinois had but a single member of Congress Virginia had eighteen, and now the Old Dominion has only half the federal strength of the giant of the West.

Some thirty odd years ago Illinois sent an uncouth, illiterate man to Congress named Reynolds. He had a strong vein of common sense, much natural shrewdness, with some comic humor. He had been Governor of the State, and Fund Commissioner, and seemed to be uncommonly popular with his people. At the time Illinois was a frontier State, sparsely populated, deficient in the means of education, without refinement or much culture of any kind. Mr. Reynolds spoke frequently, always provoking merriment, in which he joined, without caring, apparently, whether the house was laughing with him or at him. His phraseology was tinged with the oddities and quaintness of a backwoodsman. Everybody was his "worthy friend." In opposing an appropriation for the navy, he provoked the satire of Mr. Winthrop, of Boston, always one of the most courteous of men. He spoke of the want of appreciation of the usefulness and necessity of a respectable armed force for the water so often betrayed by Western men. Mr. Reynolds rejoined: "My worthy friend from Boston does me wrong in saying I'm agin the navy. On the contrary, I love and admire the navy. Didn't our gallant sailors win unperishable honors in fighting our worthy friends, the British, in the war? Didn't them dashing young fellows, Perry and Macdonough, drive a hostile flag from off the great lakes, and make the British lion put his tail between his legs?"

Going to New York for the first time on business connected with the duties of his office as Fund Commissioner, he put up at the Astor House. Such things as gas and bell-ropes were far behind his comprehension. Lying on the bed, there being a brilliant light in the room, he began playing with the bell-handle, and, finding it to yield on pulling, he gave it a vigorous jerk. It was responded to immediately. "What did you wish, sir?" "Nothing at all. Come in. I'm glad to see you. Take a seat. I was getting to feel sort of lonesome." The waiter, slightly astonished, sat down without a word. The Governor had taken off his boots, and John Thomas took them out to be polished without attracting the attention of the Fund Commissioner. After repeated efforts to blow out the gas, and finding it impossible, he went to bed.

In the morning he missed his boots. Rushing into the hall, half undressed, he shouted until he brought up one of the proprietors, a clerk or two, and no end of waiters. "My boots is stole! my boots is stole!" He was asked what kind of boots he wore. "Number thirteen," he screamed, "and pegged at that."—Harper's Monthly.

Selfishness.

We have often heard persons condemned for their selfishness, and pointed at as cold, heartless wretches simply because their exertions were directed to the promotion of their own interest or that of their kindred. This is an unjust and illiberal charge, as it is invariably made against those alone who make all the advancements in society, which tend to build up a country and better the condition of mankind generally. Without selfishness our country would fall into agrarianism and all plod together down the path of inactivity without the least improvement on anything.

It is selfishness that has made our railroads, our steamships, our telegraphs, and opened up our forests—in fact all the improvements of the present age. Such is this innate principle of men all over the world that selfishness alone prompts them to deeds of noble emprise, to toil amid sunshine and storm, and to pore over the midnight oil, in order to leave an honorable name behind as a legacy for their children. Selfishness prompts us even to deeds of charity, and even to self-sacrifice, and we may be permitted to say the greater the selfishness the greater the sacrifice. Let an unthinking world say what it will, the principle of selfishness is one which we cannot divest ourselves of in this life and it lingers around us even on our dying beds, as is evidenced by the last wills and testaments that are made nearly every day around us. All men do not possess that spirit of selfishness that makes them believe that what they possess is superior to that of their neighbors; this is sordidness.

Cure for the Hay Fever.

A neutral solution of sulphate of quinine, free from adulteration from chinchonia, applied to the nostrils with a pipette, or simple nose douche, is a certain cure. The poisonous action of quinine on the infusoria completely destroys them, and reveals the entire absence of animalculæ in their subsequent secretions. The results agree with those arrived at in 1870 by Dr. Frickhoefer, of Schwalbach, and Professor Busch, of Bonn, both of whom, with Helmholtz, the great physiologist, have successfully applied quinine for the cure of this parasitical malady.

A CERTAIN English cable manufacturer is out with a statement that the present form of telegraph cable is certain to decay sooner or later, most likely within an average of seven years, owing to the light wires with which the core is wrapped. His idea of a cable is a lighter wire covered with tarred manilla hemp.

AN ARTLESS WRETCH.—Some one has said that soda-water was a luxury not often to be indulged in by the poor man; but the following incident seems to disprove the statement: Some time ago a very seedy-looking customer stepped up to a stand where soda-water was sold, and demanded lemon soda. After drinking long and deeply, he puts down the empty glass, wipes his mouth with a handkerchief that had once been white, fumbles in his vest pocket; plaintively inquires of the clerk whether said clerk is cruel enough to "take a man's last penny?" Clerk says most decidedly that he is barbarous enough even for such a deed; seedy party quickly produces one cent, hands it to the clerk and walks off, remarking, "Well, that is my last cent; you said you would take a man's last cent for a glass of soda." The clerk was just four cents short that night.

A "Double" Bride.

A Yokohama (Japan) correspondent of the Cleveland Herald writes: "A very curious story comes to us from China. A bride was on her way in a sedan-chair from the house of her parents to her husband's abode. Passing through a graveyard, the bearers of the chair noticed that the burden grew heavier. This, however, they ascribed to fatigue. On reaching the bridegroom's house, though, what was the dismay of the honest folk to find, on opening the chair, two brides instead of one. Two spick, span new brides, alike even to a hairpin! Confusion reigned, and polygamy was imminent. Better counsel prevailed, however, and the about-to-be mother-in-law appeared and instituted a searching investigation. But even maternal eyes and instinct failed, and the old lady was obliged to give it up in despair, being heard to declare, sotto voce, that she 'never knew that girl was twins before.' Just at this moment a bright thought occurred to the father. He remembered that his girl was what the Chinese call 'rip snorter' at weaving, and he forthwith suggested that the two girls be set to spinning, and the one who came out last be declared to be 't'other.' No sooner said than done. The were put in separate rooms, and the materials for spinning placed at hand. The doors were locked, and watch and ward kept over them by the anxious parents and all the old ladies of the neighborhood. When the day was done the doors were opened and work examined. Wonder of wonders! Both girls had done the same amount; neither had a thread more nor less than the other. The poor father pulled his pig-tail and tramped about in a very indiscriminate way, while the mother sat down disconsolately in a corner and addressed the assembled company as 'hussy.' At last accounts the matter was still in a very mixed condition. Nobody is able to tell which is which, and the would-be bridegroom, unwilling to cast himself away on a duplicate, has gone to California to ease his aching heart in the 'washing pigeon,' at San Francisco. The 'Master of Heaven' has been summoned to drive away the devil that haunts the bride. In view of this true and veracious history, who will say that life is not a dream, and who is willing to cast a first stone at our Puritan ancestors of Salem witchcraft memory."

The Undertaker's Chat.

"Now, that corpse," said the undertaker, patting the folded hands of deceased approvingly, "was a brick—every way you took him he was a brick. He was so real accommodating, and so modest like and simple in his last moments. Friends wanted metallic burial case—nothing else would do. I couldn't get it. There warn't going to be time—anybody could see that. Corpse said never mind, shake him up some kind of a box he could stretch out in comfortable, he warn't particular 'bout the general style of it. Said he went more on room than style, any way, in a last final container. Friends wanted a silver door-plate on the coffin, signifying who he was and wher' he was from. Now you know a fellow couldn't roust out such a gaily thing as that in a little country town like this. What did corpse say? Corpse said whitewash his old canoe and dob his address and general destination onto it with a blacking-brush and a stencil-plate, 'long with a verse from some likely hymn or other, and p'int him for the tomb, and mark him C. O. D., and just let him flicker. He warn't distressed any more than you be—on the contrary, just as calm and collected as a hearse-horse; said he judged that wher' he was going to, a body would find it considerable better to attract attention by a picturesque moral character than a natty burial-case with a swell door-plate on it. Splendid man he was. I'd druther do for a corpse like that'n any I've tackled for seven year. There's some satisfaction in buryin' a man like that. You feel that what you're doin' is appreciated. Lord bless you, so's he got planted before he sp'iled, he was perfectly satisfied; said his relations meant well, perfectly well, but all them preparations was bound to delay the thing, more or less, and he didn't wish to be kept laying around. You never see such a clear head as what he had—so ca'm and so cool. Just a hunk of brains—that's what he was. Perfectly awful. It was a ripping distance from one end of that man's head to t'other. Often and over again he's had brain fever a-raging fever in one place, and the rest of the pile didn't know anything about it—didn't affect it any more than an Injun insurrection in Arizona affects the Atlantic States. Well, the relations they wanted a lurid funeral, but corpse said he was down on flummery—didn't want any procession—fill the hearse full of mourners, and get out a stern line and tow him behind. He was the most down on style of any remains I ever struck. A beautiful simple-minded creature—it was what he was, you can depend on that. He was just set on having things the way he wanted them, and he took a solid comfort in laying his little plans. He had me measure him and take a whole raft of directions; then he had the minister stand up behind a long box with a table-cloth over it, to represent the coffin, and read his funeral sermon, saying 'Angcore, angcore!' at the good places, and making him scratch out every bit of brag about him, and all the hifalutin; and then he made them trot out the choir so's he could help them pick out the tunes for the occasion, and he got them to sing 'Pop Goes the Weasel,' because he'd always liked that tune when he was down-hearted, and solemn music made him sad; and when they sung that with tears in their eyes (because they all loved him), and his relations grieving around, he just laid there as happy as a bug, and trying to beat time, and showing all over how much he enjoyed it; and presently he got worked up and excited, and tried to join in, for mind you, he was pretty proud of his abilities in the singing line; but the first time he opened his mouth and was just going to spread himself, his breath took a walk. I never see a man snuffed out so sudden. Ah, it was a great loss—it was a powerful loss to this little one-horse town. Well, well, well, I aint got time to be palavering along here—got to nail on the lid and mosey along with him; and if you'll just give me a lift we'll skeet him into the hearse and meander along. Relations bound to have it so—don't pay no attention to dying injunctions, minute a corpse's gone; but if I had my way, if I didn't respect his last wishes and tow him behind the hearse I'll be cuss'd. I consider that whatever a corpse wants done for his comfort is a little enough matter, and a man ain't no right to deceive him or take advantage of him; and whatever a corpse trusts me to do I'm agoing to do, you know, even if it's to stuff him and paint him yaller and keep him for a keepsake—you hear me!"

He cracked his whip and went lumbering away with his ancient ruin of a hearse, and I continued my walk with a valuable lesson learned—that healthy and wholesome cheerfulness is not necessarily impossible to any occupation. The lesson is likely to be lasting, for it will take many months to obliterate the memory of the remarks and circumstances that impressed them.—From Mark Twain's Unpublished English Notes.

A San Francisco woman, who had stepped upon a treacherous pea-pod which some one had thrown on the sidewalk, is thus described: "She kicked with both feet as high as a ballet star, gave the peculiar, shrill, feminine scream, sat down, said, 'Oh my,' smoothed down her disordered attire, looked round wildly, rose quickly, shook herself to see if anything was loose, gave a withering glance at the place where she had fallen, and, with all the spare blood she had in her face, went on with her shopping."

Among the cards sent to the funeral of Jules Janin were those of Mons. Thiers and the Orleans Princes.

A Philadelphia Invention.

The manager of a Philadelphia theater has invented a new name for afternoon performances at his establishment. He is evidently shared with many less influential persons a distrust of the designation commonly employed when afternoon performances are mentioned, and he has courageously if not promptly determined to banish the offensive solecism. Why should matinee be used when no reference to the morning is intended? The thoughtful Philadelphian doubtless pondered over this question until contempt for the poverty of our language, and scorn of the intelligence which had sought to remedy its deficiencies by borrowing matinee from the French, spurred him to corrective action. The result was Vespertine. The musical adjective, around which clings a dim religious halo, suggestive of the melodious repose of the tableau vivant rather than the strident action of the melodrama, is promoted to the dignity of a noun, and on all the playbills, billboards and advertisements of the theater in question it has replaced the Gallic misnomer so long ignorantly employed.

He Wouldn't Call.

The Burlington Hawk-Eye says: Night before last Mr. Throckmorton, who lives on South Hill, staid down town very late, being greatly interested in a game of draw poker and trimmings. When he got home he was so deeply affected by the trimming and the memory of his last hand, in which somebody had played waxed cards on him, that, instead of unlocking the door, he crashed through a window, and asked to the floor in repose. Down came his wife, half way down stairs.

"Mr. Throckmorton," she cried, "are you hurt? Did you call?"

"Call nothin'," he responsively murmured. "Call? I raise ye twenty chips. You call 'f you want to. Hic!"

Editorial notices are so common that it is almost impossible for an editor to express his honest opinion of the merits of any article without being suspected of interested motives. This fact, however, shall not deter us from saying what we think of a new addition to the Materia Medica to which our attention has been recently directed. We refer to Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters, a remedy which is making its way into more families just now than all the other advertised medicines put together. Its popularity, as far as we can judge, is not based on empty pretension. There seems to be no question about the potency of its tonic and alterative properties, while it possesses the great negative recommendation of containing neither alcohol nor mineral poison. That it is a specific for Indigestion, Biliousness, Constipation, and many complaints of nervous origin we have reason to know; and we are assured on good authority that as a general invigorant, regulating and purifying medicine, it has no equal. It is stated that its ingredients (obtained from the wilds of California,) are new to the medical world; and its extraordinary effects certainly warrant the conclusion that it is a compound of agents hitherto unknown. If popularity is any criterion, there can be no doubt of the efficacy of the Vinegar Bitters, for the sale of the article is immense and continually increasing.

An observing lady of mature years writes to say that she is warmly in favor of women doctors for women; that a sick woman will tell one of her own sex more about her feelings in five minutes than she would a male doctor in an hour. There's nothing truer than that out of the Bible or in it.

Atlanta, Ill., July 14, 1872.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.—Dear Sir: I have not words to express my gratitude to you for your advice and assistance in my case. There is not one who has used your medicines since they have been brought here but that can say with me they have been greatly benefited. Since I have been so helped by its use, six or seven around me left off all doctors and other medicines, and now use it in their families, after being cured of the same disease as mine. You do not know what a wonder it created in our city, by its restoring my sister I wrote you about, for she had been under the care of three of our best doctors but could not sit up but for a few minutes at one time. I begged her to try your medicines, and before she had used half the bottles she could go all around the yard, and has now just come home from a visit five miles away. Mrs. Thos. McFarland.

From Miss Lorinda E. St. Clair, Shade, Athens county, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1872:

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.: Your Favorite Prescription is working almost like a miracle on me. I am better already than I have been for over two years.

From Ella A. Schafer, Zanesville, Ind., Aug. 3, 1872:

Dr. Pierce: I received the medicine you sent me, and began using it immediately. As a result of the treatment I feel better than I have for three years.

From Mrs. John E. Hamlin, Odell, Ill., March 19, 1872:

Dr. Pierce: The Favorite Prescription has done me good, which I am thankful for.

Purgative Pills have become a settled necessity with the American people. Indeed, cathartics always have been, and always must be, used in some form by all mankind. In this country the pilular form of administration has been growing in favor since pills were first made of Aloes and Rhubarb, rolled into a ball. Their high position in the public confidence has finally been secured and fastened into permanency, by Ayer's Cathartic Pills, the most skillful combination of medicine for the diseases they are intended to cure that science can devise or art produce. Those who need pills no longer hesitate what pills to take if they can get Ayer's Pills.—Wheeling (Va.) Press.

Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic.—This invaluable and standard family medicine is now a household word and maintains its reputation unimpaired. It is indorsed by the medical profession and prescribed daily in the Charity Hospital and other Hospitals in New Orleans. The Ladies' Sorosis Club, of New York, recently changed their discussion from Woman's Suffrage to Hair preparations and Pimple Banishers. They declared that where nature had not endowed them with beauty, it was their right—yes, their duty—to seek it where they could. So they all voted that Magnolia Balm overcame Sallowness, Rough Skin and Ring-Marks, and gave to the complexion a most distingue (Sorosis) and marble-like appearance (dangerous to man, no doubt); and that Lyon's Kathairon made the hair grow thick, soft and awful pretty, and, moreover, prevented it from turning gray. If the proprietors of these articles did not send the sisters an invoice, they are not smart.

Not Quite So Fast, Mr. Jones!—A horse-doctor in Philadelphia was caught changing the celebrated Mexican Mustang Liniment into other bottles and using it as his own recipe. Honesty is always the best policy. These medicine-men like to follow up such fellows. It cured the lame horse all the same; but it damaged the Doctor's reputation, and benefited the proprietor in proportion. We have heard of so many Rheumatic persons and lame horses being cured by the Mustang Liniment that we advise every housekeeper, liveryman and planter to invest in a 50-cent or a $1.00 bottle, against accident. Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that Plantation Bitters is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

THIRTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE OF AN OLD NURSE.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP IS THE PRESCRIPTION of one of the best Female Physicians and Nurses in the United States, and has been used for thirty years with never-failing safety and success by millions of mothers and children, from the feeble infant of one week old to the adult. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,
For Diseases of the THROAT AND LUNGS,
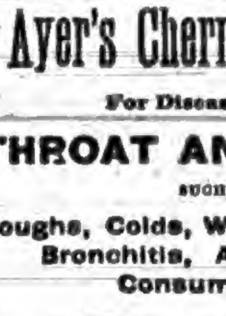
SUCH AS
Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.



The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the Cherry Pectoral has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Changes of a Century.

The nineteenth century has witnessed many and great discoveries.

In 1809 Fulton took out the first patent for the invention of the steamboat.

The first steamboats which made regular trips across the Atlantic Ocean were the Sirus and the Great Western in 1839.

The first public application to practice the use of gas for illumination was made in 1826.

In 1818 the streets of London were for the first time lighted with gas.

In 1813 there was built at Waltham, Mass., a mill, believed to have been the first in the world, which combined all the requirements for making finished cloth from raw cotton.

In 1830 there were only twenty-five post offices in the whole country, and up to 1837 the rates of postage were twentyfive cents for a letter sent over 100 miles.

In 1807 wooden clocks commenced to be made by machinery. This ushered in the era of cheap clocks.

About the year 1835 the first railroad of a considerable length in the United States was constructed.

In 1840 the first express business was established.

The anthracite coal business may be said to have begun in 1820.

In 1836 the first patent for the invention of matches was granted.

Steel pens were introduced for use in 1830.

The first successful reaper was constructed in 1833.

—Hon. Will Cumback, a prospective Republican candidate for the United States Senate, lectured on "Temperance and the Ballot." in La Pote, a few evenings ago.—The Argus says:

"He discussed the question from the stand point of a Prohibitionist and strongly advocated the carrying of the question openly into politics. He censured christian people for not being more active in attending caucuses and selecting delegates to nominating conventions and said this was the true secret to success. He claimed that the Baxter law should be greatly strengthened, and while he made no allusion to either party, the plain inference was that the Republicans were the only voters that could be relied on to advance the cause of prohibition. He especially inveighed against the practice of temperance people who permit caucuses to descend to the ranks of saloon keepers and bummers to select delegates to conventions and reminded his hearers that until there was more boldness exhibited by temperance people there would be but little accomplished in their cause."

The Hon. gentleman should visit Valparaiso sometime before the holding of the Republican County Convention and strength the back-bones of certain Republican politicians. Are the Porter county Republican politicians trying to capture the Germans, or are the Germans trying to capture the Republican politicians of Porter county, which?

The Logansport Pharos, in drawing a comparison between the Democrat ic city of New York and the Republican city of Washington, says:

"A Congressional investigation demonstrated that the municipal government of the city of Washington had become so corrupt, and the debt so great, the Congress was compelled to pass an act wiping out the muncipality and handing it over to the care of congress. In four years the debt of the National Capital was run up from $1,500,000 to twenty odd millions, chiefly for the improvement of the private property of a certain ring; headed by the Cooks and Mrs. Attorney-General Williams. While the Tammany thieves stole but seven millions from 300,000 tax payers in New York, the Washington thieves stole twenty million from 40,000 tax payres. The former rogues are in the penitentiary or punished from the country, while the latter are only legislated out of United States asked to endorse the debt obligations issued by the villians, so as to prevent square repudiation."

"Boss" Tweed, the New York Democratic robber, languishes in the penitentiary, and "Boss" Shepherd, the Washington robber, "dines and wines" in the White House. The great Republican party does "purify itself beautifully.

—When Mr. Hugh McCulloch, the London banker, comes to Cincinnati to teach the Cincinnati bankers, at their request, how to make money out of the people, he ought to bring his partner, Jay Cooke, along with him. Mr. Cooke did more to get the country into a panic than any other man, and he ought to be willing to help his partner lecture us out of it.

The rapid decent to the ruin of South Carolina is well illustrated by the figures given by the Charleston News in regard to the land so allenated in default of the payment of State taxes. In twenty-two counties there has been sold or confiscated by the State, in two years, 580,134 acres of land, equal in area to 800 square miles and throughout the entire State the sales and forfeitures reach 846,657, acres, or 1,326 square miles. As the entire area of land assessed for taxation is but a little over sixteen and a half millions of acres it follows that five per cent. more of the whole area of the State has already been confiscated for the non-payment of taxes. At this rate Moses and his minions will soon have a State half as large as Indiana to sell to the highest bidder.

Just before Congress adjourned a committee of thirty-three Senators and Representatives—Republicans— were appointed to draw up and issue to the country an address extolling the virtues of the Radical party, and giving such reasons as it could for asking to be continued in power. Now comes one of the gentlemen whose name is signed to the document, Hon. Henry L. Pierce, of Massachusetts, and repudiates the address and says he never signed it himself, never authorized any one to sign it and moreover, don't endorse it. The address itself is so full of down right lying that but few newspapers in the country have published it, and fewer people have ever read it.

The man with good, firm health is rich.

So is a man with a clear conscience,

So is the parent of vigorous, happy children.

So is the editor of a good paper with a big subscription list,

So is the clergyman whose coat the little children of the parish pluck as he passes in their play.

So is the wife who has the whole heart of a good husband,

So is the maiden whose horizon is not bounded by the "coming man," but who has a purpose in life whether she ever met him or not.

So is the young man, who lying his hand on his heart, can say, "I have treated every woman I ever met as I should wish my sister treated by other men.

So is the little child who gets to sleepy with a kiss on his lips, and for whose waking a blessing waits

A church fair divine in Troy rather knocks the mock marriage chip off Talmage's sholder. A ragged colored man and woman entered the crowded rooms and pleaded for alms. They said they were starving, and their plight touched the harts and wallets of the crowd. After collecting a good sum of money, the colored couple wiped the burnt cork from their faces; and two of the pillars of the church were revealed.

There lived some fifty years or so ago a set of table talkers, who were asked to dine because of their lively conversational powers. Now if this be any of you, never waste it in more pleasantries, but say something worth saying, and aim at the highest results. Remember Jesus evangelists took care to note.—[Spurgeon.

A Defaulting Democrat Treasurer.

The Democratic treasurer of the Democratic county of Stark, has permitted his accounts to fall into such confusion that he can not (or will not) settle, and is suspected of being "short" about $20,000. The Republican Commissioner insists that the gentleman be brought into court and constrained to make a clean breast of it; but the members of the board, being Democrats, are disposed to smother the investigation and shelter their erring, delinquent brother.—La Porte Herald.

A more unblushing falsehood never was communicated to the Herald for publication than the above, which first appeared in that paper. We are reliably informed that Mr. Hepner, the Democratic Treasurer, alluded to above, has settled with the Commissioners of his county and accounted for all the public funds in his hands; that the settlement was entirely satisfactory, and that he is paying out the money according to law. The Republican Commissioner from whom perhaps the Herald obtained the information, is the same worthy worthy officer who suffered his own tax to run delinquent for 7 years, until it amounted to about $70, and afterwards had his land which was offered for sale to pay his delinquent tax, bid in by the Auditor of the county for ten dollars. A pretty fellow to be slandering anybody. The Herald owes it to Mr. Hepner to make such a statement of the facts as will do that gentleman full justice.—Winamac Democrat.

Railroad Enterprise—The Coal Trade and Ohio Mines—Short Line to Baltimore.

Now that ground has been broken at Ludlow, Kentucky, opposite Hare street, in the West end, for the Southern Railroad, the future of that vast plain called Millcreek Valley becomes definitely fixed as the grand centre of railroad enterprise and operations— there be built the great union depot; from which all the lines now in existence and those to be built will send their myriads of trains of freight and passengers to all points of the compass. At least two-thirds of the valley will be required on which to build depots, shops, shunting tracks, &c. Already the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad, in order to transmit its immense freight buisness, has been compelled to lay down four, and in some places at the upper end of the valley, six tracks.— When it is recollected that at the commencement of its traffic through the valley the Marietta and Cincinnati had but a single track, this progress must be considered almost marvelous, especially when it is know that a fill of some forty feet, and at places fifty feet is required for each track. From the junction just above Spring Grove, a double track of steel rail has been laid as far out as Norwood, and the work of extension is still going on. The double track will be completed this season to the curve just above Madisonville, to be continued to Loveland in the near future. This will give the road facilities for freight and passenger traffic much beyond what it has heretofore enjoyed.

Between this city and Loveland, and Marietta and Cincinnati is making very substantial improvements in the line, cutting down the heavy grades, erecting neat and substantial passenger depot, &c. At Norwood station, a beautiful iron bridge is being constructed over the road to connect the hights with the Madisonville pike. The masonry of the bridge is very substantial, the stone used being thoroughly dressed. A new and handsom passenger station is also completed at Madisonville. All along the line of the road to Loveland, the company is expending large amount of money in changing grades, rock ballasting, &c.

The most important improvement by the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad Company is the straightening of its line from Athens to Ohio River. Now trains are taken over the old circuitous route, via Marietta, up some very heavy grades, requiring four freight trains of fifteen cars, sometimes two and three locomotives. When the line from a point near Athens is completed the distance will be shortened a fraction over twelve miles, on easy grades, to the river opposite Parkersburg. By this new route the time between Cincinnati and Baltimore will be shortened about two hours, making the through trip in twenty-one hours. Superintendent Peabody expenses to open this ine to the public on or about the 15th of September next.

The coal trade of this road is becoming more valuable and important each year, as facilities of transportation are added—indeed, cars and locomotive are all that is needed to make it a daily and hourly fuel feeder to the vast manufacturing and household interests of our city. The coal brought over this road taken from the mines along and adjacent to this line, is of the very best quality, both for culinary and manufacturing purpose.—the Hocking Valley coal making, it is claimed, the very best discriptions of iron. The coal from the Jackson County mines is of the same valuable quality, and is used by all the furnaces in that vally and vicinity. Now that the freight buisness is not so throng as it will be later in the season, those wanting coal should send in their orders, so that they may be supplyed before the rush commences.

By far the most delightful ride these hot afternoons is that over the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad' says to Oakley Madisonville, or Madeira, coming back in the cool of the evening on the mail train, reaching the city at 8.10. The scenery along road was beautiful—fine landscapes, pretty rural scenes, gay parties out on their lawns playing croquet or resting on the soft, velvet grass, forming together a lovel and happy picture. Then with the cool, sweet air moving through the cars as you speed along at lightning rate, one is forced to forget for a time the terrible heat to which he had been subjected within the confines of brick walls and illy ventilated homes.—Cincinnati Commercial July 15.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The counsel for the Investigating Committee and the counsel for [illegible] are [illegible] the members of the committee, to get Frank Moulton before the committee. [illegible] most positively that his presence is [illegible] or the general public. Up to this evening their letters to him, the mission of their special messenger to Narragansett Pier, R. I., and inquiries and journeys of counsel had not obtained a favorable reply from Mr. Moulton. [illegible] to-day that Mr. Moulton would probably be in town in [illegible] Moulton was in town, but no word came from him, and inquiries at his house failed to [illegible] nothing in Mr. Moulton's testimony, if it be given, [illegible] Victoria Woodhull and her sister Tennie volunteered to talk to the committee this [illegible].

NEW YORK, August 2.—A summary of Mrs. Tilton's testimony before the Beecher Committee on Friday evening is published to-day. Mrs. Tilton claimed that she told Susan B. Anthony that her husband had accused her of improper conduct with several different gentlemen, including Mr. Beecher, and that she assured Miss Anthony that there was no truth whatever in any of the charges. She denies, therefore, without reserve, that she [illegible] Miss Anthony [illegible].

The Third District Court room in Brooklyn was [illegible] crowded this morning by those who were anxious to observe the changing phases of the Beecher-Tilton scandal, when the ordinary routine business of the court had been disposed of, Justice Riley called the libel case of Gaynor vs. Tilton, instituted last week, and read the following decision:

"I entertained the complaint in this case and issued a warrant against the defendant believing it to be my duty to do so. I had no knowledge of the complainant or his position in the matter. The defendant was arrested on that warrant, and appeared before me personally and by counsel, and the complainant also appeared at the same time, when it was admitted by the complainant, and thus made known to me for the first time, that the complaint was not made with the knowledge or consent of the person alleged to have been libeled. Now, while it is true that a libel is a public offense, it is also true that it is such an offense because of the private injury it inflicts upon the individual libeled.

"Complaints of this kind usually originate with the person assailed, although it is not always absolutely essential that this should be so, and many cases occur where third persons may interfere without incurring odium or censure of any kind. As the public offense, however, consists in the injury done or threatened to the individual, it is hardly consistent with legal principles to assume a crime from [illegible] generally supposed to be the best judge of what [illegible] reputation, declines or omits to prosecute therefor. The person mentioned in the publication complained of is a citizen of Brooklyn, to whom the courts are accessible as to the complainant in this case, and he has not seen fit to make any complaint, and does not unite in this prosecution. I have concluded, at this stage of the case, that it is my duty to dismiss the complaint, not because the complainant did not have a right to make it, but because the person alleged to have been libeled does not now unite in this prosecution; but, as I may be wrong in my views of the law, I will incur no risk of error in the matter. I shall not, therefore, dismiss it now, but give notice that I will do so on Wednesday morning next, at 10 o'clock, to which time this case stands adjourned. My object in thus postponing the final decision is to afford the complainant an opportunity to apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus to compel me to proceed. If I am [illegible] in refusing in this event I shall cheerfully perform whatever may be regarded as my duty in the premises. Otherwise I shall terminate the case as I have already stated."

When Judge Riley had finished reading his decision, Mr. Gaynor said: "Does your honor hold that under the law I have no right to bring this complaint?"

Judge Riley replied that, inasmuch as he was not supported by the party libeled, he had [illegible] Wednesday [illegible] complaint. The Count Johannes here rose to speak, but ex-Judge Morris, counsel for Mr. Tilton, objected to the Court hearing anything that he had to say. The Court agreed with the counsel, and the case was formally adjourned to Wednesday.

The [illegible] Frank Moulton is the guest of Ben Butler, at Bay View, Mass. They regard his testimony as of the utmost importance, but it is improbable that he will give it.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—H. W. Sage, Chairman of the Beecher Committee, having written to Mr. Tilton, asking for the documents with which he asserted he was ready to support his charges, the latter replies in writing to the effect that he appeared before the committee and began to read the papers referred to, [illegible] lawyer, who suggested that Mr. Winslow, a member of the committee, should perform the duty of examining them. Having acquiesced [illegible] expected a call from Mr. Winslow, but about this time he was arrested at the instance of Gaynor, and [illegible] the committee that he has at last come to the conclusion that as they are "a committee of Mr. Beecher's friends, appointed by himself, expected to act in his behalf, assisted by attorneys employed against me; [illegible] tion; holding secret sessions, inaccessible to the public; having no power to compel witnesses; giving [illegible] the opposite side to cross-examine [illegible] as voluntary [illegible] were irrelevant to the case, and omitting to publish [illegible] report of my testimony all that was most pertinent to my own side of the controversy, he had determined to bid them a respectful farewell. His counsel had been instructed to take the case to a court of law, and had in turn instructed him to hold no further communication with the committee except a courteous [illegible] lyn. He said in an interview that he had not received a [illegible] asking him to go before the committee and testify. [illegible] Committee, that the matter should have been compromised [illegible] the investigation had been commenced. He said the [illegible] should have acted except with a view to effect a compromise. [illegible] Moulton, "it happens that I am here to testify in [illegible] writing by both Beecher and Tilton." He expressed regret at the present situation, but said "the affair has now reached such a pass that all the [illegible]."

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—The suit brought by William [illegible] against Theodore Tilton for [illegible] Rev. [illegible] Beecher [illegible] ent, and only a few persons besides the regular attendants were in the court-room. When the case was called Gaynor made a short address, in which he said: "[illegible] this cause to be taken to a higher court. Truth, justice and the well-defined law of the Commonwealth were my only motives in [illegible] have full satisfaction before a higher tribunal. I therefore withdraw the complaint."

Justice Riley [illegible] with-drawn, the case is dismissed."

Messrs. Beecher and Tilton have written letters to Moulton, requesting him to tell all he knows about their difficulty, before the committee, and Moulton has accordingly noti[illegible] "broast" on Saturday evening, August 8. He was examined this evening for about one hour.

Mr. Moulton, in his letter [illegible] committee accepting the invitation [illegible] and testify, says: "I have [illegible] the calamity which has befallen [illegible] all. With the consent [illegible] of Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton I [illegible] truthfully, to give all the facts that I know about the object of inquiry of the Committee, produce whatever papers I [illegible] of the same with them if they desire it, with [illegible] to give my evidence orally, or to be cross-examined. I might bring with me a phonographic reporter in order that I should [illegible] an exact copy for my own protection. Since I am now fully released from my confidential [illegible] sad affair, and, since my only proper statement must consist of truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, [illegible] reason why it may [illegible] to arrange [illegible] suggest [illegible] evening convenient [illegible] ment before the co[illegible]

The bronze statuary [illegible] now so popular is manufactured by [illegible] enough process. [illegible] is poured a coating of [illegible], which, having been allowed to set, is taken off [illegible] a mold is produced, a stucco duplicate, either of the entire statue or of such a portion thereof as is intended to be cast at a time, and on this again is formed a second mold of greater thickness and solidity for the reception of molten metal. The material used for the final mold is a composition of stucco and brick-dust. This is applied in a plastic state to the stucco model, from which its inner surface takes the form of the figure. Were all the cast solid, it would now only be necessary to separate the mold from the model and run metal into the former till its interior was filled. This, however, would involve absurd waste, and in order to economize material a solid core is placed inside the mould, leaving only such space all around as will receive the thickness of metal deemed necessary for the work in hand. The mould with its core having been thus completed and firmly hooped round with iron, is placed in a kiln to bake to perfect dryness. This precaution is necessary from the circumstance that even a trace of moisture might on the application of molten metal occasion a dangerous explosion. In the case of the casting now in question, the drying of the mold occupied some weeks. On its removal from the kiln the mold was buried in dry earth below the floor of the foundry, only the aperture for receiving the metal and the vent-holes for the escape of air remaining visible.

A Gosling Gets an Overdose of Snake.

Blount county can bear witness to a snake story, which if not quite so unreasonable as that of the Morristown Gazette, is equal in novelty by being literally true, as given by eye-witnesses whose veracity cannot be doubted. Dr. B. A. Morton, of Maryville, was called to visit a patient a few miles from town, at the residence of Mr. John F. Cupp, perhaps Mr. Cupp himself. A short distance from the house he noticed a place where there had been a pond of water, but the drought had dried out the water until it was a thick, marshy mud, and in this place there was a gosling, grown up to near the dimensions of a full-grown goose, but with few, if any, feathers. He noticed a few inches of what he thought to be a snake's tail hanging from the gosling's bill, while the young goose took a [illegible] posture, and appeared as if greatly exhausted. Dr. Morton passed on to see his patient, after which he related the circumstances to those present, when all went out to witness the strange phenomenon. Arriving at the place they found the gosling as Dr. Morton had described, with the snake's tail still dangling from its bill. Taking hold of the gosling, and placing his foot on the snake's tail, it [illegible] Doctor extracted the reptile from the stomach and throat of the young goose, much to the joy of the latter, while the other was [illegible] dead. The snake was of the species commonly known as the black racer, and was about four feet in length. Whether they had been engaged in a combat or not cannot be told, but the appearance around on the mud and ground for some feet around them indicated that there had been a struggle between them, and that the gosling had been victorious by swallowing his enemy in his throat and stomach, which came near costing him his own life by choking.—Knoxville (Tenn.) Chronicle.

Lynching Affair at Wathena, Kan.

Hall Grubb committed a gross outrage on a woman at Wathena, Kan., recently, and was committed to jail at Troy, in charge of a constable and two guards. [illegible] Chinese are raising rice in Georgia. They do it with two sticks.

Hank Monk, the stage-driver, who gave [illegible] Greeley his memorable [illegible] ride in common with all his tribe, hates the sight of the ponderous manufacture of the trunk line known as the "Saratoga band-box." He likes a "Saratoga" about as well as a cat likes hot soup. He now drives on the stage-line between Carson City and Lake Tahoe. He was driving on the same line last summer. A Virginia lady who was stopping at the Glenbrook House had a "Saratoga" at Carson which she wished brought up to the lake. It was about as long and wide as a first-class spring-mattress, and [illegible] feet high. The lady had managed to get it so far as Carson by rail, but the trouble was to get it across the mountains. Hank [illegible] or three times to [illegible] came out upon the veranda to ask if he had brought her trunk. Like that great [illegible], Hank cannot tell a lie [illegible]. "No, ma'am, I [illegible] Some of it!" cried the lady. "Yes, you may be [illegible] of it," groaned the horrified owner of the Saratoga. "Yes; half to-morrow and the rest next day or the day after." [illegible] sense can they bring half of it? Well, when I [illegible] it in two, and [illegible] my trunk in two? That was what I said," cooly answered Hank. "Two men, with a big cross-cut saw, were working down through it about in the middle, I think." "Sawing my trunk in two?—and all my best clothes in it?—sawing it in the middle!" And in a towering passion she rushed indoors, threatening the hotel, the stage line, the railroad company, the town of Carson and the State of Nevada with suits for damage. It was in vain that she was assured that there was [illegible] truth in the story of the sawing—that Monk was a great joker; she could [illegible] believe but that her trunk had been sawed in two until it arrived [illegible] and she had examined its contents most thoroughly.—*Virginia City (Nev.) Vegetable Glue.

Gum arabic solutions are frequently employed instead of glue and mucilage, but are objectionable on two accounts. First, they render the sized paper transparent, and if a piece of common printing paper [illegible] or printed surface the color shines through, and besides it does not attach it firmly to other paper. Neither can paper be attached to [illegible] board or paper pasted on metallic surfaces with gum arabic [illegible] separates from it in a short time. As a cement for glass, porcelain and earthenware, it is utterly useless. We are informed on good authority that all these disadvantages are overcome by simply adding an aqueous solution of sulphate of aluminum, two grams of the crystallized sulphate of aluminum being sufficient for 250 grams of concentrated gum solution ([illegible] gum in two and a half of water). The salt named dissolves in ten times its quantity of water, and is added directly to the gum solution. A solution of alum does not answer as well as the simple sulphate of alumina, which can be prepared from alum by precipitating the alumina with ammonia, washing thoroughly on a filter, and dissolving in sulphuric acid. The vegetable glue thus prepared does not [illegible] ferment, [illegible] mold, which will be appreciated by those using it.—Exchange.

A Princely Benefaction.

There are many notabilities [illegible] of Ems. The place is full of [illegible] interesting characters. At the Kursaal the other day, when the Emperor of Russia and the King of Saxony, with all their brilliant surroundings, were there, might have been seen a golden-haired English girl, still almost a hoyden and [illegible] like, from [illegible] youth, though she was just married. She [illegible] and dressed in wonderful clothes from Cornwall, which were angular too, and she had [illegible] look in her eyes which is common to the beauties of Bodmin and Lostwithiel. Beside her was seated a poor relation, [illegible] humble [illegible] husband stood a little way off, not knowing exactly what to do with his hands. They were all three looking bewildered at the scene [illegible] Russian prince, tall and straight as a young poplar tree, strode up to the lady, and with a [illegible] with him. She danced very well, though she looked oddly enough, and [illegible] by the poor relation, who will then, perhaps, [illegible] will tell to wondering listeners, after the harvest home and by winter firesides, how her mistress shone at the balls at Ems [illegible] loveliness, in that far-off time which is now to-day.

[illegible]

There are so many Queens of Spain [illegible] that when one of them is named [illegible] her present situation and [illegible] all alike [illegible] of their [illegible] to become so. There is Maria Christina, the old R[illegible], who of late [illegible] of sight, but who is occasionally [illegible] of at a French sea-bathing place. There is her daughter Isabella, who, like her mother, was expelled from Spain by an ungrateful people, and who resides chiefly in Paris. There is a third ex-Queen who lives in Turin and who, [illegible] back [illegible] discontinued the titles she bore during her brief [illegible] and anxious residence in Madrid; and a fourth Spanish Queen [illegible] like [illegible] never sat upon the throne, but speaks very confidently of some day doing so. It is this last lady who has sent a reply to the address recently presented to her by the Marseilles royalists.—London Times.

FARM AND HOME.

The Bale of Clover.

BY M'LEOD NOYES.

The morning sun had canted
O'er the cornices and slanted,
And men and horses panted
As they slowly plodded by;
And still the day grew hotter,
Till it seemed to reel and totter,
And never a sign of water
Was in the smoky sky.

And as I wondered whether
Would New York be rolled together
In one final burst of weather,
Like a scroll, and whirled away,
I was very near run over
By a Jerseyman or drover,
On a bale of moldy clover
That was perched upon a dray.

I had turned to talk it over
With the Jerseyman or drover,
When a single whiff of clover
Brought a transformation bright.
Straight I heard the cattle lowing
And the meadow breezes blowing;
I saw the grain-fields turning,
The spotted lilies burning,
The lusty robin braving
The cataract and laving,
And all the landscape waving
In a shifting sea of light.

Low droned the gardens sunny
With the brown bees stealing honey;
And never a thought of money
Disturbed my vision blest.
But with marigold and tulip
Came, in fancy sweet, the cool lip
Of a Saratoga julep,
And envy filled my breast;
For I thought with pain and dolor,
As I sweltered in my collar,
Of the limp and ragged dollar
Within my rumpled vest.

And so I banned the breezes
That were born, like lands and leases,
For Dives' sons and Crœsus,
Till the sun was fairly down;
For though his darts he level
Across the cornice-bevel,
He loves to stop and revel
Above the fainting town,

Where the summer solstice poises,
And the street sends forth its noises
In a hundred grating voices
Like a wail of agony;
Till it's oh, to be a-sailing
Like a finny trout or grayling,
Or a lazy cloudlet trailing
Its fleece along the sky.

Jottings.

RIBBONS should be washed in cold suds and not rinsed.

TO CLEAN marble rub first with soda and soft soap, then wash as usual with water.

THE fumes of a brimstone match will remove berry stains from a book, paper or engraving.

A LITTLE black pepper in some cotton dipped in sweet oil is one of the quickest remedies known for earache.

TO REMOVE iron rust from linen apply lemon juice and salt and expose to the sun. Make two applications if necessary.

As a simple remedy for surface wounds, such as cuts and abrasions of the skin, charcoal is highly recommended. Take a coal from the stove, pulverize it, apply it to the wound and bind up with a cloth. The charcoal absorbs the fluids secreted by the wound, resists or corrects putrefaction, and also prevents the bandage from irritating the flesh.

COFFEE STARCH.—This is an excellent starch for black calicoes and colored linens, much better than that made with water, for it increases rather than lessens the depth of the color. Take a cup of strong coffee, boiling hot, and turn it upon two tablespoonfuls of starch mixed with just enough water to make it into a thin, smooth paste. Let it boil for fifteen or twenty minutes, and stir it around two or three times with a paraffine or spermaceti candle. When nearly cold, starch dark-colored calicoes, black muslins, and brown linens with it.

BLACK ANTS.—A chalk mark, at least half an inch in depth, around the upper edge of sugar buckets, barrels, etc., will not admit one ant into their interior. The same mark drawn on the edges of shelves will also prevent the approach of an ant, as they are not able to crawl over the chalk. But if they are numerous among jam and jelly pots, take a large sponge, wet it in cold water, squeeze it nearly dry, and then sprinkle fine white sugar over it. Place it on the infested shelf, and next morning dip it quickly and carefully into a bowl of boiling water. I tried the experiment in my jelly closet recently, and killed at least a hundred in a morning. Have set the trap again, and shall continue to do so while one ant runs. Red pepper dusted over their haunts will also destroy them, but the sponge is the surest method.

VALUE OF FODDER CORN.—At a meeting of the Massachusetts Cheese Factory Association, Addison H. Holland, a Barre farmer, read an essay on fodder corn. With seventeen cows he experimented to see what its value was in producing milk; during the month of July he turned his cows into a good pasture, after having fed them with fodder corn, and they showed a large falling off in milk. He then, through August, soiled them in the stable, feeding fodder corn, and there was a gain in the production of milk. In September they were again turned into the mowing (full feed) and they fell off. Mr. Holland cures his corn by spreading it upon the stone walls, and regards it as a valuable feed for milch cows, when well cured. He thinks fodder corn the best crop there is to bridge over a dry time with; fed sixty or seventy pounds per cow when they were kept in a short pasture.—Rural New Yorker.

How to Use a Bog Meadow.

MR. JOHN B. SANDS, of Vailsgate, N. Y., read a paper on the best method of reclaiming a bog meadow, before the New York Farmers' Club:

"A gentleman wants to know how to reclaim or improve a bog meadow. There are different kinds of soil on which bogs grow, but they grow nowhere, except there is an excess of water. They are a nuisance; they start grass early on their hummocks, but it is soon so coarse and tough that no cow or horse will eat it. The first thing is, drain it well, cut a main ditch; then if there are springs on its border on the outside, dig your drains so as to cut them all off. If you have your outlet, that is the main drain, so low as to carry all the surplus water off, your bogs will die in a short time, making it an easy matter to cut them off by using a stout bog hoe made for the purpose. Do not pile them up on the ground, but draw them off, make a pile of old rubbish, wood and stumps that will make high, or start a good fire in the heap; once well on fire they will burn till they are all consumed, making you a fine lot of ashes. Make your ditches somewhat in the shape of the letter V, slanting on each side toward the bottom. Be sure and not leave the bog dirt to remain on the side of your ditches, but draw off to some upland; it will pay you well for so doing. The first year plow as well as you can, harrow well some dry hay, sow it with turnip seed in July, using guano, about 400 pounds to the acre. I have raised them to weigh 15 pounds each. If the ground on the meadow is pure bog dirt, with marl underneath, you can next year venture to sow onion seed. They are the best crop to raise on such ground, at least I find they pay the best. Cabbage is the next best, cucumbers are the next, but they are apt to grow crooked if the ground is not kept dry enough. Beets, carrots and parsnips I have tried, but they will not grow to any length, owing to the continued moisture below. I am now setting out a large piece with the colossal asparagus, as I find it takes kindly to the soil. Have tried potatoes, but if the season is too wet the potatoes will set on the vines above ground, and the crop will be a failure. Fodder corn I raise in large quantities, and with but little labor.

"It requires deep drainage; the water must be got off, or else your labor will be lost. It also requires good judgment, common sense, labor and industry to keep it so. Your ditches must be kept well, and at least once a year cleaned out. The top of the water in your ditches should always be two feet from the top of the ground; and if the soil is deep you can raise crops for many years with but little manure or other fertilizers."

Down Mount Washington.

A correspondent, writing on White mountain themes, remarks: "A visit to Mount Washington would be deprived of half its charms should we fail to descend the rocky sides by the Glen House carriage road, which enables us to comfortably and easily visit that charming resort, so cosily nestled at the very foot of this grand old giant. Elegant mountain carriages, with superb teams, await us at the summit, ready to convey us over one of the most wonderful triumphs of engineering skill to be found on this continent. Taking our seats behind six snow-white horses, we are rapidly whirled along the very edge of Tuckerman's ravine, the sides of which for hundreds of feet below us are covered with huge piles of snow and ice that glisten in the bright sunshine like masses of pure white silver, from which a stream, apparently of the same precious metal, seems to leap down rugged, rocky slopes and steep precipices until lost in the shadows beneath; now, passing by Willey's seat on the very brink of the great gulf, which is thousands of feet in depth, and separates us from Mounts Jefferson, Adams, and Madison, upon whose long and graceful slopes we can easily discern immense bodies of snow lying white in the heat of the July sun, we overlook the Glen itself, with its great stables and numerous outbuildings, situated in the heart of Pinkham's Notch; and here we can trace for thousands of feet below us the tortuous windings of the wagon road down the bare sides of the mountain, until, after doubling Cape Horn and scaling the prodigious sides of the Gulf of Mexico, it finally disappears below the Half-Way House, and is lost in the magnificent forest that skirts the base of the mountain. The descent is easily accomplished in an hour and a half, and we dismount from the carriage upon the spacious piazza of the Glen House. Here the sight that greets the eye as we stand upon the broad veranda, nearly 1,800 feet above the level of the sea, is indeed grand. Mounts Adams, Jefferson, Clay, Madison and Carter circle around us in gloomy grandeur, while the cloud-capped summit of Mount Washington overtops the entire range. In the immediate vicinity are to be found many objects of interest, among which may be mentioned the 'Emerald Pool,' 'Thompson's Falls,' 'Crystal Cascade,' and 'Glen Ellis Falls,' the two latter being by far the most beautiful to be found in the entire mountain range."

A Literal Stick-in-the-Mud.

An old man named William Craig dropped dead in the doorway of a neighbor's house near Madisonville, Ky., recently, who was a singular character. For nearly twelve years he has refused to live in a house, and for a number of years he made his home in a large hollow tree, doing his own cooking and washing. This tree was finally blown or burned down, and he dug a hole in the ground, where he lived up to the day of his death. During the war he was robbed of some four or five hundred dollars, the accumulation of toil and industry, and this loss probably unbalanced his mind, and caused him to lead this singular, hermit-like life. At the time of his death he was believed to be the possessor of some money, but it is thought that he has buried it where it will never be found. He appears to have lived a quiet, peaceable, blameless life, shut out from the rude world in undisturbed seclusion and solitude.

FORGERIES ON THE HOUSE OF BARING BROTHERS.—A continental banker, in a letter to the London Times, gives an account of a new confederacy of forgers who are already known to have succeeded in obtaining several thousand pounds from bankers on the continent. The operations of the forgers appear to have been conducted by a gang travelling separately, and working by means of very perfect imitations of letters of credit of Baring Brothers & Co., of London. The forged documents were presented almost simultaneously in several cities and towns on the Rhine and in the south of France. The watermarks have been so well imitated that many of the most experienced cashiers who cashed the forged documents believe that the paper, at all events, on which the forgeries were drawn must have been genuine.

Patrons vs. Railroads.

The following is an extract from a private letter to the Agricultural editor, written by a very candid man, but he evidently does not understand the position of the Patrons. He says:

"Is there not danger that the war the Patrons are waging so furiously against railroads will seriously injure the prosperity of the country? The people cannot do without railroads, but with three-fourths of the voters pledged to their destruction, it will be almost impossible for the roads to weather the storm. It is no small matter. The railroads are apparently indifferent, but there is serious alarm at headquarters, and many shrewd men are privately selling their stock, even at a sacrifice."

So often has the position of the Patrons relative to railroads been explained we are somewhat astonished at a man of the general intelligence of our correspondent fallin into the errors of the unthinking multitude. The Patrons are not opposed to any legitimate and necessary occupation receiving fair wages or reasonable profits. There are some men engaged in business which they think unnecessary and useless, and are only a tax on productive industry. These they are ready to dispense with. But railroads they consider as all important to the development and prosperity of the country, and that no State or country can at this day do without them. Nor are the Patrons so ignorant as to suppose that men of means will or should invest their money in public improvements without a fair and reasonable dividend on the amount actually invested. The Patrons are not agrarian levelers, nor are they Fourierites as developed by French Communism. They recognize the right of wealth and concentrated capital, but are in favor of their being controlled as well as protected by law. They know as well as others that the vast improvements needed for commerce can only be built by large means, which men will not yield up to such purposes unless they are protected in their rights, and the security of their property guaranteed. Without this protection there would be no safety in property and the advancement of the world be stayed at midday. The Patrons are for progress—for the most stable guarantee of the safety of property, and for every legitimate business making good profits.

We lay down the following as the platform of all intelligent Patrons, and we demand and solicit a full and free comparison of the past acts or declarations of the organs of the order by railroad men, implement manufacturers, merchants or other business men.

1st. Railroads are a necessity, and instead of being crippled, there should be more of them, and to this end the present real capital invested in them should pay a fair per cent. (say seven per cent.) which is as much as permanently invested capital should receive.

2d. They are opposed to paying the dividends upon the one thousand millions of watered stock and bogus bonds in the present railroads in the United States.

3d. They war not against real capital invested, but against bogus bonds and watered stock, extravagant management, defiance of law, contempt for the usual restrictions and regulations of trade, and unjust discriminations.

4th. They demand that railroad management shall be economical in salaries, rolling stock and station houses, thereby not contributing to the fashion of the day in gaudy show and extravagant folly.

5th. They demand that passengers shall be transported as rapidly as safety will justify, and be treated with courtesy and their baggage preserved from general smash and destruction.

6th. That freights shall be reasonable, no tolls being levied to pay dividends on watered stock or bogus bonds.

7th. That railroads shall contribute their just proportion of taxes and no more, to support the Government.

8th. That there shall be no more Credit Mobilier rings, bogus construction companies, or corrupt favoritism to transportation companies.

9th. That there shall be no land grants or bond subsidies to railroads.

10th. That railroads and people shall obey the laws.

10th. That associated capital either for banking, manufacturing, or improvements is necessary and should be protected by law, and that capital when so invested, when economically managed, shall yield a fair dividend. But when such establishments are used to drive out private enterprises, so that they even demand enormous profits, they become public nuisances and should be abated by the concentrated and combined action of the people.

11th. That when agents and runners, which are not necessary for furnishing the people with goods or produce, add to the cost of these things without any benefit to the mass of the people, their agency should be abolished.

12th. That the Patrons hold as most sacred under all circumstances, the rights of property and its protection by law, and that the most liberal inducements should be presented by law and the sentiments of the people, for the profitable investment of capital so that it will aid in improving the country, and not be injured through the influence of unstable protection or the clamors of Communists.

These, we are prepared to say, are the principles and opinions of the Patrons, and if our friends can see in them anything unjust or dangerous to the prosperity of the country, we, as well as the order, are ready to receive light on the subject. But it is unjust to let our opponents set up a code of principles for us, and then denounce them as dangerous to liberty or law.—Iowa State Register.

THE FIRST STEAM VESSEL.—C. T. Butler, of Brooklyn, N. Y., states to a New Haven paper that the first vessel driven by steam was started on the Guadalquiver in 1493, while Columbus was prowling the shores of the supposed Indies. Mr. Butler says that he has seen the original plans on parchment of the boat and engine by Don Blasco, the inventor, and that the engine is far more simple, and in its action more direct, than any he has ever seen in this country. King Ferdinand had the vessel and machinery broken up as the work of the devil.

MOHAMMED fiercely denounced the fatherhood of God. "No one in heaven or on earth shall approach the Merciful except as His slave."

The Pittsburgh Deluge.

We glean from the Pittsburgh and Allegheny City papers the following incidents of the disastrous flood of July 26:

As might be inferred, a flood like that above recorded, bringing with it so much devastation and terrible loss of life, is replete with incidents and events, many of them thrilling and heart-rending in the extreme. Everywhere on the scene, which was viewed by thousands of people, men, women and children, diligent inquiry was made for lost friends and acquaintances, and anxiety was depicted on all features. Rumors of all sorts were current as to the number of dead bodies found, persons lost and remains recovered. Inquiry, too, revealed the fact that many who were thought to be lost were found, and others, who, it was thought, had escaped the mighty deluge, were ingulfed in the rapid roll of waters. Parents were looking all day for their children, who may never be found, and children were as anxiously searching for parents who were no doubt drowned. Faces of the dead recovered were scanned eagerly by anxious thousands, and the undertakers' offices were all day besieged by the anxious multitudes.

The scene at the school-house in the Thirty-fifth Ward was, perhaps, the saddest of all. Four victims of the catastrophe lay here in their last long sleep. Near the door, covered with a sheet, as were all the rest, lay the body of a strongly-built man, who evidently struggled hard before he yielded to the grim destroyer. His name was Thomas Britton. At the other end of the room, with his face sadly disfigured by the timbers and stones which had struck him, lay his son, a youth about 12 or 14 years of age, named Willie Britton. By his (Willie's) side was the body of a little girl with long, golden hair, looking as calmly beautiful as if she had just fallen asleep. Her name was Maggie Hunter, and her father and mother and three brothers are still missing, and are doubtless also drowned. Nearer the door lay the body of Mrs. Thrap. Her husband and four children are still missing. Never as long as life lasts shall we forget the little school-house of the Thirty-fifth Ward.

On Spring Garden run the storm was not nearly so disastrous as across the hill on Butcher's run. Yet here it was bad enough in every way. For more than a mile evidences of the fierce flood are visible in the shape of wrecked buildings, burst sewers, etc. But two lives are known to have been lost here. In this locality a 9-year-old son of Michael Schoelter followed after his father. The current carried him against a neighbor's house, and, with presence of mind remarkable in one so young, he caught the door-knob and held on tightly, all the while crying lustily for help. Mr. August Tauer, owner of the house, opened the door, and young Scholter was rescued and taken to the upper story. All along this avenue to the intersection with O'Hara street the wrecks of buildings, mainly outhouses, shops, etc., are piled up promiscuously. Of course the damage to furniture, bedding and clothing is serious, falling mainly on the poorer classes of the community.

Many exciting episodes are told by the inhabitants of this section. Mrs. Kiser, an aged lady, living with her son and his family at No. 80 Spring Garden avenue, was pulled out by ropes, and thus hoisted to the upper story of a taller residence adjoining.

About a mile out on the run a man named William Peats tied his family—a wife and seven children—with a clothes-line in a room, fearing that some of them, in their alarm, would rush frantically away and be lost. The house was saved, and with it the entire family.

A frightful loss of life was brought about in a single house right to the rear of Center street, near the junction of Spring Garden avenue. Nobody seemed to know the persons. There were perhaps two or three families living in the house. At least this is the opinion of some who live in the neighborhood. The first parties who appeared on Center street with a skiff discovered a man hanging on to the roof of a house, on the right-hand side toward and near Spring Garden avenue. At that time the water on the street was some fifteen feet high. They took the skiff under the place where the man was hanging and told him to drop, the height being but small, as the skiff was nearly on a level with the second story windows. The man jumped and was saved. He then told the man in the skiff that his family were back in the house, consisting of a wife and three or four children. He had got on the roof and had jumped from that on to another roof, and when he reached Center street the house was destroyed, and with it were lost a mother with three or four children, and the children of another family, making in all one woman and nine children. Strange as it may appear, no one knew who they were.

James Flanagan, when he saw the coming torrent, made an attempt to save his sister, but he received a blow on the head, which sent him headlong into the flood, and in the mad coursing stream he floated for a distance of 500 feet, finally grasping a friendly tree and climbing out.

Among the houses struck by the water was a small frame, occupied by the Dillons and their little family and some neighbor's children, to the number of nine souls. Away sped this little ark, buffeted severely by the masses of timber and rumbling stones. One entire side is battered out, and the water stands deep in the ruins. Most wonderful to relate, none of the inmates of the diminutive house were drowned. A providentially placed stump anchored the floating domicile and all escaped.

In the path of the raging current stood the handsome Presbyterian Church, and but for a house intervening, it would have been totally destroyed. The building, which is 50x80 feet, was moved from its foundation some six feet, but outside of cracked walls and a floor covered with some six inches of mud, the edifice escaped intact. The clock upon its spire told the hour when the flood occurred, for it was stopped at 8:30.

About a mile further up the Little Saw Mill Run branch, just below Harbay's Coal Works, a fearful loss of life is reported. It is quite thickly settled by miners. One large block of houses on the hill, a short distance from the run, known as the "Long Row," was struck by lightning with terrible effect. The building, literally split in two by the stroke, fell over into the raging torrent below. Twenty-seven persons are reported missing from this run alone, and are doubtless lost. Other persons from the same neighborhood are also missing, but it is impossible now to give the full particulars. Just below here a large trestle work crosses the stream, and the timbers and debris from further up here found temporary lodgment, damming the waters to a height of twenty feet. In an instant it gave way, and the immense body of water rushed with an irresistible force on its pathway of destruction. Up the other branch of Saw Mill run, known as the Big Run, the loss is also severe. Here were drowned Thomas Smith, his wife and three children—a whole family swept away in a moment.

One singular feature of the flood has not been alluded to, so far as we are able to ascertain. Only one person who escaped from the flood was injured. The dead all bore marks of bruises and mangling; but, notwithstanding the toppling of houses and the avalanches of timber and debris, those who escaped from the wreck came out unhurt.

Cavalry and Artillery.

The following extract is from an able paper by Gen. George B. McClellan, in Harper's Magazine for August:

The long ranges and rapid and accurate firing of the small arms and field-guns of to-day have seriously affected the uses and mode of employing the different arms of the service. The employment of large masses of cavalry on the field of battle will probably not again occur, unless under some very exceptional circumstances; for where the ground is sufficiently open for them to form and act they will be fully exposed to such a fire as will prevent their advancing or even retaining their position. The experience of the war of 1870-71, as far as it went, proved that cavalry could not attack good infantry armed with breech-loaders without incurring certain destruction. Again in reference to the other duties of the cavalry, such as escort and patrol duty, it is quite certain that the breech-loader enables very small parties of infantry to at least annoy cavalry parties so much as to hamper them exceedingly in their operations. The fact that small parties of the German cavalry ranged so far and freely in France will not serve as a rule for other cases. In a moderately broken or wooded country two or three good men with breech-loaders could, with entire safety to themselves, very soon put an end to the movements of ordinary cavalry patrols. It is quite probable that the future changes in the cavalry organization will be in the direction of assimilating a large part of it to mounted infantry.

While the cavalry has lost something of its importance, the artillery, on the other hand, has gained in power and independence. The breech-loading field-guns can be so readily placed under cover and fired so rapidly that it is possible to place them in positions that the old muzzle-loaders could never have held, and also to trust them to themselves with very slight infantry supports. In 1870-71, especially in the latter part of the war, the German artillery was usually in advance of the infantry line, and often really decided the battle when practically entirely without infantry supports. The changes now being made in Europe seem to be in the direction of small calibers, heavy charges, flat trajectories, and long ranges; all this accomplished by means of a material so light that it can pass over rough ground, and find positions almost anywhere. A consequence of all this will probably be a large increase of the relative strength of the artillery. In regard to the mitrailleuse and similar inventions for the rapid and concentrated discharge of small-arm bullets, opinions vary exceedingly. There is reason to believe that the last war did not impress the Germans with a very high idea of the value of such weapons, but that they have reached the conclusion that in the face of active and accurate and long-range artillery the mitrailleuse can accomplish very little. There seems good ground for believing, however, that for the defense of works, of defiles, or of a position of limited extent, the mitrailleuse, or, still better, the Gatlin gun, will prove to be a very reliable adjunct.

The effect of the modern improvements upon the infantry has been no less marked upon the other arms of the service. If, on the one hand, their new weapon has freed them from all danger from the once dreaded cavalry, on the other hand the new artillery is so formidable as to render a resort to new formations and new methods of attack obligatory; for the dense columns and successive parallel lines of former years cannot withstand the distant, rapid, and accurate fire of modern guns. Neither can those old formations possibly succeed in the attack of positions held by good infantry armed with breech-loaders. Destruction and wild disorder must be the results of any such attempt.

Before and After.

Wednesday afternoon a linen-suited individual, who came from some town in Genesee county, was noticed wandering around Franklin street, having considerable money and being under the influence of liquor. A policeman spoke to him and warned him that he had better look out for himself, when the young man replied: "Look out for myself! You bet I will! Why, mister, I'm chain lightning rolled up in a ball and stuck full of red-hot bowie-knives! I'm a thunderbolt from the north, I am—a regular rip-up thunderbolt, and folks want to let me alone, they do." Yesterday morning the same policeman found the same individual lying asleep back of a coal shed. His eyes were battered, there was a hole in his head, and his watch and money were gone. "Here," said the officer, as he poked the man with his club, "say, aren't you that thunderbolt from the north woods?" The man sat up, looked around in a dogged way, and slowly replied: "No, I hain't 'zactly a thunderbolt, but I'm the durned fool who thought he was."—Exchange.

THE [illegible]

There is in every human being, however ignoble, some hint of perfection; some one place where (as we may fancy) the veil is thin, which hides the Infinity behind it.—Confucian Classics.

The King [illegible]
Came weary and sore of heart;
He called for Ilif the painter,
And spake to him thus apart:
"I am sickened of faces ignoble,
Hypocrites, cowards and knaves!
I shall shrink to their shrunken measure,
Chief slaves in a realm of slaves!

"Paint me a true man's picture,
Gracious and wise and good;
Dowered with the strength of heroes,
And the beauty of womanhood.
It shall hang in my inmost chamber,
That, thither when I retire,
It may fill my soul with its grandeur,
And warm it with sacred fire."

So the artist painted the picture,
And it hung in the palace hall;
Never a thing so goodly
Had garnished the stately wall.
The king, with head uncovered,
Gazed on it with rapt delight,
Till it suddenly wore strange meaning,
And baffled his questioning sight.

For the form was his supplest courtier's
Perfect in every limb;
But the bearing was that of the henchman
Who filled the flagons for him.
The brow was a priest's who pondered
His parchments early and late;
The eye was a wandering minstrel's
Who sang at the palace gate.

The lips, half sad and half mirthful,
With a flitting, tremulous grace,
Were the very lips of a woman
He had kissed in the market-place.
But the smile which her curves transfigured,
As a rose with its shimmer of dew,
Was the smile of the wife who loved him,
Queen Ethelyn, good and true.

Then, "Learn, O King," said the artist,
"This truth that the picture tells—
How, in every form of the human,
Some hint of the Highest dwells;
How, scanning each living temple
For the place where the veil is thin,
We may gather, by beautiful glimpses,
The form of the God within."

FEW people appreciate the large gain to the Government which results in the progress of years from the destruction of the representatives of its indebtedness. The official report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the outstanding obligations of the United States, overdue and recalled but not presented for payment, amount to-day to nearly $70,000,000. This sum includes about $500,000 of missing notes and bonds issued before the war, which will never be presented; nearly $1,000,000 of interest-bearing notes issued since the war, of which a very small proportion will ever be presented; $10,000,000 of the early fractional currency, which has disappeared forever; and $58,000,000 of greenbacks issued prior to 1869, the rest of which issue has all been exchanged for new in the past five years. Of course many millions of the last sum are undoubtedly still held as bank reserves, etc., in the original packages, and will ultimately make their appearance, but, with ample allowance for this offset, it is clear that the national treasury has realized tens of millions from the perishable nature of its bonds and currency.—Detroit Tribune.

Democratic State Ticket.

Secretary of State,
J. E. NEFF, of Randolph County.
Auditor of State,
E. HENDERSON, of Morgan County.
Treasurer of State,
B. C. SHAW, of Marion County.
Superintendent of Public Instruction,
J. H. SMART, of Allen county.
Attorney General,
C. A. BUSKIRK, of Gibson County.
Judge of the Supreme Court,
H. P. BIDDLE, of Cass County.

Governor Morton is right in one thing there is not now, and will not be any third party. A man dissatisfied with the Republicans must either vote the Democratic ticket or restrain his dissatisfaction.

The Springfield Republican is rather severe on the Terre Haute key note. It says: "On the only vital issue touched, the position of the senator is simply insane barggadocio. The speech is received by the more intelligent republican press with a disgust similar to that which greeted the recently issued republican address." Friend Cowles never was called upon to strike a key note at the close of an Indiana July, or he would have had a little more mercy.

The Indianapolis Sentinel in speaking of Morton's speech says, on the five cent taxation proposition, however he speaks with a greater confidence.—In all the discussion of this question one ugly fact remains untouched, namely, that the democrats did get along with a five cent levy and left $763,000 in the treasury, while the republicans spent more that they could raise and had to borrow to make up deficiencies. The figures deduced simply shoms that a republican administration will spend more than a democratic one, and needs a heavier rate of taxation. But what is the use of casting blame on the more fraugal minded men on account of that discrepancy?

That was a beautifull refrain pitched by Morton as the key note of the last political campaign, and re-echoed by the republican press, of the financial prosperity of the country origianted and kept alive by the great party of moral ideas—farmers all happy over high prices of produce, and mechanics and laborers all employed at living wages, and the currency abundant and good:

How have the mighty fallen since! How hung their harps upon the willows! O the sweet republican minstrels! They may "gnaw a file and flee into the mountains of Hepsidam, who e the lion roareth and the whang-doodle mourneth for its first born," but never aga'n in all our land shall the plaintive story be told or reiterated about the great financial prosperity of the country under republican rule, the sound iff financial condition of the country, the price of produce and the employment and wages of labor.

With Grant's veto of his inflation policy, strengency of the money market, produce lower than ever, laborers out of employment and wages down—and all under this republican administration—where with all is their cause for boasting or self glory?

The other charges, such as the convention being packed and the slaughter of Hon. J. B. Stoll, a German, and Shannon, an Irishman, will deceive no one; and cannot possibly even command the approval of Mr. Stoll and Shannon; on the contrary, we know that Mr. Stoll finds no fault with the convention on account of the preference expressed; and that both those gentlemen have expressed themselves in hearty accord with the democratic party and will give the ticket a cordial hearty support Winamac Democrat.

Correct, Bro. Thomas, So far as the editor of the Banner is concerned, he not onley does not regret that the choice of the convention fell upon other shoulders, but is actually rejoiced threat. He went to Indianapolis with the fixed determination not to become a candidate, and only allowed himself to be swerved from that purpose one day before the meeting of the convention at the urgent solicitation of friends whose wishes he could not wholly disregard. It was a foolish piece of buisness on his part to yield, and no one appreciates more fully than he does himself that he recieved just what he deserved, to wit: a handsome little Legonier Banner.

Democracy Ahead.

The Old North State Sounds the Key Note.

Kentucky Responds.

VICKSBURG FOLLOWS.

TENNESSEE BRINGS UP THE REAR

Election took place in several states last week, and in every instance the Democracy came out triumphant. North Carolina, the first to vote for Grant two years ago comes up gloriously Democratic this year. A dispatch from Releigh, says, Democratic gains are reported from every quarter, and the state has gone Democratic by from 10,000 to 20,000 majority. Seven Democratic Congressman out of eight have been elected. There is a Democratic gain of some twenty in the Legislature. There has been great rejoicing in the city, public speaking in the streets throughout the day, and the booming of cannon. This county is Democratic for the first time in fourteen years.

From Tennessee we hear that the regular Democratic ticket is elected by majorities ranging from two to three thousand. Judge Cooper, for Chancellor, has over Brien 3,250; over Brien and McClain together, 932. The two districts to be heard from will not change the result either way over 100. The result throughout the state, as far as heard from, is that the Democrats have swept the state, and elected their candidates in every county.

A general election held in Kentuckey on the 3d' and the result was an overwhelming de'a t of the radical party in Vicksburg, the people's ticke swept the city with the heaviest vote ever polled; electing the Mayor, the city officers, and all the Aldermen by 350 majority. The whites elect their entire ticket by 350 majority,—the first political victory since 1861. Despatches say that the Stars and Stripes have been thrown to the breeze, and every available piece of bunting is displayed in honor of the event.

The following is the Logansport Journal's account of the excursion:

On last Thursday an excursion train on the Eel River railroad from Butler Auburn and other points on the line of the road, brought about six hundred visitors who spent the day here. The excursion was given by the managers of the railroad to the stockholders brought along its lie, and they, like sensibe manboth etheir wives, sweet hearts sisters and daughters along with them. Some little notice of their coming had been given, but no arrangments were made to receive them, because those who had recieved the notice didn't make any "fuss" about it. Some body must take hold and "work such things up' if anything is done. Under these circumstances, the advent of a great crowd of goodlooking. well dressed ladies and gentlemen headed by a splendidly uniformed and excellent band of music, took our citizens by surprise, and everybody was asking of every other body, what does all this mean.

The visitors marched through the city over to the South side grove, where a pic-nic dinner was served and speeches were made by Mayor S. L. McFadin; T. Mays of the Auburn Courier, and others. Between two and three o'clock, most of the party came back to the city, and we had the pleasure of meeting many of them, and of shaking hands with those excellent gentlemen Tom Mays and Dr Davis of Auburn, our particular stand bys on the editorial excursion last May.—The visitors expressed themselves as being highly pleased with our city; but our citizens, generally regre' that no arrangements was made by which they could suitably express their sense of honor of this visit. There is a very general desire here that our friends shall come again, and send us word before hand next time The excursionists left on their return at 4 o'clock P. M and several gentlemen of this city accompained the party to Liberty Mills where they met the down train. It is said that there was at least one lively car load in the excursion train. It is no wonder that the Eel river railroad is so popular when even its stockholders are such civil gentlemen. May their shadows and their dividends never grow less. Of course the visitors arrived at home safe and in good time, for was not John Donalson at the throttle valve?

There are to-day seventeen Democratic Governors. In 1870 there were but six.

The Inter-Ocean is disgusted It says the only danger to the republican party comes from the old democracy, which has made stumpendous gains in the last two years.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 24.

Judge Mott states that when he came to town, in the fall of 1843, the public squar around the court house was partialy logged, but not burnt off. That the frame of the court house was up but not enclosed. The Main street was full of logs from the site of the Auditor's office to Ingman's, where Long's Hotel now is; and that all west of this was woods up to Stiefle & Wolf's corner. He lived in a cabin put up by James Cosper, where A. J. Ralston's dwelling now is, and had only to jump over the fence in the direction of where Charles Stimley formly lived to chop his firewood from the forest.

The first physician I am informed was Dr Ross. Old Mr. Haynes, now of Richland, used also to pretend to some knowledge of the healing art, when he resided in Auburn in a very early day. One of the oldest settlers says he (Mr. H. preached some, practised some—not christian, but medical practice reader) and—and—I'll not tell the rest I believe. The old man's practice was on the root and "yard" system. Next came Dr. Cooper, skillfully hooping up the human frame. (Pardon me ladies, I protest against any construction of the above miserable pun that will seem to infer any allusion to the present system of "hooping" up the female frame.) Next to Cooper came one Eli Pritchard. Next Dr. Oliver. Then Then Dr. Roe. Then D. Hendricks, and lastly Dr. Ford and Dancer, and here must end the list of pioneers Doctors. Ford is all the one mentioned above who is still with us. Dancer lies lamented in our grave yard, and Hendricks, having acquired an enviable reputation as a physician and mathematician, and having served one term as County Treasurer, removed to Newville, purchased farm, and become a most scientific and enthusiastic farmer, but is now a resident of Iowa.

Rev. Samuel Reed, of the Methodist Episcopal church, was the first regular minister in Auburn. He was a young man of superior talent and energy. Rev. James T. Bliss was the first Presbyterian minister. He is well known as a very amiable and pious man.

Having given a list of early "professionals," so far as our information will allow, we will now notice the equally respectable mechanical pioneers. It is said that the first carpenter in the place was James Hite, who, assisted by Lyman Chidsey, put up the frame of the court house.—next comes James Cosper, still a resident of the township. Then Mr. Samuel Ralston, Amos Hutchinson Mr. Houghton, and perhaps others of whom we are not informed.

The first cabinet makers were Lancelat Ingman and J. O. P. Sherlock, but is now dead.

The first blacksmith, I am told, was Nelson Payne, afterwords merchant and Judge. He had his shop about where the old shingle machine now is, near the saw mill. The second "son of vulcan" was Mr. Henry Moneysmith, who receltly died in Michigan.

The first gunsmith, was Isaac Savage; the second Charley Stimley, who came early, and now follows the plow. The first wagon maker was Jonathan Hall, an early settler and still a respected resident.

The first shoemaker was Cyrus Smith, brother of Isaac B. Smith of Smithfield, then Forshee, then Stephen Latson.

Bolinger and Carpenter following the manufacture of farming mills at an early day.

Wm. Abright was the first saddle and harness maker. Isaac Jones' son was the first manufacturer of tin ware, then Abram Bass and Harrison Jones, then Mr. Tridle, and then J. D. Davis Esq. Joseph Garver followed the trade of hatter for a time, at an early day. He owned and lived on the lot now occupied by Ed. Eldridge.

Outside of the town.—Kneeland Abbott of the South, was an old settler. Daniel Altenburg Esq. and Mr. Walsworth, on the east, moved in, in 1838, and John Summers and Lyman Chidsey in 1841 South-East of town. To the North, the Messrs. Husselmans and Mc-Entaffer were the first settlers. Mr. Henry Willis of Richland, states that at the raising of John Husselman's barn, nearly all DeKalb county seemed to be present and yet it took two days to raise it. On the North-East, Messrs. Rockwell and Morningstar were the first settlers.

THE BOSS CONVENTION.

DEMOCRACY IN COUNCIL.

Largest Convention ever held in the County.

A BIG ROW EXPECTED BY THE RADICALS.

But It Did Not Come Off.

THEIR GREAT DISAPPOINTMENT.

SPLENDID TICKET NOMINATED.

Harmony and Good Feeling Prevail.

The largest and most harmonious Convention ever held in this county was that of the Democracy last Saturday. Early in the morning the delegates began to gather and a great many of our Grant friends were on hand expecting a big row. The Convention was composed of as intelligent a class of voters as can be found in the county. This was remarked by all, and a Republican friend from Ohio, looking over the delegations said he never saw, in this particular anything to equal it before in any county. At ten o'clock the bell was sounded and a few minutes thereafter the Convention was called to order by electing J. A. Barns, Esq., of Waterloo, President, S. S. Shutt, of Concord, Vice-President, C. A. O. McClellan and T. C. Mays, Secretaries.

On motion a Central Committe was appointed for the next two years as follows:

Butler—M. R. Bacon,
Jackson—Jas. McClellan,
Concord—Geo. Barney,
Newville—B. F. Blair,
Stafford—Wm. Richmond,
Wilmington—Wm L. Blair,
Auburn—C. C. Walters,
Waterloo—Jerry Plum,
S. Richland—J. M. Goetschius,
N. Richland—J. M. Urie,
Fairfield—John Pott,
Smithfield—F. C. Waterman,
Franklin—Martin Hook,
Troy—J. M. Campbell,

It was then moved to announce the names of candidates for the different offices and ballot therefor, but on a reconsideration, it was decided to announce candidates first for all the offices. This being done the Convention adjourned until 1 o'clock p m.

The Convention reassembled at 1 o clock and proceeded to ballot for Representative with the following result:

Miles Waterman	101
D. Y. Husselman	52
D. D. Moody	37

Mr Waterman receiving a majority of the votes cast was declared the nominee, which was on motion of D. D. Moody made unanimous.

The next nomination was for Clerk with the following result:

L. D. Britton	75
T. D. Gross	74
Guy Plum	31
John Butt	10

2D BALLOT.

Britton	85
T. D. Gross	81

Mr Treesh having received a majority of the votes cast was declared the nominee, which on motion of Mr Clure was made unanimous.

The next vote was taken on Commissioner as follows:

Geo H Duncan	112
B F Greenwood	54
John Stearns	24

Mr Duncan having received a majority of the votes cast was declared the nominee which was made unanimous.

J J VanAuken being the only name before the convention for office of Surveyer, he was unanimously nominated

The name of J J Latson being before the convention for the office of Coroner, he was declared the unanimous choice

The following is the vote on County Assessor:

C Sheets	103
Martin Hook	55
Moses Perry	31

Mr Sheets having received a majority of all the votes cast was declared the nominee, which was made unanimous

Democratic Meeting.

Hon. C. A. Buskirk,

AND

Hon. John E. Neff.

The former Democratic candidate for Attorney General and the latter for Secretary of State, will speak at Auburn on Wednesday Aug. 19, 1874.

We hope they will be greeted with a large attendance. Let everybody attend.

Township Caucus.

A caucus of the Democratic voters of Union tp., was held in the Court House last Saturday, C. A. O. McClellan in the chair.

On motion of Mr. Philips candidates were selected vive voce.

The following ticket was nominated:

For Trustee—Sylvester Kutzner.

For Justice of the Peace—D. Y. Husselman, Jacob Walborn, Geo Wolf, A. Blodget.

For Constables—Conrad Miller, A. Y. Rosenberry, Austin Shrieves, J. D. McAnnally.

That was not a very flattering but rather warm reception given the wholesale beer man from Waterloo, on last Tuesday evening. He pitched his tent along side of the circus but Mr. Platt, of that institution, demured and he adjourned to the street opposite Mr. Abright, where he dealt out the foaming beverage to whoever would buy. Not long, however.—Some of our boys were indulging, and our citizens became incensed at this, and odoriferous eggs were called into requisition sandwiched now and then with a brick bat, and the brewer of beer beat a hasty and precipitate retreat. Though we like law and order, yet if the reverse is ever justifiable it would be in a case like this. And if it is not stopped, we think the dose may be repeated until the outrage ceases.

A CARD.

A Clergyman, while residing in South America, as missionary, discovered a safe and simple remedy for the cure of Nervous weakness, Early Decay, Disease of the Urinary and Seminal Organs, and the train of disorders brought on by baneful and vicious habits. Great numbers have been cured by this noble remedy. Prompted by a desire to benefit the afflicted and unfortunate, I will send the receipt for preparing and using this medicine, in a sealed envelope, to any one who needs it, Free o Charge. Address,

JOSEPH T. INMAN,

From Druggists.

There is no case of Dyspepsia that Green's August Flower will not cure. Come to the Drug Store of Davenport & Co., and inquire about it. If you suffer from costiveness, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, or derangement of the System, try it. Two or three doses will relieve you.

Boschee's German Syrup is now sold in every town and City in the United States. We have not less than five hundred letters from Druggists, saying it is the best medicine they ever sold for Consumption, Throat or Lung disease. 75 cents bottle.

A SAD STORY.

A Young Man Drowned in Story Lake.

We have received the particulars of the drowning of a young man named Martin Luther Shimp in Storey Lake, in the west part of this county, last Sabbath morning. Several young men accompanied Martin to take a bath and they swam to a sand bar in the center of the lake, and in returning Martin became exhausted. One of his comrades went to his assistance when they both disappeared. His comrad finally made the shore, but Martin coming to the surface, was too far gone, and sank for the last time. He was a son of Charles Shimp living on the county line, and was about 18 years of age.

Special Announcement.

We contemplate issuing two thousand copies of the COURIER August [illegible], containing a full history of the business interests of Auburn. These will be circulated in the county, with the exception of those subscribed for by parties advertising. Mr C. C. Sink, a former resident of this county, will have charge of writing up the different interests. As a good showing of our place is desirable, everyone should take advantage of this means and have Mr. Sink write them up.

The people becoming disgusted with the way things were running in Kosciusko County, under Radical rule, met in Convention on the 1st inst., and nominated a good ticket, without regard to party, and there is every prospect of that ticket being elected.

There is an attempt in Whitley County to do the same thing where the Democrats are in power. Well, if the Democracy have proved recreant to their trusts we are in favor of ousting them. Let honest and capable officers be chosen on all sides.

Attention is solicited to the fact that Boyer's of Waterloo, are selling great quantities of Paint and Oil at prices defying competition. Their stock is the largest in the country, bought for cash and will be sold very cheap. Auburn Grain Market.

Our farmer friends will be pleased to learn that Mr. T. J. Cuppy has taken control of the elevator at the Eel River depot and is now paying the highest market price for Wheat, Oats, Corn, and other grains. Bring on your grain as satisfaction will be guaranteed both as to price and weight.

The Logansport Journal pays the following handsome compliment to our band:

The Journal acknowledges the compliment of a serenade on last Thursday, by McKays splendid cornet band, of Auburn. There are thirteen instruments in this band, and its members are uniformed neatly and elegantly. It is a young band but its music is very superior. Auburn has reason to be proud of its band.

Quite a number of our Grant friends expected a row last Saturday at the Convention. We don't know whether the wish was farther to the thought, but it would have done them good to have witnessed a big fight. Instead of that it was the most orderly and harmonious Convention we ever saw.

There will be a lecture delivered in the M. E. Church on Friday, evening August 21st by Professor A. K. Virgil, Principal of the Fort Wayne Conservatory of music. Subject, music and music teaching. All are invited. Lecture free.

Last Saturday night an alarm of fire was given, by some weak-lunged chap, and the greater part of the town was moving toward the flames, with a yelp every hop of f-i-a-r, and after reaching the spot it proved to be four large basswood trees.

SETTLE UP.—Parties knowing themselves indebted to the late firm of F. E. Davenport & Bo., are requested to call at the drug store of F. E. Davenport and settle immediately. By so doing they will save costs.

The Indiana Conservatory of Music, of Fort Wayne, the most popular and largest institution of the kind in the State, begins its third school year, Sept. 7th.—Send for catalogue. 2t

We trust a sleeping car will be attached to the next excursion train if for nothing more than the benefit of a certain loving couple who look so sweetly in their sleep.

Vordermark & Sons are offering Boots and Shoes cheap enough for anybody.—They mark everything at Granger prices and sell first-class goods.

The M. E. social will meet with Mrs. D. Walborn Wednesday afternoon, August 19th. All are invited.

For the next 30 days Davenport will sell Wall Paper at cost. Now take advantage.

Excursion to Logansport.

About four hundred of our citizens repaired to the Eel River Depot last Thursday morning, and when the train arrived joined our Butler friends in an excursion to Logansport. Through the kindness of Mr. Quick, a train was placed at the disposal of the citizens of Auburn and Butler because he said the citizens of these places gave so liberally to the construction of the road from here east. And, therefore, about six hundred as good natured and pleasant looking folks as you would wish to see passed down through the beautiful Eel River Valley, and took a shake of the hand with our great big neighbor, Logansport. We arrived there in good time and were met by Mayor McFadden and a number of the citizens who escorted us through the city to a most beautiful grove. The hour of noon having arrived and our party being provided with numerous baskets containing all the delicacies of the season, a regular pic-nic was indulged in and little parties here and there gathered around the good things to which they done ample justice.

After the inner craving had been satisfied the Mayor entertained us in one of his most happy efforts and formally welcomed us and extended the courtesies of the city. Maj. Sprott replied in appropriate words, and after a few other remarks a rush was made for the city where all enjoyed themselves until the hour of departure.

We heard many compliments paid to the beauty and enterprise of this flourishing city. Situated so handsomely in the very lap of the Eel River and Wabash valleys, surrounded for miles by one of the most fertile and productive regions of country to be found in the State, we are not surprised to see her make rapid and permanent progress in the way of a city. With her scores of handsome bridges, her fine business houses and beautiful residences, with her large and varied manufacturing interests, her railroad facilities and many other attractions that cannot now be enumerated, we expect to see her one day in the near future take her place along side and be equal to the best cities in the State.

On our return we were joined by the Mayor, Mr. Adams, Director, Mr. Bryer of the Journal, the inimitable Mr. Carny whose ould Irish jokes kept the company in a roar. These, with a few of the delegation, had a very handsome grain car to themselves, and we think the arrangement was eminently proper. We regretted their return at Liberty Mills for a jollier set of gentlemen we never met.

All returned in good order without accident, and so far as we could learn there was not a dissenter to the general enjoyment which all realized.

Supt. Southard accompanied the train and was ever on the lookout for the comfort and enjoyment of his guests. He is one of those energetic, indefatigable officers who are never contented unless engaged in making everything pleasurable to all around him. The conductors were also prompt and obliging and handled the crowd with commendable skill.

The thanks of all are due Mr. Quirck and his officials for the splendid time realised, and we are sure that there is no one but who will treasure a warm remembrance of the fair and honorable course of this gentleman.

THE SHIP IN THE DESERT.

They [illegible] upon the mountain brow.
The heavens [illegible] waiting dead
Irresolut[illegible]
A group [illegible]
They gazed right eagerly below,
The flashed sun [illegible] to the west
Like some far [illegible] of fire!
The sands flashed back like fields of snow,
And yet again they gazed. And now,
Far off [illegible] they saw or [illegible]
They [illegible] the sands, a line,
A dim and distant lifting beach
That daring men might dare and reach;
Dim shapes of toppled peaks with pine,
And [illegible] lit [illegible]

Their leader turned and shook his head,
"And shall we turn back," he said,
"Or dare this hell?" The man stood still
As leaning on his sterner will;
And then he stopped and turned again
And held his broad hand to his brow,
The fair, white levels of the plain
Flashed back like billows. Even now
He saw rise up remote, 'mid sea,
'Mid space, 'mid wastes, 'mid nothingness,
A ship becalmed or in distress.
The dim sight passed as suddenly,
And then his eager eyes grew dim—
He brought his two hands to his face.
Again he raised his head and gazed
With flashing eyes and visage fierce
Far out, and resolute to pierce
The far, far, faint receding reach
Of space and touch its farther beach.
He saw but space, unbounded space;
Eternal space and nothingness.

They rested on the desert's rim
Of sand. They saw the sun go down,
Like some round, sinking isle aflame.
Behind the [illegible] peaks of [illegible]
As they proceeded. Gray and dim,
And ghostly shapes, bat-winged and brown,
And awful objects went and came
Before them now. They pierced at last
The desert's middle depths, and lo!
There loomed from out the desert vast
A lonely ship, well built and trim,
And perfect all in hull and mast.

No storm had stained it any whit,
No seasons set their teeth in it.
The rains, the elements, and all
The moving things that bring decay
By fair green lands or fairer seas,
Had touched not here for centuries.
Lo! date has lost all reckoning
In this lost land, and no new thing,
Or old, can anywise befall,
For time goes by the other way.

The ages have not any course
Across this untracked waste. The sky
Wears here one hue, unchanging hue,
The heavens one unbending mood.
The far, still stars, they filter through
The heavens, falling bright and bold
Against the sands as beams of gold.
The wide, white moon forgets her forms;
The very sun rides round and high,
As if to shun this solitude.

What dreams of gold or conquest drew
The oak-built sea-king to these seas,
Ere Earth, old Earth unsatisfied,
Rose up and shook man in disgust,
And smote his cities down, and dried
These measured, town-set seas to dust?
Who trod these decks? What captain knew
These straits that led to lands like these?

Blew south sea-breeze or north sea-breeze?
What spiced winds whistled through this sail?
What banners streamed above these seas?
And what strange seaman answered back
To other sea-king's beck and hail,
That blew across his foamy track?

Sought Jason here the golden fleece?
Came Trojan ship or ships of Greece?
Came decks dark-manned from sultry Ind,
Wooed here by spacious wooing wind;
Some like a grand, sweet woman, when
A great love moves her soul to men?

Came here strong ships of Solomon
In quest of Ophir by Cathay?
Sit down and dream of seas withdrawn,
And every sea-breath drawn away.
Sit down, sit down. What is the good
That we go on still fashioning
Great iron ships or walls of wood;
High masts of oak, or anything?

Lo! all things moving must go by,
The sea lies dead. Behold, this land
Sits desolate in dust beside
His snow-white, seamless shroud of sand;
The very clouds have swept and died,
And only God is in the sky.

LOVE IS AS A FLOWER.

BY MILLIE W. CARPENTER.

I.

The turtle-dove folds her matronly wings,
My darling, as hand in hand we wait;
"Love is as a Flower," the old song sings,
And out of the covert calls her mate!

II.

On the apple-tree boughs the foliage springs,
Fresh leaves and green leaves day after day;
"Love is as a Flower," the old song sings,
Love, thus shall our love bloom fresh alway!

III.

Summer, the sweet time of roses, brings
Pink buds and pale buds hand in hand;
"Love is as a Flower," the old song sings;
With June she scatters them over the land.

IV.

The ivy about the married oak clings,
Hiding beauty and scar with its drapery bright;
"Love is as a Flower," the old song sings,
And makes it a joy to the whole world's sight.

V.

O love! our love is a flower that springs
In my life deep-rooted and strong and fair;
"Love is as a Flower," the old song sings,
And my pride is to nourish and tend it there.

NEAR-SIGHTED!

Phil and Ben have to do some queer thing or other every vacation; and they came so near drowning in that canoe summer before last that they took a great dislike to the water, and have hardly gone near it since, except to drink. So last summer they thought they would make a journey by land as far as their money would go; and, to eke it out, they took one of Beecher's works and a book of Dio Lewis' to sell on the way. Phil can talk; and he told the people in the little out-of-the-way towns that Beecher was quite a popular writer, as good as Mrs. Southworth, with rather a moral tone. So he sold off his books and sent for more, while Ben was clearing the frog out of his throat.

They had capital times, stopping to see elephants and things, till by-and-by they came to a town in Iowa—it's so large that I don't dare to tell the name of it—and there they stayed a day or two with a friend of Ben's, and, as their money was low, they decided to call that the end of their journey. It seemed to be very lucky that they should have happened along just at that time, for there were two young ladies in the family, who had been teaching drawing and music in an academy, and wanted to go back to their homes in the East; and, "could they go in company with the young men? O, how nice it would be!"

Let's see; Phil was eighteen that June, not a fresh any more, but almost cut and dried into a soph. O, Phil, I didn't put a "t" to the end of that! Bless your old heart! you are a dear, nice, gullible darling—so you are; and, though you do get "sold" sometimes, we know your brains are sound—sound for a boy. Not that Phil can see into things as we girls can; near-sighted to begin with, and won't wear spectacles. And that state of things does place a body at the mercy of an unfeeling world.

His objection to spectacles is, that they would make him look like a professor of Greek. You see he thinks he looks as old as anybody, and feels older yet.

Well, these young ladies were named Ann Shotwell and Fanny Hitt. Miss Hitt was a nice, friendly little thing. Ben couldn't remember much about her; but as for the other one—Miss Shotwell—he said she was a stunner! seemed to carry all before her; and people gazed at her when she came into the cars.

I couldn't make out what the secret of it was, for Ben's descriptive powers are weak.

"Was it her dress?"

He couldn't exactly say.

"She was got up killingly. Those what-you-call-'ems sewed on the skirt, with a tassel to it, hitched on somewhere, and some fizzy-me-jigs around the head; lots of flummy-diddles tacked to her somehow."

All he could describe rationally was her boots.

"French kids, all flowered off, and fitted like a duck's foot in a mud puddle."

But if Ben can't talk he can see, and there's where he has the advantage of Phil. He saw at once that Fanny Shotwell was a played-out coquette, and "floured her face, and streaked on a little red." That must have been before they began to travel. She wouldn't dare be painted in the cars—would she?—with dust blowing so.

She wore two long braids flopping down her back; and Ben thought they were "a dead sure thing for certain," and grew on her head. But a gust of wind happened to blow under them and he happened to see where they were tied on!

That finished him, he said; but he did not mention it to Phil, for Phil was growing very gallant all of a sudden.

Just fancy that boy! She was a dozen years older than he was, if she was a day, and ought to have been sort of a good auntie to him, and told him when his collar was one-sided, and helped form his manners. But instead of that the old thing undertook to flirt with him. Ben said it was a fact. When they stopped at hotels she played and sang straight at Phil. Her voice was sweet, but too much in her throat to suit Ben. He hates operatic. But it took Phil right off his feet.

"Did you ever?" said he to Ben. "If she sings like that now, what'll she do by-and-by?"

"Why, how old do you call her?" said Ben.

"About Kate's age, I guess," replies Phil.

I was sixteen that month! Ben thought he should choke. Phil was very far gone indeed, and it was hard work getting him to bed, he was so absorbed in the moon.

Ben didn't go into particulars, and I had to picture it out for myself; but I could almost seem to see the whole thing: those two creatures—Phil and the ancient—sitting together in the cars smiling at nothing; Phil stroking his chin, where the "underfringe" ought to be; popping to find ancient's old handkerchief, or open the window, or shut it; saying "will you allow me?" when she can't fasten her old gloves.

When I can't fasten my gloves, its "why don't you take your boot-buttoner, Kate. That'll fetch it!" But this is "another, not a sister," as the song says; and it makes all the difference, you know.

Shouldn't wonder if he is quoting poetry at her. He despises poetry; but he's learned two or three lines, hearing me say them over. Antiquity smirks and rolls up her eyes to the bell-rope.

I wish I did know how they do it—these flirts. Not that I would act so myself! It would be more excusable in a little girl like me; but, young as I am, I'd scorn such silly behavior.

Phil runs his fingers through his hair, and leaned forward in the most insinuating manner to hear her talk, with the cars going rattlety-bang. And there are Ben and the other one looking on laughing in their sleeves.

They go by the Canada route, and stop at Niagara Falls; and the night before they get there they travel a little in the evening, and reach Niagara about ten o'clock. Now, here is where the joke comes in.

It was a lovely evening. Diana—that's the moon—was daintily picking her way through the white clouds overhead, and Phil and Miss Ann Tiquity sat looking at her with a very moonstruck expression. They had talked themselves all out; and that boy, I presume, was conjugating Latin verbs to himself; that's what he does when he's trying to think up something to say. Miss Ann was sitting by the window, a few inches nearer the moon than he was, and more sentimental, if anything.

"Why can't somebody sing?" said she. "We must have music by moon light."

She was such a gushing little thing, you know? Never stopped to think there was anybody else in the car but their party, and struck up, "Ane I lo'e dear," with the very top notes of her throat. Everybody sat stock still and listened, as if a nightingale had flown in and was giving a solo.

But all in a second, just as the last strain was dying away, Miss Ann was seized with a violent fit of coughing. The evening air was probably damp, and tickled her throat, for she had let in barrels and barrels of it, opening her mouth so wide. At any rate, she coughed so hard that she had to put her head out of the window to prevent strangulation. Little Miss Hitt felt in her pocket for a lozenge, and Ben said to Phil, laughing:

"You'd better pat her on the back."

But it was over in half a minute, and Phil was just settling himself comfortably, when she drew in her head from the window, and seized him by the shoulder, crying out,—

"My teeth are gone, my teeth are gone!"

Phil jumped as if he was shot fr.m a catapult, if you know what that is. He hadn't the faintest idea what she meant. He had heard of Johnny Monroe's coughing up a spear of herd's grass, and uncle Nathan a kernel of corn; but the idea of coughing out your teeth—or your tongue!

"What! what! what!"

"Stop the cars!" cried she.

And up sprang dear old Phil, and made a dash at the conductor. But Ben caught him and held him back, for what was the use of stopping the train, when it was a lightning express, and your teeth a dozen miles back of your mouth by this time, rolled in a sand-heap or ground into a tooth-powder?

The bewildered ancient was half frantic, and said she should die, she should on the spot. She didn't, though. Folks don't very often.

Miss Hitt tried to soothe her, but it was of no use; she kept groaning:

"My teeth are gone, my teeth are gone!"

It was too bad, I declare. And then Miss Hitt explained to the boys that they were only temporary, (so I should think!) and had been growing loose, and she had intended all along to get a permanent set as soon as they reached Boston; so it wasn't so much matter, after all.

"I won't go to Niagara. I'll switch off and leave you! I won't be seen looking so!" cried the luckless Miss Shotwell, knocking herself about at such a rate that her hat collapsed, and her hair came off, and she was the picture of an Irish woman recovering from a drunken fight. Five minutes ago she had been "the mirror of virtue and the rose of delight." No wonder Phil stared.

As soon as she came to her senses she borrowed Miss Hitt's veil, and never took it up for the rest of the journey without clapping her handkerchief to her mouth. She didn't attempt any more of her bewitching smiles or her operatic songs, I can tell you. She lost her opinion of the moon, and didn't take any more notice of Niagara Falls than she would of a fulling-mill.

They were all ready to pity her, only she was fractious, and mumbled and grumbled like a crazy old granny, and made Miss Fannie take her meals upstairs to her room, as she had been a black slave.

Phil was cured completely. He dropped from the clouds slap-dash, and came down so hard that it stunned him a little. I guess he had to conjugate Latin some time before he felt natural.

It was great fun for Ben, and I suppose he won't stop teasing that boy to the end of time. I thought I'd have my little fling, too; so I said to him today, as innocent as Mary's lamb

"By the way, Phil, who was it you and Ben traveled with last summer?"

"A couple of Yankee school-ma'ams," says Phil, and began to whistle.

"O; I took it, from what Ben said, that they were sharpshooters; for I understand him one of them Shot well, but didn't Hitt, because something happened about that time to the—what do you call the bullet-end of the gun?—the mouth-piece, I think."

SOPHIE MAY.

A Woman Dies Under the Influence of Chloroform.

A widow woman named Bridget Gleason, residing at No. 162 University street, died yesterday while under the influence of chloroform in the office of Dr. H. F. Biggar. She went in the morning to the clinic at the Homeopathic College, on Prospect street, and requested that a needle which some time since had, by some accident, penetrated her thigh, might be extracted, as it caused her great pain. She was sent to the office of Dr. Biggar, who told her that the operation was a simple one, and that it could be easily performed without the use of chloroform. Her daughter, however, who accompanied her, insisted that chloroform should be administered, and as the doctor, after examining the patient, found her in a good condition for taking it, he consented to comply with her daughter's request. He was assisted by Dr. Frost, who carefully felt the patient's pulse as the chloroform was being administered. She had taken, however, but about twenty-five drops, when she was suddenly seized with a spasm. Although such spasms are frequent when the patient is about to undergo a surgical operation, and seldom occasion alarm, Dr. Biggar instantly desisted from giving the choroform and applied the most powerful restoratives. His labors were vain, however, and after working over the patient for nearly an hour without producing any sign of consciousness, he was convinced that further effort would be of no avail, and that the unfortunate woman was dead.

The Coroner was immediately notified, and Dr. Biggar, determined that in justice to himself a thorough investigation should be made, insisted upon a post-mortem examination. The inquest will be held this morning at the Central Station in the office of Captain McMahon.—Cleveland Leader.

How Chicago Was Destroyed.

At least one class of the population in Chicago profited by the fire—the dead-beats up town. One would rush into a saloon with his face smoky and dusty, and cry: "Gimme some whisky, Dick. I tell you, gentlemen, this is a fire. I've been through a good many fires, but this is the boss scorcher. My throat's like a lime-kiln." Timid or lazy suburban resident, of a simple and generous disposition—"So you've just come up? Take something?" Dead-beat—"Don't mind if I do. Gimme some whisky, Dick. Yes, sirree, just left it. When I think of Fourth avenue, the houses blowing up on all sides, people kiting up into the air, nigger babies roasting till the firemen had to put handkerchiefs up their noses—I tell you, gentlemen, it is awful." Barkeeper, his curiosity overcoming his habitual caution—"It must have been. What'll you have, Billy?" "Gimme some whisky, Dick! Awful? You better believe me. Whew! I see Lake Shore depow take; says I, good-bye Chicago! But then the wind shifted, and I knew we was all right on this side." Another auditor—"The Pacific burned? Dear me! Ask the gentlemen what they will have." "Gimme some whisky, Dick. Yes, sir, the Pacific caught just as I left, and Dave Gage was there, crying like a child." One barkeeper on Madison street made audible resolves to close up and go down and see it as every yarn he heard, but business was so brisk he was loth to do so, till about half-past one Wednesday morning, when he heard that the Exposition building had been burned, with a large and fashionable audience within. With the remark: "Six hundred of 'em briled! Grazing Nebuchadnezzar! I'll shut up and go." He went.

CASTELAR is coming to the front in Spain once more. In a speech in Madrid recently he gave encouragement to the hope of a coalition between the Radicals and Conservative Republicans, who are considered their natural allies, and of the perpetuation of the republic.

The Rich Men of Britain.

A million of British peasants are reported ill at ease, and the reader will not wonder that it is so in the face of surrounding facts. For example, the English county of East Sussex has 900 square miles, and is almost exclusively the property of the Duke of Richmond and the Baron of Leconfield. The young Marquis of Bute has an income of £300,000 a year, and not long ago his agent spent nearly £2,000,000 in repairing and altering his magnificent manor and estate of Crichton Mount Stuart, the Marquis' residence near Cardiff. Mr. Bright once instanced the case of a nobleman with an income of £120,000, who annually spent £40,000, and laid down the remaining £80,000 in "rounding" his property, by buying up every parcel of ground contiguous to his estate which he could induce the owners to sell. An article in Harper's gives about a score of names with the following incomes:

One quarter of Scotland is owned by eight noblemen, of whom the chief are the Dukes of Hamilton, Buccleuch, and Southerland, the Marquis of Bute, and the Earl of Breadalbane. The Duke of Westminster, besides Belgrave and Eaton Squares, and a large part of the fashionable quarter of Westminster, owns the magnificent manor of Eaton Hall, near Chester, Halkin House in Flintshire, and Motcombe House in Dorsetshire, each surrounded by thousands of acres. The Duke of Bedford owns the group of squares in that central part of London called "Bloomsbury;" also Covent Garden Theater and Covent Garden Market, many streets leading from the Strand on either side, and blocks of houses at the West End, and one of the most splendid of English rural estates at Woburn Abbey. The Earl of Derby owns almost square miles of blocks in Liverpool and Knowsley, his ancestral country-seat is larger than most New England townships. The Duke of Sutherland is able to ride by rail from sunrise to sundown on his Scottish estates, and has five notable castles,—Dunrobin, House of Tongue, Trentham, Lilleshall, and Chifden. The Duke of Devonshire is the lord of eight castles, all of which are rural palaces fit for royalty, among them peerless Chatsworth and Hardwicke Hall. In London he has a residence on Picadilly, where land can be worth scarcely less than £10 a square foot, surrounded by gardens. The Earl of Dudley, Earl Brownlow, the illiterate Duke of Portland, Baron Portman, the Duke of Northumberland, the Earl of Abergaveny, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Duke of Rutland, and Marquis Camden have immense rural properties, only exceeded in value by the quarters they own in central parts. The Duke of Buccleuch has ten castles, in each of which a liberal domestic establishment is kept up all the year. The Scottish Earls of Mansfield, Stair, and Glasgow possess each five castles, vast and spacious edifices, the centers of splendid estates, which are to a considerable degree shut off from cultivation, and used as deer-parks and hunting-grounds.

Kidnapping.

Certain crimes—infanticide, suicide, homicide—show a tendency at certain times to multiply themselves. The reporters notice it, and tell us of "An Epidemic" of this, that, or the other. For a thousand reasons it is to be hoped that we are not to have an epidemic of child-stealing. In the first place, it is a felony easy of accomplishment. Unless children are kept in burglar-proof safes, they will wander away from their guardians, and they will go off with strangers who make them pretty promises. We shall not attempt to depict the agony of a parent thus bereaved, and feeling as the hope of recovery becomes smaller and smaller that the death of the child would have been less intolerable. Another painful feature of the matter is the necessity which it may entail of making terms with the child-stealer. This may be the only resource, though after all, it is a compounding of a felony. But what is a parent to do? Under such circumstances, he must make the best bargain possible. How can he be expected to wait patiently for the necessarily slow processes of the police? In nine cases out of ten he will, if able, buy back his lost child at any price. The thief knows this—it is the uncontrollable feeling upon which he has been speculating from the very first. There seems to be no resource save the prompt and severe punishment of the child-stealer whenever he can be apprehended. Imprisonment for life appears to be the least penalty adequate to such a horrible crime. Thousands of wretches have been hanged for offenses infinitely smaller.

The Heirs of Abbotsford.

The fact that a near heir to the Abbotsford mansion and the other property left by Sir Walter Scott is a citizen of the United States has probably been forgotten by most persons, if it were generally known. The Philadelphia Press alludes to it in noticing the coming marriage of Miss Hope Scott to Mr. Maxwell. It says: "Miss Hope Scott and her betrothed are members of the Church of Rome. If she had died unmarried, or if she should die without leaving a child, the Abbotsford estate and mansion, to which she succeeded on her mother's death, will pass to the eldest son of the late Major Thomas Scott, elder brother of Sir Walter, who had finally settled in Canada, where he died in 1823. His heir is understood to have made a home, years ago, either in Maine or Vermont, and must now be far advanced in years. It has been legally provided that the husband of the Lady of Abbotsford shall take his wife's name. Therefore, she will be known hereafter not as Mrs. Maxwell, but as the Hon. Hope Scott."

THE kidnappers of the Ross boy at Philadelphia want $20,000 for the return of the child to his parents. The Mayor of that city very properly makes a move against the child-stealers, and offers the same amount for the persons of the abductors. Now it is $20,000 vs. $20,000. Which will get it, whether the thieves or the detectives, remains to be seen. If not the latter, they had better disorganize and no longer follow a profession which can be outwitted by a couple of brutal rascals, who "be ready to negotiate."—Chicago Journal.

The Rafflesia Arnoldi.

In 1818, Dr. Joseph Arnold, a young English naturalist, accompanied Sir Stamford Raffles, the agent of the East India Company at Sumatra, upon a tour of exploration into the interior of the province. In a letter by Dr. Arnold, giving an account of his expedition, he writes: "Arrived at Pulo Lebbar, on the banks of the river Manna, I delighted in the anticipation of reporting that I had discovered what is, possibly, the most surprising prodigy that exists in the vegetable world. I had gone aside for some little distance, when one of my Malay servants ran up to me with astonishment marked on his features, and exclaimed, 'Come here, sir; come and see a new flower—very large, magnificent, extraordinary!' I went to the place to which the Malay directed me!" The extract here breaks abruptly; but the sight that met the eyes of the young botanist was the Rafflesia Arnoldi, the largest flower known. It was named after the two who were associated in the discovery; but the promising savant, Dr. Arnold, lived to make no further additions to science. Sir Stamford Raffles had, soon after the date of his letter, the sad duty of reporting to the Linnæan Society the death of its youthful member.

The R. Arnoldi is a parasitic plant growing upon the stem of a species of the cissus—vines nearly allied to the grape, and growing in hot countries. The Rafflesia has neither stem nor leaves—a few scales, surrounding the base of the flower, performing the office of the latter. The bud is like a hard, purple, middle-sized cabbage. When expanded the blossom measures three feet in diameter and nine feet in circumference. It requires three months for its full development. The flower has five petals, from one-fourth to three-fourths of an inch in thickness, one foot in length and one foot in width at the base. The nectorine or honey-cup at the centre of the flower has a capacity of twelve pints. The weight of the whole is fifteen pounds. The petals are of a brilliant orange-yellow, and are covered with protuberances of a brick-red color. The huge pistil, rising from a dark violet ground, looks like a "blaze in a bowl of punch." The odor of the flower is strong and fetid—so much so that the instinct of flesh-flies is sometimes deceived by it, and they deposit their eggs upon the petals, and thus their progeny inevitably perish.

Alpaca.

This useful material, so much in demand at the present day, is manufactured from the wool of the alpaca goat, a species of the llama, whose home is in the mountain regions of Peru. It lives on the coarsest fare, the scanty herbage that springs up in the fastness of the rocks; but it has a beautiful, wavy coat of light, chestnut brown wool, which is nearly a foot in length, very soft and elastic, and nearly as fine as the Cashmere goat. This is sheared off every year or two, and sent in little bales or ballots to England or France, or wherever it may be manufactured. It is then washed, dried, combed and finally sorted, preparatory to being manufactured into the yarn from which is made the cloth, the material undergoing thirteen or fourteen different processes in the course of its preparation. Ladies will admit that it is worth the trouble, however. Half a century ago, this durable fabric was unknown to us. But about that time some sacks of queer, fibrous material, which looked like "superannuated horse-hair," were landed on Liverpool docks. There they lay a long time unsold, till one day a young man of an inquiring turn of mind, in peering about, noticed some of their contents sticking out of a hole in one of them. He looked curiously at it, rubbed it in his fingers, and finally pocketed it and walked off. The result was—alpaca. He had discovered the "horse-hair" to be the wool of the alpaca goat, and was ingenious enough to conceive the idea of weaving it into dress goods, and enterprising enough to carry his idea out."

Crops in Europe.

The prospect for the crop of wheat is good in England and Ireland, but their harvest is yet some weeks hence, and the dangers there are rains in harvest. Their crop, if good, will not supply the Kingdom by 80,000,000 bushels. From France there are conflicting reports. Harvest was in progress, and in some departments was good, while in others short. That the prices they are paying for foreign wheat in the ports of France give a better insight into what prudent men consider the volume of their crops, is shown by the fact that they are paying $2.00 per bushel for wheat from San Francisco, New York, Montreal, Chili, and Toganzog. In Berlin wheat is declining, showing a growing confidence in the German crop. From Austria, Hungary, and Russia, the reports are favorable for a medium crop; though at Odessa, the greatest Russian wheat shipping port, and which more directly comes in competition with American wheat, the price is firm and buoyant.

How a King Was Punished.

Frederick II., of Prussia, was one day walking along the terrace at Sans Souci, and noticed that his beautiful large grapes were suffering severely under the appetites of the sparrows. Enraged at the impudent thieves, he offered a price for their heads, and in a few weeks there was not a single sparrow in the royal gardens. In the following year, however, not a single grape ripened, and the Prussian monarch found that as soon as the sparrows disappeared the grubs, caterpillars and snails began to commit their depredations unmolested, and the King found out that, although the sparrows were great thieves, their useful qualities far more than counterbalanced their bad ones. He repealed his former edict, and since that time sparrows and grapes have prospered abundantly at Sans Souci.

DURING the last fiscal year there was an issue of 138,815,500 stamped envelopes, by the United States Postoffice Department, an excess over the preceding year of 21,599,650.

Religious Liberty in Germany.

We hear a good deal of complaint from our German citizens of the unjust and illiberal striction of their wonted and innocent amusements on Sunday; but, according to the Stuttgart correspondence of the Boston Advertiser, Germany itself is not a land of perfect religious liberty. In illustration of this fact, the writer alluded to relates an incident which recently occurred in his experience. Thursday, the 14th of May, was a church-holiday; therefore the beer-shops and the streets were full, and every man took his pastime as it suited him. But it happened that three young American lads, temporarily residing in Stuttgart, were engaged in building a boat in which to journey down the Rivers Neckar and Rhine. All unconscious that the observance of this church-holding was obligatory upon them, the boys pursued their work on the boat with their usual diligence and enthusiasm. While so occupied, a Stuttgart workingman discovered them, and immediately ran for the police. On being confronted by the official, and informed that their business was unlawful on a church-day, they immediately ceased work, pleading ignorance in extenuation of their fault. Their names were taken, however, and the next day they were summoned before the Police Commissioner, and mulcted in a fine. The writer, whose son was one of these boys, makes no fuss over the affair, but simply remarks that the Germans should "howl a little less about the American Sunday while they have such week-day 'Sundays' at home."

A Marrying Marquis.

THE Marquis of Waterford seem to have "ranged" himself, as the French say. Every one will remember how he eloped with the wife of Capt. Vivian, then member of Parliament for Truro. He did make what reparation he could by marrying the lady after she was divorced; but a few months ago she died, and the Marquis is now free to enter upon a marriage which offers a better prospect of happiness. His fiancee is the only daughter of the Duke of Beaufort, and was born in 1855. The Marquis is twelve years older.—Liverpool Mercury.

A TOUCHING APPEAL.—An assault in which eggs were freely used calls forth the following appeal from a Missouri writer: "Give us back the palmy days of the inquisition, or the foul fires of witchcraft lifting their black columns to the sky, but let the low principle of such midnight cliques, in whose breast is lurking in embryo the feelings of a highwayman, like the putrid yeast of death that often spreads throughout the physician's frame and reduces it to a living skeleton, be banished from the nation over whose domain the star of empire now trembles in its last revolution in the historic heavens."

A GOOD, convenient, and effectual remedy for stings of wasps, bees and other insects is simply to place a key over the spot stung, press it hard into the flesh, and when taken off the poison will be on the surface, where it can do no harm. A thimble with a closed top will answer the purpose, but not so well.

THE National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America had, on the 1st day of July, $3,366,888 in good and available assets, while its total liabilities at the same date were $2,123,269. The loans secured by first mortgages amount to considerably more than the total liabilities. The low rates, the large capital, the definite contracts, and the liberal policies of the National, render it especially worthy the confidence and the patronage of the public. It is a national company, chartered by Congress. The business is done at the principal branch office, Chicago, Illinois. John V. Farwell, President. Applications for insurance can be made through any of the agents. Applications for agencies should be made to the Chicago office.

To have the money needlessly spent every year would give substantial comfort to almost every person. To have the money saved by buying SILVER-TIPPED boots and shoes would buy each parent every year a new pair of shoes.

VEGETINE

PURIFIES THE BLOOD AND RESTORES THE HEALTH.

SEVENTY-ONE YEARS OF AGE.

EAST MARSHFIELD, Aug. 23, 1870.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—I am seventy-one years of age; have suffered many years with Kidney Complaint, weakness in my back and stomach. I was induced by friends to try your VEGETINE, and I think it the best medicine for weakness of the Kidneys I ever used. I have tried many remedies for this complaint, and never found so much relief as from the VEGETINE. It strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Many of my acquaintances have taken it, and I believe it to be good for all the complaints for which it is recommended.
Yours truly,
JOSIAH H. SHERMAN.

EXPERIENCE OF YEARS.

CHARLESTOWN, Mass., March 19, 1869.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:
This is to certify that I have used your "Blood Preparation" (VEGETINE) in my family for several years, and think that for Scrofula or Cankerous Humors, or Rheumatic affections, it cannot be excelled; and as a blood purifier and Spring medicine it is the best thing I have ever used, and I have used almost everything. I can cheerfully recommend it to any in need of such a medicine.
Yours respectfully,
MRS. A. A. DINSMORE,
19 Russell Street.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

BOSTON, Feb. 13, 1871.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:
Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from general debility. VEGETINE was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefited by its use. I procured the article, and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health.
Respectfully yours,
U. L. PETTINGILL,
Firm of S. M. Pettingill & Co., 10 State St., Boston.

VEGETINE extends its influence into every part of the human organism, commencing with its foundation, correcting diseased action and restoring vital powers, creating a healthy formation and purification of the blood, driving out disease, and leaving Nature to perform its allotted task. VEGETINE is sold by all druggists.

How was it, we asked ourselves, that the word "bitters" had grown to be a synonym for gin, whisky, [illegible] alcoholic stimulants, to which it was applied indiscriminately? The Best Sewing Machine.

The best sewing machine for all purposes made is, beyond question, the Remington. It will do a greater variety of work, with less noise and physical exertion, than any in the market. It is so simple that a child can man[illegible] [illegible] ary [illegible]

This point we desire to call especial attention to. The Remington is made by the Remington Arms Co., of Ilion, N. Y., whose arms are known the world over. They hav[illegible] of the governments of the world, for the reason that they never turned out a poor weapon, nor, indeed, any but the very best. Quality is what they pride themselves upon, for it was their capital at the beginning. The same rigid honesty that they held to in the manufacture of arms, they have carried into their sewing machine. VINEGAR BITTERS
DR. J. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS are [illegible] made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, [illegible] Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

THE FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

Headquarters for the Grangers.

They are just the customers we want to deal with, we will guarantee them No Middlemen shall eat the profits between them and us. We Retail all goods at Wholesale Prices, all our Teas, Coffees, Sugars, Spices, &c., are purchased direct of the Manufactures and Importers and as we sell direct to the consumers, whereas Middlemen add 50 per cent. to the cost. Some goods, say tea, the Importer sells to the Jobber at 10c per lb profit, the Jobber sells to the wholesale merchants 15c per lb profit, the wholesale merchant resells to the retail merchant at 20c per lb profit then then the retail merchant sells to the consumer at 25 to 50c per lb profit Just as he gets it. All these intermediate profits we give our customers, and this is the secret of our immense tea trade. so with all goods we handle. We sell goods to save the profits of Middlemen

TEAS TEAS TEAS.

We still keep up our reduction of 15c per pound, our best $1.10, it is equa to any $1.50 tea, we have all grades from 30c to 1.10, all warranted.

L. BOWERS.

The republican organ at the State Capital is arguing that a high rate of taxation is not an evil if levied by the republican party. The same reasoning was resorted to by J. Cook, wherein he conclusively proved that a public debt was a public blessing. What absurdity is too great for a republican high tax and high salary greaser.

The news from France is important if true. It is reported that Marshal Bazaine has escaped from the Island of St. Marguerite. The Imperialist Marshal at large will command the attention of all men. He has passed from the command of French armies through ignominious defeat at Metz, to a sentence of death, to a commutation to a life imprisonment sentence, and now, it is reported, to liberty. With a paper Republic in Paris, handled by military men, the escape of the humiliated soldier and Imperialist, is an event in French politics, for the French are devoted to leaders, and the soldier has always a following.—The man the French didn't hang for treason may prove to be a troublesome person to have in the neighborhood.

The Charleston (S. C) correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, Republican, draws the following thought, but strictly true, picture of the so-called Republican ascendancy in the State.

"The Legislature is a den of theives and ignorant stupid, bigoted, black theves at that. Take the convicts in the Ohio Penitentiary, organized them into a body, call it the Legislature, and you have a better body of men than any since 1868. And further, statistics will show that the Ohio convicts are better educated than the South Carolina lawmakers; and better qualified to preform the duties of office.—More of them can read, more of them can write more of them can know the difference between Watts' hymns and the Constitution of the United States. If the most intelligent men in the Penitentiary had been selected in 1868 as legislators for South Carolina and continued in office until to-day, I have no hesitancy in saying that the condition of affairs here would now be better.

We cannot understand how honest and intellegent American citizens can belong to and support a political party leagued, black thieves. "Bleeding Kansas" was righteousness compared with the South Corolina "den of theives."

The New-York Evening Post, Republican, is displeased with Senator Morton's demagogical Terre Haute keynote speech, and rebukes the Senator in the following vigorous manner:

"He (Morton) acknowledged that the Republican party was shamefully corrupt, but contended that the majority of it had exposed the corruption, and cited the Credit Mobilier, the Sanborn scandal, and what he styled "the District of Columbia transaction," as instances. But he failed to name a single Republican officeholder who had been removed by executive power, or had been repudiated by his republican constituents on account of a share in the Credit Mobilier; he omited to mention that Mr. Richardson, after being forced by public opinion to resign, his office of secretary of the treasure on account of his connection with the Sanborn buisness, was appointed by the president to an important judicial office and he also omitted to mention that Mr. Shepherd, after being legislated out of office on account of the corruption of the board of works of the District of Columbia, was nominated by the president to be chairman of the board of commisioners to govern the district.

Grangers; what say you to the above indictment? Can you any longer support a "party" that Senator Morton himself is forced to acknowledge is "shamefully corrupt"? You are prohibited by your constitution from discussing politics in the Grange, but you are commanded by the same instrument to oppose corruption wherever found. You connot be true to yourselves, and keep sacred your oaths, if you support a "party" that is acknowledge to be "shamefully corrupt" by its head. Corruption has become a passboard to official preferment in the Republican party

There are 92 counties in the State, 48 Democratic and 44 Republican According to data published in the Indianapolis Journal, and taken from the books of the Auditor of State, 79 of these counties—40 Republican and 39 Democratic—had lower levies for local purposes than the people of Jasper were compelled to pay. According to the authority before mentioned, our county was assessed $1.33 on each $100 of valuation for aggregate local purposes, while the average in the other 91 counties of the State was a trifling fraction over 98⅓ cents. This makes the levies in Jasper last year 34 1-3 cents on the $100, or $3 43 on the $1,000, higher than the average, yet from Mr. Babcock's report to the board of commissioners the casual reader would understand that taxes for expenditure within the county were "below the average in the State last year." There are only two Republican counties in Indiana where taxes were higher than Jasper, and in thirty nine Democratic counties they were lower.—Rensselaer Union.

The democratic legislature of 1871 levied a state tax of five cents on the hundred dollars. At the close of the democratic administration in 1872 the state treasurer held in his possession the sum of 763,000 surplus. The extra session of the Republican legislature which was called in 1872, expended the public money at such a rate that by the time of adjournment the treasurer had only 97,000 on hand to turn over to his successor. The republican legislature at its regular session of 1873 fixed the rate at fifteen cents on the dollar and increased the assessed valuation of property at the same time in order to make a wide sweep Not only has the enormous amount collected been expended, but the state has also been compelled to borrow about 700,000 at 8 per cent. interest. There is now, it is said a great amount of money in the treasury which might be used with advantage to pay off the temporary loan, but the Republican belief in the doctrin that a state debt is a state blessing, seems very pepular with the administration party of Indiana. The attempt to lay this double increase of taxation, and increase of indebtedness, at the door of a democratic legislature which closed its labors three years ago, is an exhibition of cheerful impudence that refuses to be daunted under the most disheartening circumstances.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The "great amount of money in the Treasury which might be used with advantage to pay off the $700,000 temporary loan" is drawing interest for the Republican Treasurer of State. The people of Indiana will make themselves heard at the ballot-box this Fall.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Times gives a graphic picture of the social life in South Carolina: He says that in many cases the Radical politicians associated on the most extimate terms with the negroes, visiting them to the exclusion of the white, and practicing them miscegenation to the most extreme limit. Several Seantors have married negro women for the sole purpose of enableing themselves to secure greater influence among the colored voters. The state of society is said to be the most revolting and degrading ever witnessed in this country and the decent people of the State with anxious doubt look forward to a political revolution which will break their chains.

The West.

JUDGE BLODGETT, of the United States Circuit Court, in session at Chicago, has decided that an insurance company is not liable for risks where the party holding the policy commits suicide, even though he (or she) be insane at the time of the act.... The number of lives lost by the burning of the steamer Pat Rogers on the Ohio river on the 6th inst. is even greater than at first supposed. The number is now ascertained to be 25....The July statement of the State Treasurer of Illinois shows receipts for the month to be $650,768.01, and disbursements for the same period to be $254,667.80....A dispatch from Springfield, Ill., reports that the wheat crop in Sangamon county realizes the most magnificent anticipations....A gentleman who has traveled extensively in Kansas and Missouri reports that the crops in some localities will be almost an entire failure, and that old corn is now selling in Southwestern Kansas for $1.25 per bushel.

THE hardware firm of E. Buckley & Co., Manistee, Mich., made an assignment on the 7th inst. for the benefit of creditors....Ida Buckley, an inmate of Roger Plant's notorious dance house, St. Louis, was killed on the morning of the 6th inst., on the Clayton road leading from St. Louis. The murderers are still at large....George H. Richardson, city editor of the Daily Courier, of East Saginaw, Mich., committed suicide on the 7th. He was also special reporter for the Chicago Times. ....News from Omaha, Neb., relative to the Black Hills expedition, reports the men in good condition and the Indians badly demoralized, 21 having died from wounds received from Capt. Bates' command.

THE Chicago Tribune of the 10th inst. says: "Reports of the condition of the corn and oats crops in Illinois, Iowa and Kansas are published elsewhere, and reveal a curious difference by States. Corn and oats in Illinois will be a two-thirds and in Iowa a very full crop. Four points in Kansas, widely separated, report that corn in that State will be a total failure, and oats from two-thirds to one-half the average yield. These returns are, perhaps, as valuable as any that have yet been published; the coincidence in those from each State indicate that they are entirely trustworthy."

A NUMBER of prominent insurance companies have withdrawn their agencies from Chicago, and will hereafter write no more policies on Chicago property....Information from Fort Laramie says that the Sioux Indians report that the Arapahoes and Cheyennes are getting ready for war. Many Sioux will go with them should this be true. The military are very active, but the movements are kept as quiet as possible that the Indians may not be informed thereof through renegade whites and half-breeds.....Right Rev. Henry J. Whitehouse, Episcopal Bishop of Illinois, died at his residence in Chicago, on the 10th inst., in the 72d year of his age. His death was caused by a paralytic stroke, superinduced by overwork.

A DISPATCH from Omaha says Spotted Tail's band refuses to move to the new reservation, as proposed by Bishop Hare and other Commissioners, and are very indignant and much excited over it. It is probable force will have to be used to make them move....A terrible outrage was recently perpetrated by Indians in Colfax county, Neb. A company of strolling Pawnees were camped near a farmhouse. Two squaws searched the house for food, and beat the farmer's wife over the head for objecting. The man came home, and, seeing his wife wounded, shot one of the squaws. The other reported the fact, and twelve Indians came to the house, skinned the farmer, cut his hands off and heart out in the presence of his wife.

The South.

THE tow-boat Samuel Roberts blew up on the 7th inst., on Guyandotte (West Virginia) shoals, in the Ohio river. Dudley Holland, the watchman was killed, and a large number including the Captain, clerk and engineer seriously injured... Ernst Smith (colored), aged 18 years, who was convicted in May last on a charge of rape, was hanged in Easton, Md., on the 7th inst.

COL. RICHARD TEN BROEKE, the well-known horse-owner, was shot and reported seriously wounded at Gilman's Station, Ky., recently, by Walter Whittaker, a lawyer of Louisville.

A SERIOUS collision between white and colored people at Austin, Tunica county, Miss., is reported. Some weeks since one Dr. Smith, a resident of Austin, had an affray with a negro, and, drawing a pistol, fired at his antagonist, but missed him and killed a little negro girl, who was standing by, which exasperated the negroes to such an extent that they collected a mob and took Dr. Smith to the woods to hang him, which they would have done but for the entreaties of Maj. Woodson and the Doctor's wife. Since that time he has been a voluntary inmate of the jail, to prevent being mobbed, until last Friday week, when some friends came and carried him to Hernando. On leaving that place the negroes collected in large numbers and notified the Mayor that unless Dr. Smith was brought back and put in jail they would burn the town. A dispatch to the Memphis Appeal dated Aug. 11, says: "The negroes surrounding Austin on the south were charged this morning by a body of mounted whites, who killed four or five and captured twenty negroes. The blacks number 700, while the whites have about 200. Both parties expect reinforcements. At present the whites have the best of the fight. The negro bands on the plantations opposite here, on the Arkansas side, are arming and marching on Austin in large numbers." Another telegram of the same date says: "In the fight at Austin last night eight or ten negroes were killed. Reinforcements are coming in to the whites from the hills, and the negroes are being reinforced from the surrounding country. The whites have Austin barricaded, and will probably be able to keep the negroes off."

THE first bale of new cotton was received at Memphis on the 11th of August from Senatobia, Miss....Reports from Austin, Miss., state that the improvised troops had disbanded and gone home and peace is restored. The impression prevails there that a few determined men could have prevented the whole affair at the outset, by meeting the negroes before summoning help from elsewhere.

A PARIS telegram announces that Prince Hohenlohe, the German Minister has informed the Duc de Cazes, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, that Germany intends to recognize the Spanish Republic.... The Russian Government, it is announced, is about to dispatch another expedition to the Arctic Seas, not for purposes of scientific discovery, but to rescue an Austrian party under Capt. Weyprecht, which sailed in the ship Tegethoff two years ago. The Captain intended to double the Cape at the north end of Nova Zembla, and, seeking the open water supposed to lie on the east side of the islands, sail eastward until he reached the Pacific. The New York Tribune calls attention to the fact that this is exactly the course which the Dutch navigator, William Barents laid down for himself 280 years ago, in seeking to make which he perished in a fearful storm.

THE official journal of Rome publishes, from time to time, a report of the progress made in the sale of the confiscated ecclesiastical property. The whole amount disposed of, from 1867, when the law was passed, up to the end of June of the present year, is represented by the sum of 465,000,000 of francs. The Government has come into possession of somewhat more than $90,000,000 from this source....Marshal Bazaine has escaped from the island of St. Marguerite, and secured safe carriage to Italy. The cable furnishes a romantic account of the means by which it was accomplished. It appears that the apartment occupied by the imprisoned soldier was built upon a lofty and precipitous cliff overhanging the sea. A sentry was posted on the terrace, with orders to watch the prisoner's every movement. During Sunday evening the Marshal walked upon the terrace with Col. Villette, his aide-de-camp. At 10 o'clock he retired as usual, apparently to sleep, but before daybreak he had effected his escape. He must have crossed the terrace in the dead of night, and, eluding the sentinel, gained the edge of the precipice, whence, by means of a knotted rope, he descended to the sea. He evidently slipped during the descent, and tore his hands, as the rope was found stained with blood in several places. Under the cliff, in a hired boat, were Bazaine's wife and cousin. They received him as he reached the water, and Madame la Marechal, taking the oars herself, rowed directly to a strange steamer which had been lying off the island since the previous evening. They reached the vessel in safety, were taken on board, and the vessel then put to sea. It is thought that they have landed at Genoa, as the steamer proceeded in that direction.

A PARIS telegram announces that England, France and Germany have formally recognized the Spanish republic....It is stated that the plan for Marshal Bazaine's escape from the Island of St. Marguerite was arranged several weeks ago. It was entirely the work of Madame Bazaine. The Marshal refused, at first, to fly, but finally, owing to his failure to obtain some modification of his sentence, he yielded.... Advices from South America represent that the Governments of Chili and the Argentine Republic, between which trouble has been brewing for some time, have resolved to submit the boundary question to arbitration.

Beecher-Tilton.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Several of the members of the committee having intimated their intention to leave the city to-morrow afternoon for the country, requested their chairman, Mr. Sage, to make arrangements with Mr. Moulton to postpone his statement until Monday. Accordingly Mr. Sage wrote a note to Mr. Moulton asking him to postpone his appearance before the committee till Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Moulton replied consenting to the change, and will be examined on Monday at the hour named.

The Brooklyn Eagle publishes an interview with Henry C. Bowen, who is represented as saying of the Beecher-Tilton case: "This entire business has caused me much pain. I have had no hand in it, and do not wish to have. The public will yet learn that the attacks on me were brutal and unjustifiable. I only keep quiet under them in deference to my family. Although my name has been mixed up in this scandal, I have not made any charges against anybody yet, and therefore I have not been invited by the committee to appear. If subpœnaed into court, I shall have to appear."

Bowen alluded to the agitation shown by Mrs. Hooker in the Plymouth Church, caused by her belief in Beecher's immorality, and but for the fact that she was restrained, she would have announced it to the congregation. Being asked if Beecher ever did him an injury, Bowen said, "I could construe his course unkindly. I considered it all along my duty, nevertheless, to restrain my position and pew in the church, because I intended to be there after him, as I was there before him." As to Tilton, Bowen said he did not care which way it went with him; "the end must necessarily justify me before the public, and I will never go down to my grave without saying something concerning my relations with this scandal. Moulton is placed in an awkward position, but I believe he will tell the truth. The statement of Woodhull, offered the committee, should have been received. Were I a member of the committee, I would accept testimony from any source."

In the evening the Committee of Investigation met and held a consultation, lasting about two hours, and at its conclusion visited the residence of Beecher, where they remained closeted until a late hour. There will be no session of the committee to-morrow evening.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—No events of importance in the scandal have occurred to-day. Moulton has finished his statement. It is very long. A full history is given of the Bowen-Beecher difficulties as the origin of the scandal. Had Beecher and Bowen not quarreled, the scandal would never have been agitated. Moulton attributes to Bowen constant agitation, which has made it necessary for Tilton to reply. Among the papers which Tilton has in reserve, there are letters of the existence of which Beecher and his lawyers have no knowledge whatever. They are said to be more compromising than those of Beecher himself. They contain frequent plain admissions of guilt on the part of Mrs. Tilton, and Mrs. Morse seems to have known of her guilt.

Ex-Judge Morris, counsel for Mr. Tilton, says: "The suit which Mr. Tilton proposes to bring against Mr. Beecher has no reference to the action of the Committee whatever. When Mr. Tilton announced his intention not to appear before the committee again, and his instructions were given to his council to bring suit against Mr. Beecher, he meant exactly what he said. The action of the Committee will neither hasten nor delay the commencement of the suit, which will be brought in the Supreme Court. It will be an action against Mr. Beecher for criminal connection with Mrs. Tilton. The amount of damages claimed will be in accordance with the magnitude of the suit.

NEW YORK, August 11.—A feeling of disappointment prevails in the community growing out of the unsatisfactory end toward which the Beecher-Tilton scandal is drifting. The withholding from the public of Moulton's statement is the subject of much unfavorable comment. There is a general belief that a compromise of the whole affair is on foot. The Argus says: "It is even stated that Mrs. Tilton is prepared to state that she has been laboring under an hallucination: that Mr. Beecher is willing to resign his pastorate, that the Society will refuse to accept his resignation, and that Mr. Tilton will, upon these conditions again open the door of his house to his wife."

Gen. Tracy said to-day that the Committee had not decided whether it will keep Moulton's statement back until all the proceedings are printed, or keep it back altogether. Gen. Butler had a long interview with Moulton this morning, at the conclusion of which he was driven to the house of Gen. Tracy. The latter had just returned from Mr. Beecher's residence, and both gentlemen went into the house, where they remained in consultation several hours.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Theodore Tilton gave an emphatic contradiction, to-day, to the story which has been kept afloat since the suppression of the statement made by Moulton, that a compromise would be satisfactory to all concerned in the scandal. Tilton says, for his part, that he will enter upon a compromise when "paving-stones blossom into roses."

The presentation to the committee by Moulton of his short statement, instead of the long one which he had first prepared, is said to have been the result of another "tripartite agreement," the parties thereto being Gen. Butler, Gen. Tracy, of counsel for Beecher, and the investigating committee and Moulton. Butler and Tracy are represented to have agreed that Moulton should confine himself in his statement to the documents alluded to by Tilton in his statement, and Moulton consented, in the hope that some way might be found to bring about a satisfactory condition of affairs.

Japanese Characteristics.

The Japan Mail, which reflects the opinions of Englishmen in Japan, refers thus disparagingly to the progressive movement in that country: "Superficiality is eminently a Japanese characteristic, and the idea soon takes possession of them that they know everything about a subject before they know almost anything. There is an absence of solidity, of thoroughness, and, as a consequence, of profundity. The excitement of novelty, the love of change, and a curiosity of a semi-simple, half-childish character, carries them abroad where they want to see everything. Their garrulity is unbounded. Everything, no matter what, is of about equal importance in their eyes. They ask a thousand questions, scarcely waiting for answers, which are speedily forgotten in whole or in part. By-and-by, when their funds become exhausted and themselves blasé, they return home dissatisfied and querulous. They are no longer content with their own country, and know not how to set about the necessary measures to secure its elevation to the high level of the countries they have visited. They are spoilt Japanese, with yearnings after the indefinite, of no use abroad, and of little at home."

An Embryo Emperor in Training.

The Empress Eugenie has not many English friends, but her son takes home a companion now and then from Woolwich. One who knows him well tells me he is being tutored beyond all reason. From the moment he gets up until the time he goes to bed he is under this forcing pressure, and the result is he looks but a sickly plant. He seems to get paler and thinner as he becomes sensible of the expectations formed of him and as he strives to answer them. The Empress has become a proselytist, and more than one of her English visitors have been embarrassed by receiving at her hands what would be called in Protestant phraseology "religious tracts," and what are really controversial books on Roman Catholic theology. In presenting them, she invites attention to passages which she has marked, and which bear more especially upon the errors of the reformed religion. She speaks English pretty freely, though with a strong accent; the Prince, of course, understands our tongue, though he also preserves an accent. It is said that he is about to leave for a sojourn in Switzerland.—London Cor. Boston Advertiser.

A Story About Crows.

A Delaware correspondent writes to a Baltimore paper on the subject of cows as follows: "A novel amusement, which is at present indulged in to a great extent in the upper part of this State, is crow-shooting as a substitute for pigeon-matches. The rules and customs are the same in either case. The substitute was made out of a sort of humanitarian notion among the people, as well as to benefit, pecuniarily, residents about Reedy Island, in the Delaware, from whence crows are taken. I have been told that this spot is the favorite roosting-ground of these birds, and that toward nightfall they congregate there by thousands. When darkness overspreads the island, the catchers enter among the low trees with bags, and capture any desired number, simply plucking them from the limbs like so much fruit. The birds cannot fly in the darkness, and, even if shaken from their roosts, they cling to the first object that comes within reach. It is said that a man, standing beneath the tree from which the brids are shaken with outstretched arms, will soon be covered with them."

The Small Boy of Merced River.

Where the road between Merced and Snelling crosses the Merced river, that stream is about two hundred yards in width, and even at this season of the year, when the water is quite low, it looks like a dangerous and deep stream to cross. Recently a patent medicine agent, traveling on horseback through that section, came to the river, and hesitated about attempting to ford it, as he saw the wide expanse of the rushing waters. There is no bridge anywhere along there, so, after some decision, he concluded to swim his horse across. Spying a small boy fishing in a small punt tied to the bank, he said:

"Hello, bub?"

"Hello yourself!"

"Can I get you to take my clothes across the river in your boat?"

"I rekin you kin, if you have got any soap."

"All right. I'll give you a quarter to take over my clothes and this carpet sack to the opposite shore."

To this the boy nodded assent. The stranger disrobed and turned over the carpet sack and habiliments to the juvenile, who paddled out into the stream, and mounted his horse, preparatory to swim the river and enjoy the luxury of a bath. With a plash at every moment the horse stepped into the stream and walked across. The water was nowhere more than eighteen inches deep. To say that the medicine man, perched on the back of his horse, was a man of iniquity for the space of half an hour would hardly do justice to the occasion. There were enough "dams" along the Merced that afternoon to supply a hundred mill sites.—California Exchange.

That Bottle Hoax.

George W. Blunt writes to the New York Post that the bottle purporting to have been thrown from the lost steamer City of Boston, could not have been on that vessel when she went down. He declares that the the account written on the paper alleged to have been found in the bottle "is the product of some silly fool, as there is no current in the North Atlantic ocean which could drift a bottle there from the region where the Boston probably was when she foundered, the drift of the ocean through which she necessarily passed being always to the eastward, whether in the Gulf stream or north of it." Mr. Nicholson, of the Inman line, agrees with Mr. Blunt in regarding the pretended message as a heartless joke, and says that there was no such person as John Caswell among the cabin passengers, or even of the lost seamen, and that any such attempt as this to quicken the anxiety of the friends of those persons who were lost ought to be severely condemned. He also says that bottles are now found periodically, containing scraps of reference to the City of Boston disaster, all of which he believes to have been forgeries.

Strikingly Coincident.

When you talk of "coincidence," commend me to the following: In my prying into some statistics, which I have come to regard as the true eye-sight of the State, I found this puzzler in a table published by authority of Illinois, in 1870. This paper says that the population of Georgia is 1,185,000; that of Iowa, 1,182,933. The insane in Georgia were 1,185; of Iowa 1,183. Georgia had 790 idiots; Iowa 789. Georgia's deaf mutes numbered 677; Iowa's 676. Geogia's blind 474; Iowa's 473. Total for Georgia, 3,226 for Iowa 3,121. The difference in the population of the two States is 2,067; in their insane, just two; in their idiots, just one; in their deaf mutes just one; in their blind, only one.—Atlanta Herald Correspondence.

What Morton Reminded Jones Of.

"I think," said Donn Piatt to Senator Jones, "Morton stuck on that word doctrinaire; it had such a dreadful sound to him."

"He reminded me," responded the Senator, "of a queer character we once had in Nevada by the name of Pokebury. He was a lawyer of some promise, but came to do nothing through drink. Losing all his clients, he went to mining, and joined a rough miner by the name of Spokes. At the end of a week Pokebury appeared in town with a black eye, a swollen nose and lacerated garments. Of course we were anxious to know all about it: 'Well, you see,' said he, 'Billy and I were partners, and I like Billy, for he's a well-meaning man for an uneducated cuss. But Billy and I dissolved partnership, we settled and struck—leastwise we struck each other and Billy settled. Our first little difference was of an astronomical character. We divided the day different. Billy divided on 6 a. m. and I divided on 10 a. m., and Billy, instead of allowing for astronomical difference, said I was a lazy dog. But I didn't mind that, for Billy was my partner, you see, and had a right to his views. Then we differed on ablution. Billy abluted before breakfast, and said I was a dirty dog, for you see I always ablute after breakfast. But I didn't mind that, for people will differ, and so long as the difference don't affect business what's the odds. But the third difference was just a little too much for me. We were sitting down to beans and slap-jacks, and Billy blowing about my being a greedy dog, when suddenly the fellow said to me, 'I'd thank you for those molasses.' This was too much—no man can say 'those molasses' to me and live; and I just took him in the countenance with a right-hander that settled him and his damned insulting bad grammar together. That's the way we dissolved. I'm in town, and I guess Bill will be here in a couple of weeks.' "And so," continued the Senator, "Morton stuck on doctrinaire."

Typographical Errors.

"A lady's wedding trowsers in Richmond is said to contain a $42 pair of stockings.

The compositor should have set it up "trousseau." A very great difference. We are told that she of the $42 pair of stockings felt offended when she saw the item.

The Rev. Dr. Spurgeon seems to be a sufferer from the types. Here is another:

"From this peculiarity, I fancy, arises the discrepancy between the estimates of Mr. Spurgeon's regular hearers and those who listen to him once or twice and go away disappointed. The latter anatomize his sermons, while the former take them as whales."

We presume that it was intended "take them as wholes."

"Rev. Dr. Furness, of Philadelphia, has had sole charge of a church longer than any other Unitarian minister in the United States. He was settled in 1725."

So says one of our papers. Either there is a typographical error here, or the Doctor is a very old man. Could it be 1825?

An editor referred—or thought he did—to a political opponent as "an old poppy," but he was somewhat startled to find the types made him say what he did not mean, "an old puppy.' Not much difference here, we think. We would as leave be called an old puppy as an old poppy.

Curious item from a Western paper: "An Ohio man cursed 84,000 hams last season."

Dry work, we should say; and why did he curse them? Upon reflection, we thought it must be a typographical error, and that he cured not cursed that number of hams. The other reading appears more natural.

The Grasshoppers.

A correspondent writing from Elk Point, D. T., July 20, gives the following account of the "grasshopper plague" in that section:

"The grasshoppers, like a mighty horde, have swept down upon us. All the corn in this section is destroyed. There will be some wheat and oats. Garden vegetables are all gone. It would seem, from present indications, that this scourge upon our country is to become more general. Each year the area of their destruction becomes more extended. They are much farther east this year than they were last, and from reports the destruction wrought is full as complete far toward the central part of Iowa."

Judaism Not Declining.

The much-discussed question, "Is Judaism declining?" is taken up this week by the Jewish Messenger, which says "Our religion is not declining. We concede that many there are, born in the faith of Israel, who, for various causes, have become recreant to their trust; their conduct, however injurious, is, after all, an individual act between themselves and their Heavenly Father. We do not hesitate in saying that in no period in our modern history have we maintained a better condition before the world than we do now; and this assertion can be maintained by the most substantial evidence."

FARM AND GARDEN.

Driving His Clover to Market.

The following extracts appeared in a recent number of the San Francisco Bulletin:

"Jackson Wilcoxen, of Yolo county, lately sold 120 fat steers for $50 a head. We met him while driving about one-third, the first installment, to Sacramento. The purchaser recived them at Mr. Wilcoxens's farm, but Mr Wilcoxen helps drive them to Sacramento, where they will be put on the cars for Oakland. The cattle bring the seller the nice little sum of $6,350, and the delivery will cost him three trips to Sacramento on horseback. In these cattle Mr. Wilcoxen was driving his alfafa to market. He was for the last ten years been raising alfafa and driving it in this way. His trips to Sacramento will probably cost him about $5 each, making the expense of getting $6,350 worth of alfafa to market but $15.

"If we reckon his alfafa at $10 a ton, the steers will carry, in a condensed form, 635 tons to market, at a cost of $15. It would have cost to deliver the same in its original bulky condition at least $5 per ton, or $3,175, half of what the steers came to. We mention the fact as an illustration of the great advantage of reducing bulky materials produced on the farm to a more compact form before marketing the same, and another consideration: while these steers have been growing up, they have been enriching and improving the land from which they have obtained a living. The man who sells his hay in bulk, carries away with each crop a part of the fertilizing properties of his farm, and will finally exhaust the fertility which alone makes it valuable. Let our farmers reflect on the lesson conveyed in the above facts."

Beet Sugar in California.

It has been announced that the Alvarado sugar-works have been removed to Soquel, near Santa Cruz. The object was to get land at $15, and to sell their Alvarado property for $200 per acre. The company has always found good profit in making sugar from beets. Another company is being formed by Mr. Dyer, a land-owner, to put up a new and improved sugarie of equal capacity on the same grounds.

The Sacramento sugarie has over 1,000 acres of beets in luxuriant growth. The yield will probably be 20 tons to the acre, equal to 1,600 tons of sugar, valued at a profit of $200,000, including the molasses for distillation and the cattle feed. No industry can show so good a return for the capital invested, with so little work or complication.

Negotiations are being made for the construction of a one-hundred-ton beet sugarie by capitalists of Portland, Oregon. The works are to be of the Robert Diffusion Process. The Sacramento company has this process; but Mr. Robert has made a great improvement, by which nearly one-third part of the heavy machinery is dispensed with, and the cost of making sugar is reduced.

We hear that it is the experience of our two sugaries that there is no profit to the companies in raising their own beets. Farmers can do it cheaper. They are well paid at $4.50 per ton delivered at the mill, which is cheaper than the factory can raise them. By this division of labor, sugar making is simplified, and less capital is required.

To cultivate 1,200 acres of beets requires considerable capital, which, by this division, is furnished by the farmers. They ask no pay till the beets are delivered and the sugar is being made. Then the terms offered are half cash and half at 60 and 90 days.—San Francisco Alta.

Potato Digging with a Machine.

Col. D. C. Richmond, near Sandusky, in a letter to me, stated that he dug his potatoes last season with a newly invented machine of Mr. H. Carrier, of Mentor, Lake county; he was highly pleased with the operation of the machine, and he wanted to know if I had seen or heard of its performance in this county. He said he not only could raise four hundred bushels of potatoes on an acre, without difficulty with the aid of Paris green to choke off the bugs, but he could dig them in one day with his machine, if his boys would only take care of them as fast as dug. In short, he considered it altogether the best machine extant for the purpose, and so he purchased the one taken there for trial.

I had seen this machine on exhibition but not in actual use, and had not then heard of its being used in this county, except by the inventor while experimenting with it, though it was used there about that time. I have since met Mr. Carrier several times, and I learn that he took the machine to Erie county last fall because he preferred to see it have a fair trial among strangers rather than among his own neighbors; and being satisfied that it was all right, he went to work in earnest to manufacture machines for this season, and will in due time advertise them extensively. It will certainly be considered appropriate that the county producing the most potatoes should also have the honor of producing the best machine for digging them.—Cor. Ohio Farmer.

Locating Hay-Stacks.

Where it is possible to do so hay-stacks should be located on the poorest spots of meadow or pasture, so that the grass seed, droppings of the stock and waste fodder may be deposited where great good will result from it. It is usually the case that the stacks are built on high parts of the meadow most convenient for reaching, and year after year but little deviation is made as to site.

Dry ground is desirable to feed upon, and we suppose this is the reason for seeking elevated locations; but this excuse for continuing to place stacks there is not a plausible one, for in a wet or stormy time the stock should be fed at the barn, and stack feeding only done when the earth is frozen hard and the weather pleasant. Now is the time to give this matter attention. Where stock can be turned from the pasture a day or two until a stack is built and securely fenced, profit will be found in so doing, as our pastures need invigorating as much as our meadows.—Ohio Farmer.

Single or Double Lines in Plowing.

Thousands of farmers have never seen a horse or a pair of horses driven in another way than with the ordinary double lines. Other thousands have never seen anything else than a single line used in plowing, either with one or two horses. Recently a correspondent of an agricultural paper asked how this was done. In the South we have seen teams driven with a rope tied to one side of the bit of one of the mules or horses, but usually the line is fastened to a rein somewhat longer than the usual check rein. A loop at the other end is provided for greater convenience in holding the line. With a little training a horse learns to be guided by this as readily as with the double lines. A steady pull turns to the left; light jerks to the right. A person accustomed only to this line finds the double reins an inconvenience when plowing.—Western Farmer, Mich.

A Precocious Heifer.

Mr. Wm. R. Warren, one of our most substantial and intelligent farmers, living near Madison, gives us a remarkable case of a heifer in his possession. She is two years old this spring, and he began to notice in the fore part of May that she was "making a bag," and feared that the swelling was the effects of a hurt, but thought he would milk her. Ever since the 15th of May the heifer has been giving a fine mess of good, rich milk, and she seems to be a veritable milch cow, to all intents and purposes, without ever giving birth to a calf, or exhibiting any signs of bovine maternity. She is a mixture of the Durham and Devon breeds, and bids fair to make a most excellent milker, though she could not just now be recommended for breeding qualities. Can any of our learned cattle breeders give an exlcanation of this remarkable freak.—Wisconsin Saturday Journal.

Cranberries.

Mr. H. S. Sacket recently brought to the office of this paper a bunch of cranberries in their present stage of growth. The largest was the size of a large pea. He says he never saw the berry so large before at that time of the season, and that the injury done to the vines by worms is not nearly so great as has been reported. Mr. Sacket thinks that, from present appearances, the crop will be five times as large as last year, and that, in all, probability, 20,000 barrels will be shipped from Berlin alone.—Berlin (Wis.) Courant.

Lobster-Canning at Mount Desert.

The process of canning lobsters at Mount Desert is thus described by the Boston Traveller: "The factory at Southwest Harbor, Mount Desert, when running at full capacity, puts up 25,000 cans a day, employing about fifty hands. Until within a short time plenty of lobsters have been taken about the harbor, but now smacks are used, which cruise round and purchase of various parties. The price paid at this time is about $1 per 100 pounds. The smacks bring in 10,000 or 12,000 pounds at a time. The vessels are built with two decks, with perforated bottoms, so that the fish are preserved alive and fresh in their native element. Upon the arrival of the smacks the lobsters are dumped upon the wharf in big piles. They present a curious appearance, biting and clawing at each other, until they are shoveled into great kettles of boiling water. They are then dipped out, broken up, and the meat taken for canning. The big claws and tails are the only parts used. The cans contain one pound. A liquor is made of the contents of the body of the lobster, strained, and prepared with salt and cayenne pepper, and a small portion put in each can. After soldering, the cans are boiled two hours and a half, when they are taken out, a little hole made in the top to let the steam out, then tightly sealed and boiled again. The cans are then varnished, labeled, and boxed for market. Lobsters are not now very plenty, and are rather small. The parties who set the nets cull out the large ones for Boston and other markets."

Sketch from Dickens' Life.

A letter from London to the Arcadian gives a little news about the separation of Charles Dickens and his wife, the story being revived by the mention that Wilkie Collins was about to rewrite his drama of "The Frozen Deep" into a story. This was acted in 1859 at Free Trade Hall, Manchester, in aid of the Douglass Jerrold fund. Dickens, Collins, Shirley Brooks, Mark Lemon, and many other celebrated writers took parts. The ladies' characters were interpreted by professional actresses. Among these was Miss Ellen Ternan. She was a fresh, pleasant-looking girl, not especially pretty, but possessing a good figure and an extremely agreeable manner, and at first sight she and Dickens were mutually infatuated. Their love was a Platonic one, of course, but Mrs. Dickens didn't like Platonic love under such circumstances. Miss Ternan left the stage at Dickens' request, soon after the Manchester tour, and a short time after the party returned to London, Mrs. Dickens went into a fashionable jewelers' at the West End, where she was in the habit of dealing, and was asked by one of the firm, who knew her well, how she liked her new bracelet. She said that she did not understand him, as she had not received any such article. The gentleman then explained that it was one Mr. Dickens had ordered for his wife, with a likeness and some hair in it. This was Platonic love of the wrong kind for Mrs. Dickens, and she speedily "withdrew from the firm."

THE Abbey of St. Blaise, in the Black Forest, France, has been destroyed by fire. The Abbey church, which resembled St. Peter's at Rome in many points, and was remarkable for the fine ceiling of the chancel, the high marble altar, and the grand columns of the nave, was designed by Blondel. Some pieces of tapestry preserved in the sacristy were the handiwork of Marie Antoinette and Maria Theresa. Nothing has been saved but the bells and the shrine of the founder.

The Nevada Flood.

The Eureka (Nev.) Sentinel of July 25, relates the following incidents of the deluge resulting from the cloud-burst which visited that place on the preceding day:

"Among the saddest of the sad occurrences that took place was the drowning of Mrs. Broy. With her husband, they were in their house when the seething torrent burst in its fury on them. They endeavored to escape, but in vain. The support to the house soon gave way, and with the others it floated down the stream. Rushing from the doomed house, they made one frantic effort to reach a place of safety, but the rushing waters met them on every side. Locked in each other's arms, they were carried on until the relentless waters separated them, bearing her lifeless form down the canon. Mr. Broy was rescued by some Chinamen near the Eureka Consolidated Furnaces. But a few short weeks ago they were married; a happier couple did not exist; to-day she is dead, and he, crazed with his loss and suffering from severe injuries, is not expected to survive. Their wedded bliss was brief; their happiness shortlived before broken forever.

Roger Robinette, a representative of the press, and a man of fine literary attainments, is among those who became victims of the flood. He was standing in the rear portion of a building on Buel street, watching the water, when the building was suddenly swept away. He made a heroic effort to escape by the front, but the mountain of surging water baffled all attempts. He was washed down the street, struggling in vain, until overcome, he floated helplessly on. Near the consolidated furnace a party of men secured his body before life became extinct, but he died in a few moments after being rescued. He intended to leave last night to join his mother in San Francisco. To-day the telegraph will carry her the death of her darling boy, whom she expected soon to see, and in her sad bereavement we extend our heartfelt sympathy in this her hour of affliction.

James Galvin lost his life in attempting to rescue a woman and child from the torrent. Galvin was a pioneer of this section. Of late he had been prospecting in Antelope district, where it is presumed he had extensive interests.

J. W. McGeary, a carpenter, whose body has not yet been recovered, was in the act of driving the last nail in a new building for Col. O'Reilley, at the lower end of town, when he was swept into eternity. The building moved off slowly, and the old man was seen for a time standing erect and apparently not the least apprehensive of danger. Soon, however, the building went down with a crash, and he was not seen afterward.

"John Turner, a teamster from Utah, whose name appears among the dead, met his death in New York Canon. In company with his brother, and perhaps some others, he was encamped near Harrub's reservoir, two miles above town. It seems that the parties were in a wagon when the water came pouring down with such fearful rapidity. The wagon moved off, but soon came in contact with some rocks. Here all made good their escape save the unfortunate man whose death we have chronicled.

"The town presented a mournful sight. All places of business, stores and saloons were closed in token of respect to those who had lost their lives. On the corners groups of men and women were occupied in discussing the horrors the day had brought forth. Up and down the streets men, women and children, bereft of home and all that they possessed, were seeking temporary shelter. Those who had not suffered by the disaster threw open their houses to those less fortunate. On all sides a helping hand was extended and all provided for.

"No doubt there occurred hundreds of incidents worthy of special mention, but, owing to the great excitement which prevailed during the day and night, it was impossible to glean fuller particulars than we have recorded. Horses, dogs, poultry, etc., were seen going down in great numbers, and all perished. The scene down the canon after the flood had subsided beggars description. Thousands of people lined the canon from the Richmond furnace to the Six-Mile House. Some were searching for the missing, others looking after their goods, houses and furniture which had been swept away. At one place a cask of liquor was found and broken open by a party of men. They soon became boisterous, and when Sheriff Sullivan and Constable Bell appeared and attempted to preserve order, they were set upon by the crowd and badly beaten with stones and pistols. The Sheriff, it is thought, had one shoulder dislocated in the row. The offenders, however, were arrested and placed in jail. During the evening several other belligerents, as well as a batch of pilferers, numbering in all about fifteen or twenty, were arrested and placed in jail.

"Nothing definite has as yet been ascertained as to the actual loss of life, and it will take some days yet before an accurate statement can be given. Yesterday a large number of men were at work on the huge gorge near the Eureka Consolidated furnaces. Articles of every description had accumulated there—wagons, pianos, all kinds of furniture, and bodies of drowned animals in one conglomerate mass, a sorrowful monument of the dreadful catastrophe. It was thought that in removing the débris the bodies of more unfortunates would be found, but as yet none have been recovered at this place.

"The losses, as now reported, amount to over $150,000, which figure, it is thought, will cover all actual loss. There may be those whose names we have been unable to obtain; if so there are but very few. The loss incidental to the catastrophe will be very heavy, particularly so with the Eureka Consolidated Mining Company. The flood, as it passed the furnaces of the company, swept the reservoirs of water, used in supplying the furnaces, away, causing them to become chilled and necessitating a stoppage of work until they can be chipped out, a new reservoir built and pumps and engines replaced.

"The present condition of the roads leading from the mines on Ruby Hill to the furnaces forbids the transmission of ores, which also entails a heavy loss to the contractors.

"The general business of the town will also be diminished, and it will be at least a month until activity is renewed and everything in proper working order once more.

"At the time the flow of water down Buel street was the greatest, the hand of a man was seen projected above the water. No portion of the body was visible, and whether his was among the bodies saved or not is unknown.

"The house of Mrs. Hall, on Spring street, after being washed away by the current, soon broke to pieces. The front room was occupied by Attorney Thomas Wren, who lost a valuable library.

"A little girl, whose name we were unable to ascertain, performed a daring act at the time the flood was the most dangerous. A young kid goat that had been washed down the canon, in its struggle to escape, approached within a few feet of her, when she sprang into the water and rescued the struggling animal.

"It was rumored last night that the bodies of a woman and two children had been found below the Six-Mile House."

The First Grapevine—A Grecian Legend.

When Bacchus was a boy, he journeyed through Hellas to go to Naxia; and as the way was very long, he grew tired, and sat down upon a stone to rest. As he sat there with his eyes upon the ground, he saw a little plant springing up between his feet, and was so much pleased with it that he determined to take it with him and plant it in Naxia. He took it up and carried it away with him; but, as the sun was very hot, he feared it might wither before he reached his destination. He found a bird's skeleton, into which he thrust the plant, and went on. But in his hand the plant sprouted so fast that it started out of the bones above and below. This gave him fresh fear of its withering, and he cast about for a remedy. He found a lion's bone, which was thicker than the bird's skeleton, and he stuck the skeleton with the plant in it into the bone of the lion. Erelong, however, the plant grew out of the lion's bone likewise. Then he found the bone of an ass, larger still than that of the lion; so he put it into the lion's containing the bird's skeleton and the plant, into the ass's bone, and thus he made his way to Naxia. When about to set the plant, he found that the roots had entwined themselves around the bird's skeleton, and the lion's bone, and the ass's bone; and as he could not take it out without damaging the roots, he planted it as it was, and it came up speedily, and bore to his great joy, the most delicious grapes, from which he made the first wine and gave it to men to drink. But behold a miracle! When men first drank of it, they first sang like birds; next, after drinking a little more, they became vigorous and gallant like lions; but when they drank more still, they began to behave like asses.—New York Wine and Fruit Reporter.

The Benders Outdone.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "An interesting little establishment has just been broken up at Trebizond, under circumstances which have created, if not a 'scandal,' at least a sensation in that place. It appears that for some time past Trebizond has been kept in a state of uneasiness, owing to the proceedings of this household, which consisted of a father, six sons and one daughter. Delightful as was the charm which reigned over their domestic circle, it did not extend beyond the hearth, for unfortunately the family weakness was murder. In a brief space of time the eight persons composing the family managed to get through no fewer than 235 murders. Out of this number the gentlemen of the family were each responsible for thirty murders, while the young lady committed twenty-five, though, but for the premature interference of the authorities, it is considered probable that she would have completed an equal number. The predecessors of the present Governor most ungallantly caused her to be arrested, together with her amiable parent and four of her brothers. It is not stated what became of the remaining brothers, but the poor old gentleman was hanged about three months ago, and two of his sons met with a similar melancholy accident on the 25th of last month. The other two and the young lady are still languishing in captivity, and much anxiety is felt on their behalf; for, unless the local Judges take a lenient view of their offenses on account of their youth, they have but a poor chance of resuming their position in society. Altogether it is a sad story, and it is not surprising that these young people and their misfortunes have of late been the talk of Trebizond."

A Good Lesson

If your boys revolt from study, give them an opportunity to test the pleasure of manual labor, and then let them follow the occupation they prefer. In nine cases out of ten, books will carry the day. "When I was a boy," said the elder Adams, "I had to study the Latan grammar, but it was dull, and I hated it. My father was anxious to send me to college; and, therefore, I studied grammar till I could bear it no longer, and, going to my father, I told him I did not like study, and asked him for some other employment. It was opposing his wishes, and he was quick in his answer. 'Well, John, if Latin grammar does not suit, you may try ditching, perhaps that will. My meadow needs a ditch, and you may put by Latin and try that.' This seemed a delightful change, and to the meadow I went. But I soon found ditching harder than Latin, and the first forenoon was the longest I ever experienced. That day I ate the bread of labor, and glad was I when night came on. That night I made some comparison between Latin grammar and ditching, but said not a word about it. I dug the next forenoon, and wanted to return to Latin at dinner, but it was humiliating, and I could not do it. At night, toil conquered pride, and I told my father—one of the severest trials of my life—that if he chose, I would go back to Latin grammar. He was glad of it; and, if I have since gained any distinction, it has been owing to the two days' labor in that abominable ditch."

THE GRANGE.

Address of S. H. Ellis, Master of the Ohio State Grange.

The following extracts are from the address of Worthy Master Ellis, delivered before the Patrons of Husbandry on the occasion of their first annual Harvest Home, at Findlay, Ohio:

"The old political organizations, in themselves, do very little to inform the people of the real principles. They labor for mere party monopolies, as a rule. Something beyond this is needed—and that something is careful investigation and thought on the part of every man who dares to vote.

Yet, your granges are not places in which the discussion of political questions are tolerated, although they include men of all shades of political opinion. I asked an old Shaker, not long ago, whether they, in taking a new member in the church, required him to subscribe to any creed. "Nay," he replied. "Then how do you get along?" "If a man will come and live with us, and conform to our rules, he will come to believe just as we do." With us every man can believe as he pleases, and vote as he pleases. No man dare ask another why he votes so and so. We believe that honest men shall be in office, and you will see the effect of this belief.

When our Government was formed there were three branches co-ordinate in power—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. Now there is the fourth, which overshadows all—the lobby. It is the power to which railroads and other great corporations never appeal in vain to get whatever they want. A power to which railroad and other corporations pay greater tribute than it will ever cost to run the entire grange of the United States. All changes in laws which affect railroads, etc., are modified and controlled by the lobby, so that legislation is, to a great extent, made in favor not of the people. I will not propose that we counteract these things by sending up another lobby, but we can send honest men to Congress, and when we find them there, keep them in power. Our influence must be a moral influence. Men—our public servants—in standing up for us, and fighting corrupt rings, must know and feel that the people, that the granges, will stand by them, and not let them be sacrificed at the dictation of any ring or party managers, who are really influenced to destroy the honest servants of the people by the lobby managers who failed to corrupt them. I say that our influence on politics and politicians must be a moral influence—the influence which numbers always commands. Should any one of you tender a railroad conductor three cents a mile fare, and refuse to pay more, he might call his brakemen and put you off. But, should five hundred get aboard the train and tender this, and refuse to pay more, you would probably go ahead. Should all the farmers demand reform, or encourage their servants to fight corruption, it is very likely they will be heard.

"We come with 20,000 granges—a grand moral power.

"The sectional differences in our country have been rather with the leaders than with the laborers, so that, to-day, we find a most friendly feeling existing between the North and the South. It was the leaders who were ruling—running the machine. We, as laborers, propose no further quarrel, but as brothers, to live together in harmony, ignoring the wild and terrible leadership of ambitious men who would make us war with each other. The laborers of the country are exercising a moral power that is being listened to and felt. If we are true to ourselves, a reformation as grand as we dare ask will be ours. All is in our power, and we are accountable for our failure. I believe that God has called upon the farmers to stop the torrent of corruption that was overflowing our land. Let us, fellow Patrons, see to it that we exercise this power wisely and well.

"To what extent co-operative arrangements may be entered into depends wholly upon each subordinate grange to determine for itself. Many thousands of dollars have been saved to the farmers in buying.

"We have no quarrel with the middlemen. As business was conducted heretofore they were necessary. The manufacturer could only reach the consumer by or through agents, and that at an expense which was very great. Now we go direct to the manufacturer, let our wants be known, and buy so as to dispense with the expense of agents. We had to foot the bills before."

The speaker here enumerated amounts saved to the farmers in various counties, showing a valuable work done.

"It is left to each county and each grange to say whether these benefits shall be theirs. The amount of reduction we get would surprise many persons. But right here I desire to caution the Patrons. Many agents of manufacturers who have not made terms with us, will not unfrequently offer to sell to you as low or lower than you can purchase through the grange. This they do in order to break down your manner of operation. Do not buy of such agents, even though they sell at a third of what it costs them to manufacture, for in doing so you demoralize the operations of the grange, and you will thus destroy the very thing you aim to build up. The system of agencies had become a great and powerful one, and it may require much patience and some inconvenience to substitute a system for it.

"Though in your individual granges you may not seem to be accomplishing much, yet remember that all over the United States a great reformation is being worked out, that was not dreamed of a year ago. So powerful, so determined, so well disciplined is becoming this Order of Patrons of Husbandry, that to-day, anything within the scope of reason and right that they desire to accomplish, can be done.

"Our work is a work of social elevation. The bringing up of the masses to a higher scale. The hope of the country is that the ladies—the wives and daughters—are to-day found in this organization. A grange with the ladies left out is a sad failure.

"The old "apple-parings" and "log-rollings," were famous among the farmers at an early day, and many a joyous night they had of it. Well, indeed, do the old ones love to reflect upon and talk of those days. But they had become things of the past—nothing in the routine of farmers' lives was substituted for them until now. But the grange presents all the advantages and pleasures of these gatherings, with none of their disadvantages.

"I am glad to have met you here to-day. I have seen no gathering superior to this in numbers, or anything else. No lovlier day, no warmer welcome, or more enjoyment for one and all. I am glad to be with you, and I hope when another year rolls around, that I may meet you, one and all, with many a farmer who had not joined your ranks, to rejoice over the grand triumphs of our dear and noble order, as we do to-day."

Advice to Wisconsin Reformers.

Dr. O. W. Wight, of Milwaukee, to whose efforts more than to those of any other individual in the State the success of the party at the last election is due, has issued an address to the Reformers and Grangers of Wisconsin. In the main, the suggestions he offers are timely and wise. He holds that the principles on which the party was formed must be maintained, and cautions the members against being led away from them by the cunning devices of artful politicians. He especially counsels the nomination of good men as candidates for the Legislature.

"Every candidate," he says, "should be of unquestionable character—above suspicion of venality. Send no man to the Legislature next winter whom you would not intrust with the administration of your estate. Look out for the agents of monopolies and venal politicians. Admonish your legislators, when you have chosen them, to act with prudence, caution and justice, and do not encourage them to indulge in vengeance for past injuries and to act with the recklessness of property-rights from which communism is born." "Above all," he adds, "do not wait for outside managers to come in and run the campaign for you. Go about your political work in every town, village, county and city as though it belonged to you alone. Dependence on leaders begets helplessness and destroys all independence of action." This address is worthy of the most careful consideration by the Reformers of the State. If they pay heed to the counsels volunteered, they will carry the State by an overwhelming amjority.

The stealing in South Carolina has hitherto been quieted down, but the rogues have at last begun to quarrel over the spoils.

◆

A Mississippi darkey who ravished a white girl 14 years of age, got his neck twisted up with a rope in the woods, and died before morning.

◆

The crickets have located in Idaho, the potato bugs are devastating Illinois; the grasshoppers are devouring Minnesota, and Garfield has been "punished" as Morton calls it by being renominated to congress by the Republicans.

◆

Chicago continues the paradise of gamblers. The "faro," "bunko" and "monte" men have obtained complete possession of the city. They "whack" with the authorities, and are far above the reach of the law. Why can't all gamblers of the country be induced to go to Chicago?

◆

Poland the author of the press gag-law, is nominated for Congress in Vermont while Williard, who distinguished himself by exposing President Grant's share in the salary grab, is defeated. The great party of reform is distinguishing itself.

◆

"Boss" Tweed, the Democrat, languishes in the penitentiary for stealing $2,000,000 from 400,000 tax-payers, and "Boss" Shepherd, the Republican, dines and wines at the White House for stealing 40,000,000 from 40,000 tax-payers. The Republican party punishes its rascals by promoting them to better-paying offices.

◆

"Oh Lord, what miserable sinners we are!" cried a praying brother at a camp meeting; whereupon half a dozen sympathizers shouted "hallelujah!" This indiscretion in putting in the applause is very apparent in the reception given by the Republican platform. The Indiana Republican platform proclaims that the Republican party endorses Grant "Halleujlah!" instantly about most of the Republican journals.

◆

Prince Bismarck has had the honor, seldom enjoyed by any but crowned heads, of having had two attempts made on his life. Young Blind gave him the benefit of four pistol balls, only one of which slightly wounded the statesman, in May, 1866, and now a Madgeburg cooper has failed at Kissingen in a somewhat less determined attempt on his life. It was to the fury of German radicalism that Prince Bismarck was to be offered a sacrifice in 1866; it is from fanatical hate that the promptings to his assassination have come in 1874. Bismarck on the eve of the war with Austria; and Bismarck on the eve of the decisive struggle against the Papacy, presents two historical figures which will be all the better remembered because of the pistol bullets that passed by them.

Within the past week there has been among the European powers a general recognition of the Spanish Republic. The effect of this will naturally be to strengthen the weak Madrid Government. Don Carlos and his followers will be discouraged and probably driven from the field.—But the republic in Spain is a veritable Utopia, and time only is needed to demonstrate the fact. The cause of the Carlists would be greatly advanced by the cessation of hostilities for a time. The so-called Republic needs but an opportunity to ferment and rot, and after that they road to the men on horseback will be made easy.

◆

Garfield is "punished." The Republicans of the Nineteenth District nominated him for Congress. If there was any odium attaching to the passage of the increase-of-salary law, Garfield earned the head and front of it· Mobiler buisness was disgraceful or dishonest, Garfield was a stockholder in it. If the Shepherd swindling ring in Washington was disreputable, Garfield received $5,000 for acting as counsel in the De Gollyer pavement case. This is the way in which public robbers are punished" by the Republican party. The party is almost certain to punish Grant with the third term. The Republican party is a most pleasing punisher of ill-doers, it offers premiums upon public stealing.

◆

The Angola Republican made a frank confession last week in advance of the county convention, when it said: It is true that the Republican party is much in the majority in this county, but it is quite as true that this majority looks more closely to being suited than formerly. They make a most positive demand for thoroughly honest upright, capable men and will not be found to support any man who they consider anyways objectionable, because he is set up by a convention.—This is not a precarious state of affairs if the convention only act wisely and judiciously. If it do not—if it allow itself to be wheedled by any designing few who may be ready to take advantage of other heedlessness, if the spirit of faction pervade or any sinister course take possession of the convention, then indeed is the ticket jeopardized and defeat almost sure.

◆

The Republicans all over the country have about made up their minds not to hold any elections this year. The party discovers that the weather has been excellent for the growth of Oats, but has proved too dry for the growth of Republicans. A small crop of these sinners are reported all over the country. In Vicksburg they planted themselves on the negro vote, but there were not votes enough, although the darkies did their level best. From Kentucky Democratic gains are reported from nearly every county So many local questions were to be considered that it is explained that the election did not signify any thing, but it did signify a most woful falling off in numbers among the party of great moral ideas. Then came Tennessee, and the Republicans in full tide of retreat. Democratic victories are reported in Nashville, in Memphis, in Knoxville, everywhere, and the same day the Old Party had an election in North Carolina. That State goes Democratic by from ten to twelve thousand majority. North Carolina elects seven Democratic Representatives to Congress, and one Republican. He is a black Republican black by nature, and Republican by de instinct. The Democrats gain two Representatives. We do not pity the republicans, because their papers assure us that they have every reason for encouragement. So long as Republicans are content with encouragement, and Democrats get the victories, who will complain.

New Hampshire, Connecticut, Oregon, Kentucky, North Carolina and Tennessee, and yet the moral brigade say all these elections signify nothing, Oh, Jupiter! what a pleasing spectacle will be presented to men and angels when these republican candidates find themselves out in the cold, and that they are holding on to the rotten carcass of a political party in the minority. The Republican party has become a party held together by office-holder steeped in corruption, and dies of it own insignificance.

Like as a father pitieth his children so doth the Democrats pity those who deserted the party in time of need. Go—wittiker, how their teeth will chatter when they discover themselves as the old dutchman did, who went to trim an apple tree, and sawed off the limb he was sitting on.

Grant, believing that the country is tired of the Republicans (and that is where Grant is sound) does not propose to be a publican any more. He will lead a new departure, accept a nomination from de culled population fur de tird term, and fish fur de support ob de hull southern element.

The Indianapolis Sentinel in speaking of the meeting of the independent convention held last week says: On another page of this paper will be found a full account of the proceeding of the mass convention of independants held yesterday at Masonic Hall. The Sentinel has already stated that such a gathering to overset the action of the previous convention would be merely a political absurdity. The men gathered yesterday could have no conceivable authority to undo the work which the former convention did. However, it is perhaps of very little importance one way or the other as the action of the convention can have very little authority. Although it was a mass convention there were not more than forty delegates present, on liberal calculation, and the whole affair was controlled by less than half a dozen leaders. The endorsement of the old platform was useless folly. The filling of vacancies on the ticket was legitimate work, and the disposition of Mr. Henderson, because the democrats had adopted him as a candidate, was an exhibition of partisanship gone mad. It is clear that in the eyes of the men assembled yesterday the mere fact of being a democrat was a sufficient disqualification, and every democratic granger in the State ought to make is a point of honor to cast his vote for Henderson simply because he has been displaced from the independent ticket by republican trickery. Of course with such a set of managers it is unsafe to say much about the ticket or its prospects, as another convention may be called next week to go over the same job of political patchwork once more.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 25.

This "morningstar" however, was the harbinger of a prosperous day of improvement for that region—now the residence of the Strows, Falk, Baughman, &c.

As Messrs. Altenburg and Walsworth were among the very earliest settler in the Township, outside of the town; perhaps a few items of their pioneer experience might be interesting.

They moved in together, and left Steubenville, in Stuben county, on the morning of the 4th of November 1836 in the midst of a very heavy fall of snow, which continued all day. Having a narrow blind, crooked track to follow, without a house for nine miles, the snow flakes falling so fast as to bewilder the traveler and and sometimes weighing down the bushes across the track,—it became necessary for one of the men to walk before the teams, to find the way and remove bushes overhanging it. They also had some stock to drive, and, their help being rather scarce, the women were under the necessity of walking and assisting to drive them. The snow being oft and hangings on the bushes; those on foot became completely wet. On—on the slow ox teams passed, through snow and mud, along the crooked narrow path, until night came on and still all around was a black snow clad forest. They began to think of lying in their wagons for the night, but, having no way of making fire, and nothing for their teams or stock, and the women and children being frightened by the howling of the wolves around them they drove on in the darkness occasionally stalling against the trees on each side of the narrow track. At length one of the teams, and the wagon, got entirly out of the way and so entangled among the trees and logs that the latter had to be left. Hitching both teams to one wagon, they drove on until they began to think they was near to the only dwelling between Steubenville and Auburn (Isaac B. Smith's.) Stopping the teams Mr. Altenburg proposed that all should unite in one desperate yell, in order to find out whether any human being was near. Loud and shrill arose that cry on the elmost midnight air, but the loud howl of a pack of wolves, whose name appeared to be legion, was the only reply. After holding their breath in silence awhile, Mr. A. proposed that they should tune their throats anew, and pitch their voices a not or two higher, and even pinch the baby,(now Mr. Henry Altenburg,)that he might join his voice with theirs. This effort was successful, and Mr. Smith came to their rescue with a light, and welcomed them to the hospitalities of his little cabin; for, although about full already,he still had room for two families. The cabin of the pioneers always could hold a few more, in case of emergency, let them be ever so much crowded.

The next morning, bringing up the wagon left in the rear, they started on, and succeeded in driving all of three miles through mud and snow, before drink reaching a little board shanty put up by Mr. Park for two men to lodge in, who were building a bridge over cedar creek, where Union town now is. During the day, they caught a coon, and on it they feasted the following morning; the two families and the two bridge builders having somehow contrived to stow themselves away for the night in the little shanty. In the morning the question was how to get down the high steep bank of of the creek with a loaded wagon. This feat was accomplished by running poles under the body of the wagon and between the spokes of each wheel, so as to lock them all, and then hitching a yoke of oxen to the tongue to hold back, and another yoke to the hind part of the wagon to pull back; the oxen behind making, of course, a desperate effort to prevent being dragged down.

To be brief as possible they settled for awhile in Auburn, and in January moved into Altenburg's cabin, 3 miles east of the village. The cabin was without chimney or daubing and the wolves serenaded them nearly every night. "From the first of January until about the 10th of March," says Mr. Walsworth, "our women saw no human being but their own families, except one man strayed in.—the first night I lay in my cabin," says Mr. Altenburg, "was before we moved in. Dr. Goodell and Walsworth's son were with me.

One of our young men on being asked what State he lived in said: "Darned if I know now, but I used to know the State county and townships.

Several fast horses are now quartered at Waterloo, and we should'nt wonder but what a programme for a days' races will be made out in a short time.

Rev. Mr. Fowler, officiated at the Presbyterian church last Sabbath morning.—In the afternoon Rev. Mr. Fisher filled the place of Mr. F. at Corunna.

A little "cholera scare," about these times, might result in a deodorization and cleaning up, which would be highly conductive to the general good health of our citizens.

Billy Edgerton, our enterprising barber over Totten's, has one of the neatest shops in the county. He has lately added a handsome cup case for the benfit of his numerous customers.

A horse laid down in the harness up street, last Friday, and might have injured itself had Mr. Scott not been around.—He's the worst fellow to be in the right place we ever saw.

When you go a visiting never take a purp along. There came near being a general smash-up, the other day, on account of one, but owing to a certain guest present it was (H)all right.

FOR SALE—By the Subscriber, a new single-seated, leather-top carriage, of latest style and best quality. Will sell materially below cost price.

DR. WM. S. ALLEN.

One of our prominent farmers, we wont say of what party, came in yesterday to hear the joint discussion between Messrs Neff and Buskirk. It was a one-sided affair.

We are obliged to Capt J. B. White, of the Fruit House, for a very large watermelon, and though it measured thirty-six inches in circumference it ain't much bigger than the heart of the donor.

Charley Taylor, of the Fort Wayne Journal, gave us a call last Monday, looking as handsome and pleasant as ever. Its no doubt on account of the handsome new head lately donned by the Journal.

The Fort Wayne News says a merchant was interviewed as to business. "Dull; fearful dull," was the reply. "The fact is nobody buys anything just now but provisions and whisky—the bare necessaries of life as it were."

PETIT JURORS.—The following is a list of the Petit Jurors for the September term of Court—Wm. Mercer, J. R. Cosper, Wm. Whetzell, Geo. Ensley, Jon't Rosenberry, Henry Myers, Martin Hook, D. T. McNabb C. Sneets, Alex Hammond, John Shutt, Isaac Helwig.

We learn from Miss Douds, who has been instructing a class of music in this place, that she is quite ill, and wishes her scholars to know that they are at liberty to engage another teacher. She recommends Miss Balcom, as she will not be able to attend for some weeks.

The Logansport Journal says that work will be commenced, next week, upon the five miles of railroad necessary to connect the L. C. & S. W. R. R. with the D. E. & I. R. R. Cheap coal will thus be assured to Logansport, and her future prosperity as a manufacturing city placed beyond a peradventure.

An independent ticket has been nominated in Allen County, against the regular Democratic ticket. Capt White for clerk, and Mr. Kuhne for Auditor, are men that will not be totally ignored in an intelligent community, in these unpartizan times. It would not surprise nor offend us if they were elected.

The Brick and Tile Works of P. N. Calkin, of Corunna, is unusally active this season. Mr. K. employs a force of fifteen hands, and will make this season more than one million brick and tile. His white pressed brick are the finest in the market and the tile are equally good.—Constant supplies of each are kept on hand to accommodate retail trade.

Attention is solicited to the fact that Boyer's of Waterloo, are selling great quantities of Paint and Oil at prices defying competition, Their stock is the largest in the country, bought for cash and will be sold very cheap. A full line of Drugs, School Books and Wall Paper will always be found at bottom prices.—Paints and Oils a speciality. Postoffice building, Waterloo, Ind. 2t

We noticed a doctor standing in front of one of our groceries, with his "gash" stretched from ear to ear, looking with a deep-meaning smile upon a large lot of green cucumbers. On his way he was observed to whisper confidentially to several undertakers.

The difference in natures was well illustrated at the Eel River depot. Two sisters met. "O, my dear sister!" said one exhaustedly, as they embraced. "You've been eating onions," said the other, "and I can't for the life of me see how you can stomach 'em. You don't want to around John with such a breath as that, or he'll sack you, sure.

The weather has been so warm and dry for several weeks past, that it has become the soul topic of conversation, and political questions are left in the shade.—All along the street weathercocks, as they are commonly called, can be seen squinting one eye toward the heavens, then feel a minute on that keen where the rheumatism visits, and say, No rain, sir, for several weeks.

The Butler News has been floundering around loose long enough, and last week concluded to cast its fortunes with the Grant party. It will now no doubt be for our Long-Branch President, Boss Shepherd, Garfield and other "punishments" inflicted by that party. Well, we would rather see it something than nothing, and Weamer made a mistake when he started it politically on nothing.

Indianapolis Methodists are enjoying their Acton camp-meeting with greater refreshing this year than ever before.—Why should not Auburn have an annual session of worship in "God's own temple's, with all the denominations joining in and managing the meeting? It would require a little sacrifice of lazy ease and comfort, but it could not fail to cement the "tie that binds," and gather many trophies for the churches represented.—

NEW BOOK STORE.—At last this much needed addition to our town has come.—Mr. C. P. Houser, has opened a large stock of school and standard books, historical, poetical and literary works, embracing the best authors known. He keeps a fine stock, of papers, envelopes, wall paper, pens, pencils and many other articles. Call and see the fine display at Stamets' Fancy Store, in Ensley's block north of Court House.

HYDROPHOBIA CURED.—A sure remedy, or preventive of this terrible disease after having been inoculated, is now in the hands of Mr. Henry Klinger of Cedar Creek Dekalb County Ind. He vouches for its efficacy and says it has stood the test for, thirty years having saved a number of lives. He will send the medicine to any part of the United States, and no cure no pay. Regular charges, $25. Applicants should send fifty cents to have it sent through the mail.

Nominations.

At the Republican Congressional Convention at Kendallville, last Tuesday, J. H. Baker, of Goshen, was nominated on the 4th ballot. the other candidates being Judge Clapp and J. D. Thayer. The Convention endorsed the State platform, and complimented Mr. Saylor. J. L. Morlan, of Waterloo, was nominated for Prosecutor for this judicial district.

The nomination is very satisfactory—to the Democracy—and by a judicious selection on our part, we think Mr. Baker can be laid upon the shelf. So mote it be.

If that individual "not a thousand miles from Warsaw," regrets the part he took in starting a dollar subscription to buy us a pair of boots, in place of those we lost, by sending his bill to this office his claim shall be liquidated. The boots were presented to us for some little service rendered and we are bound there shall be no "squealing" if we have to return every cent. How the Indianian can make its remarks applicable to the quotation from the COURIER, is more than we can comprehend. But the ways of the General is past finding out. We done nothing to be ashamed of on that excursion. Can all say as much.

From Druggists.

There is no case of Dyspepsia that Green's August Flower will not cure. Come to the Drug Store of Davenport & Co., and inquire about it. If you suffer from costiveness, Sick Headach, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, or derangement of the System, try it. Two or three doses will relieve you.

Boschee's German Syrup is now sold in every town and City in the United States. We have not less than five hundred letters from Druggists, say ing it is the best medicine they ever sold for Consumption, Throat or Lung disease. 75 cents. per bottle.

To stand on Fluke's corner of an evening and see the crowds of ladies and gentlemen passing, one would think that this place contains a heap of wealth. Girls from fourteen to eighteen summers are all out in handsome attire, with those "becoming" wide rimed hats, that make them look so granger like, and those twin alegators, beneath the calico, make a fellow feel as if the coming corn crop is working out all hunky. To look at them about the waist you would think that they hav'nt had a square meal for a month; but nature has taught us that appearances are often deceiving, and the young men should think of this before gobblin' 'em in. Many a pale, thin girl will eat more corn beef than a carpenter. Because you find her playing the organ in the parlor it is no sign that the old man is not down street standing off the merchant for a peck of potatoes and John Hebel for a sup of "let me die." We have a tender compassion for our hard working, saving young men and for this reason alone we hang on the corner.

ABOUT ELEPHANTS.—Elephants are the largest animals known except a whale, but some times there are whaling big elephants. They eat hay and go around with circuses. The biggest elephat is now owned by Henry Ward Tilton.—These animals are rather indolent, but very cunning, no doubt on account of their associations. We have recently heard of an affecting story about an elephant, which we would'nt tell for the world. Its about a showman belonging to Davis' circus here last week. He started from the tent went about a mile as fast as he could run, so as to be well rowed, and then rushed frantically into Davenport's drug store, and in breathless haste called for a pint of whisky, says that the baby elephant had knocked a man down with a bucket, hit him in the back, and every breath he took was expected to be his next. Catching the spirit of the occasion, the druggist flew for a bottle, filled it with the fiery liquid, and, in a jiffy, handed it over to the expectant showman who rushed forth like a good Samaritan in the relief of the distressed. Now comes the saddest part. The elephant had not hurt anybody, did'nt want to see no bucket unless it was full of oats, and would'nt hurt a kitten. If you want to see where the laugh comes in, just run in and tell Davenport you have been tramped wid an elephant and want a pint of whisky, and if you don't get more than a good laugh out of it we are mistaken.

WATERLOO, IND. AUG. 13th, 1874.

MR. EDITOR.—As our little blear-eyed editor seems to be considerably agitated over the fact that the State Democratic resolutions, which seem to reject the Baxter Bill, were adopted by our county convention, on motion of a temperance Democrat, I trust an explanation may be given through your valuable paper. To one whose mind has been schooled and trained to think and investigate much in a circle no larger than a cart-wheel, such a motion may appear strange, viewing these resolutions from that little editors stand-point. It would seem impossible for a Democrat to be a temperance man, and if this be so then where shall he go for refuge? To answer this we must search the record of parties, and after investigating the record of the Republican party from the day they commenced rolling their drunken Senators into Congress to the time they swung their hats for loyal Grant, whose garments were saturated with forty rod whisky, we would ask the little editor in the name of humanity to show a single act favoring the temperance movement. To their eternal disgrace the Republican party held the reins of government for twelve long years, trampling upon the constitution, violating every known principle of justice, passing laws and inaugurating customs calculated to make every American blush and yet having every means at their disposal, without fear of opposition, they could not find it in their hearts to pass one temperance act. In view of these facts I think any insinuation from a Republican on the subject of temperance comes with very ill grace. There are some men in the Republican party temperance men, but they are not there on that account. As well might an angel of light search the realms of eternal darkness for virtue as a temperance man to rely on that party to support a temperance move.

Temperance men of all parties hailed the Baxter bill in good faith, not as a party measure but as a measure that seemed to meet the views of temperance men everywhere. By the decisions of the Supreme Court it has been shorn of many of its best features and as it stands now a rigid license law, yielding a large revenue is preferable. Though the Democratic platform is not all the temperance men could desire, yet they will be justified in supporting it, as opposition thereto would identify them with a party that cares for naught but spoils, and that has, as I have shown above, failed to legislate in a single act in favor of the temperance element. The temperance men will stand with the Democratic party, not because of their position on the temperance question, but because that grand old party is waging a war against a political organization that has not only taxed the people beyond endurance but have prepared burthens for the backs of the unborn millions of our posterity. Temperance men can then rally to its support with perfect consistency, as they have never derived any benefit from the Radical party, and never will while their is a dollar to steal, scallawags in office, and miserable creamy mouthed editors like him of the Press to support them.

IRON HAND.

Wholesale Paper House.

It has only been a short time since Mr. C. A. Saunders opened up a wholesale paper house in Fort Wayne, but it has been established long enough to demonstrate the fact that it is meeting a demand long felt, and adding one more of these enterprises indispensable in as thriving and prosperous a section of country as Northern Indiana. It was first established more as an experiment, and Mr. Sanders little dreamed of the general patronage that has been developed, through excellent business management, and by strict attention to the demands made upon them What was a few months ago but a limited affair, has now assumed proportions in keeping with other wholesale establishments.

A large trade is being extended from this place, and those who are numbered among his customers, are expressing great satisfaction at both prices and quality of paper. The wrapping paper and bags, for the retail trade, which he is supplying, defies competition both as to price and quality.

Several of our business men are already being supplied from this house, and from the way they are pleased no doubt many more will follow. The store is located in the new Ewing block on Clinton st., and when in the city our traders would do well to call and see the splendid stock of everything that should be found in a first-class paper store. Mr. Saunders is one of those agreeable, genial fellows, who makes friends wherever he goes and Mr. Renner, the manager, is always attentive and alive to business

Old rags taken in exchange for goods, at the highest price. Wrapping twines always on hand.

There was not a very large turn out yesterday, to hear Buskirk and Neff, but we can assure our readers that none present can regret being there as these gentlemen made most excellent speeches, listened to with the greatest attention. We are gratified at their success, their manly and dignified treatment of the political issues of the day, and regret on this account that there were not more present.

Our sweet tempered Louie, him with the golden ringlets and King William mustasche, lit out yesterday in a little neat hiding scheme, and will take a tilt on the sea of matrimony, this evening at Huntington We wish him a world of success.

MOSLEM JUSTICE.

My friend—I will not give his name, as the magnates of the law might chide him for "telling stories out of school,"—has been a Sheriff in our county for years, and understands all the crooks and turns of the law and courts. Not long since I met him just set free from an attendance upon the April term of the Supreme Court, and he was particularly worn and jaded. Said he, in the course of conversation:

"I tell you, sir, this trial by jury, which we hold so high in the scale of human rights, is the veriest humbug that ever was. For fifteen years I have attended every term of our courts—the Supreme, Judicial, the Superior and the Law Terms—and the longer I live in this experience the more disgusted I become with the average working of the jury system. In a squad of twelve jurymen there is no individual responsibility. Eight of them may be honest and intelligent; two of them may be stupid and opinionated; and in nine cases out of ten, at least, you will find two who are partial and unscrupulous—two men who are friends of one of the contending parties, and who will stick to him through thick and thin.

"Only night before last," he went on, "I was out in charge of a jury from six o'clock in the evening until almost daylight on the following morning. The case was one of contract. The contractor had sued for work done. The defendant produced the written contract in court, and showed that the prosecutor had broken said contract in nearly every stipulation, and also proved that not half the work agreed upon had been done; and, furthermore, he clearly established that, as the contractor had left him, he was a sufferer by the imperfect work thus imperfectly begun. Upon the jury were found four friends of the prosecutor—men ignorant, pugnacious and stubborn. They insisted that the prosecutor was entitled to full pay, as per contract, for every day's work performed, and for every article of material furnished. And they sat back against the wall and waited for the other eight to give in. And at three o'clock in the morning, after having been under lock and key for nine hours (it was Saturday morning, and they must go home), those eight men gave in!"

And my friend said much more which I will not repeat. He told things which he had known to transpire in the jury-room which would be hardly credited by a confiding public. One was where a tired jury decided an important case by the flip of a penny, "Heads for the plaintiff—tails for the defendant." Heads it was, and the defendant got his case.

My friend's remarks and reminiscences brought to my mind a few items of my experience with Moslem justice, and as we had plenty of time on our hands, I related to him the following, as I have it in my Log of a Three Years' Cruise upon the waters and shores of the Mediterranean—1841-2-3 and part of 1844.

We went from Jerusalem to Constantinople overland (when I say, "We, "I mean Capt. Wm. Nichols, Lieut. Charles G. Hunter, Midshipman John McLeod Murphy, and myself, all of the United States navy), and a small town at the southern base of Mount Arjiah, in the Pachalic of Karamania. On the evening of our arrival I learned that an old Mollah (man of law) had come from Karakissar to hold court; and he whose name was Ben Ahmed—had a certain portion of the Pachalic under his charge, and in all cases not capital, and not involving direct State affairs, his decision is final. He was both Judge and jury—law-giver, expounder and executor. From his decision there was no appeal. Should he prove corrupt, of course there were higher powers to which he was amenable—and woe to the officer of Turkish corruption! I had heard of the wisdom of these of old Moslem justices, and as two of the cases which would be brought forward on the present occasion had been explained to me, I had a curiosity to see how they would be disposed of.

It was near the middle of the forenoon when I gained a favorable seat in an open court of the market place, where the judgments were to be rendered. Most of the space was covered by an awning of cotton cloth, and the arrangement for order was perfect. The Mollah was a man of full threescore and ten, tall and handsome; his flowing beard white as snow, and his eyes bright as clear stars.

The first case was the disputed possession of a slave. The plaintiff was an elderly man, named Mustapha, by profession a jewel merchant. The defendant was a youthful peasant, named Galbec. The slave was a Circassian girl, and quite pretty, and at present in custody of the peasant Galbec, who claimed to be her owner.

"The girl is mine," said the jewel merchant earnestly; "I bought her ten years ago when a mere child, and have reared her and provided for her until within a year past."

"The girl is mine," said the peasant, a stout, well-looking young fellow of not more than five and twenty. "I bought her of her own father for my wife three years ago. Listen not to that old man. He would deceive you. Let judgment be rendered for me who am the girl's lawful owner and true husband."

Ben-Ahmed then appealed to the girl herself, and asked her to which of these two men she belonged.

"Galbec is my husband," she said. "He has owned me for three years. I have attended to Galbec's flocks, and helped him to harvest his corn and grapes."

"What did you do before you lived with him?"

"I lived with my parents in Okop."

"Were they peasants?"

"They were."

There were no witnesses to be called. The parties were strangers in the place, and their own testimony was available. Galbec evidently loved the girl, and it was natural that she should prefer him for her master. Yet the old jewel merchant seemed honest, and was earnest in his claim.

"I must take time to consider upon this," said the Mollah. And he made the girl sit near him, while the two claimants stepped back.

The next case was a disputed possession of a saddle. A middle-aged Armenian, named Saladeen, laid claim to a saddle that was in possession of a mountain guide named Aboul Muzzafar. The saddle, which had been held by an officer during the morning, was produced in court. It was a very valuable one, made of the finest leather, and elaborately ornamented.

"The saddle is mine," said Saladeen. "I bought it of a Jew at Nigdeh for three hundred piasters. This villain stole it while I slept by the roadside on the other side of the mountain."

"Believe him not," said Aboul Muzzafar. "The saddle is mine. My brother in Konich made it for me. This fellow saw it, and wished to buy it, but when I refused to sell it he tried to take it from me by force. I overcame him, and he was angry and swore vengeance; and he has resorted to this trial in hopes of obtaining it."

In this case, as in the other, there were no witnesses. Both men seemed very earnest, and both maintained an honest exterior.

The old Mollah took the saddle and examined it.

"It is a valuable saddle," said he, as he passed his hand over the plain surface. "I am at a loss which one of you to believe."

"Me, me," cried Aboul, "It is mine."

"Justice," exclaimed Saladeen, "I only ask justice."

"Ah!" muttered the Mollah, passing his finger over the embossed leather near the bow of the saddle. "What have we here? Give me a knife."

The attendant tshawooska handed up a knife, and the judge proceeded to rip open a seam in the saddle bow, and with an exclamation of surprise he took therefrom four pieces of gold.

"Aha! And you make this your treasury, my good Aboul Muzzafar."

"Yes, most excellent judge," replied Aboul, with a low bow. "I hid it there so that I might not be robbed of it."

"Saladeen," said the Mollah, turning to the elderly claimant, "what have you to say to this? Did your saddle have money concealed in it?"

"No, sir, not that I know of," the man replied, with a crestfallen expression. "The Jew of whom I bought it might have had money concealed in it, but I did not know it."

"Very well," pronounced Ben Ahmed, rising to his feet. "Saladeen, the saddle is yours. As for you, Aboul Muzzafar, you shall pay to Saladeen ten piasters for the trouble to which you have put him, and this evening you shall receive one hundred lashes of the bastinado. I caused the gold to be sewed up in the saddle this morning."

Aboul was led away by two officers, while Saladeen took his ten piasters and his saddle, and went his way rejoicing.

Two cases of simple award were next disposed of, and following these came the case of a man who had purchased for jewels that had proved to be only bits of glass. The man who had purchased was present, and the man who had sold, was also present. The first claimed that he had bought the baubles for rubies and emeralds, and paid a good price. The merchant could not deny that he had sold them. He bought them for pure stones, and had so supposed them.

The Mollah took the jewels in his hand, and then took something from his vest pocket which he compared them with.

"Why," said he, smiling, "this is only glass, as any one can tell. Here—this simple peasant girl would know better than to purchase these for true stones. What say you?"

As he spoke he handed the glittering trinket to the Circassian girl who had been claimed by the two men. He smiled encouragingly, and she took the jewel. She weighed it upon the end of her finger, and then touched it to her tongue.

"Is it not glass?" asked the Mollah.

"No, sir," the girl confidently replied. "I should say it was a pure ruby and of great price!"

"Ah! say you so? And these—are these also stones?"

And he handed her the jewels in dispute. She took them, touched them each to her tongue in turn, and then said:

"The first, sir, was a true stone; but these are all glass."

"It is as I thought," returned the Mollah. "The first was a ruby of my own. These others are but worthless imitations."

And he decreed that the merchant should pay back the full price he had received, and that the baubles should be destroyed. And as, in pleading, the culprit still persisted in declaring that he sold the stones in good faith, the Judge further decreed that the officers should affix over the door of his shop a board with this inscription upon it: "The merchant within is liable to sell glass for pure stones. Treat with him accordingly."

The dishonest diamond merchant refunded the money he had received for his false stones, and went away with the assurance that if he removed the placard which should be placed above his door his ears would be split.

Then the old Mollah turned to the Circassian girl.

"Girl," said he, sternly, "you belong to the jewel-merchant Mustapha. Go with him, and be it his to punish you for your falsehood."

Galbec started forward with a cry of wrath and dismay, still claiming the girl as his.

"Stop," interrupted Ben-Ahmed. "The wife of a simple peasant, reared as you claim your wife to have been reared, could not judge of precious stones so quickly and so unerringly. She belongs to the jewel-merchant, who had educated her after his calling. But that shalt not go off bootless, Galbec. Thou shalt pay to Mustapha the sum of twenty piasters for the service of his slave, and for thy false swearing thou shalt be taken out with Aboul Muzzafar and receive fifty lashes of the bastinado."

I witnessed others of the old Mollah's judgments, and I left him with a feeling of respect and veneration.

"Think of it," cried my friend the sheriff, when I told him the story, "just imagine that Mollah to have been in the place of one of our judges with two smart lawyers and an average jury between him and judgment."

"Think of another thing: Look into one of our civil or criminal courts. The Judge is supposed to be the most candid, impartial, and enlightened member of the court. He knows the law, and he alone sits without prejudice or favor. And yet his hands alone are tied. He is tied by the letter of the law. The lawyers may flout and bewilder and badger as much as they please; and in the end the jury may feel the whole weight of the law and testimony at defiance, and settle the case upon the hazard of a die! Verily there is a screw loose somewhere!"

"De Dog Ish Howlin'."

An old gentleman whose style was Germanized was asked what he thought of signs and omens.

Killed by a Rattlesnake.

A. S. Heep and some friends started out with a view to examine some land to determine its adaptability for grazing purposes. They had traveled some distance when their attention was aroused by a sharp whirring noise. Not being acquainted with the sound of a rattlesnake's warning, the party kept advancing and only stopped when the venomous reptile, which was coiled and secreted in a dense tuft of grass and weeds, sprang forth and buried its poisoned, death-bearing fangs clear through the woolen clothes Heep wore, into the main artery of his left leg, just above the knee. Involuntarily, as he felt the pain of the bite of the snake, he leaned forward to examine the wound, and as he did so, the reptile, which had again coiled up, sprang forward and struck him on the right cheek, about an inch below the eye. By this time his friends came forward and dispatched the reptile. No remedies were at hand. Rapidly the deadly poison diffused itself through his veins; his limbs began to swell; the pupils of his eyes to distend, and soon he was in the throes of death. He died in twenty minutes after being bitten.—Fresno (Cal.) Expositor.

The Fate of Switzer's Family Dog.

Switzer is a tender-hearted man, living on Croghan street. He had a dog. It was a monster canine, with cropped ears, stump-tail, and one eye missing, but the Switzer family loved that dog. They didn't call him "purty," but they praised him for a dog that put away all high-nosed thoughts and did his best as a family pet. He knew is place and if he couldn't wag but six inches of stump when Switzer came home from his daily toil, they knew that it was circumstances alone which prevented. It was a beautiful sight to see the Switzer family seated on the front step of an evening, surrounded by that dog, and they never dreamed until the other day that "Amsterdam"—so they called him, would pass away before whortleberries had fallen to a shilling a quart. Such is life, and perhaps it is just as well. Early last week this dog—this Amsterdam—put his teeth into a fat leg which passed the gate, the owner of the leg notified the police, and the police notified Switzer. Amsterdam must be shot, clubbed, poisoned, or drowned. Mr. Switzer's hair rose up, his wife wept, and the young Switzer hung on the gate and howled. They tried to save him by offering half a dollar to the officer, but he shook his head and wanted to know where that dog was. When Mr. Switzer found there was no escape he said he couldn't bare to have Amsterdam laid low by a stranger. He would do the cruel work himself, and he would be so gentle about it that it would not hurt the victim much. He sent the little Switzers to the grocer's, his wife went up-stairs, and he tied a rope around Amsterdam's neck and secured him to a shade tree several blocks from the house. Then he got a club, took off his coat, and the hard-hearted policeman stood to see the law enforced. When Switzer got ready he shut his eyes and aimed a blow at the dog's head. Amsterdam leaped aside, and Switzer hit the tree and cried "by dunder!" He tried it again, and Amsterdam jumped the other way and let the club and Mr. Switzer hit the ground together, while the crowd cried out and swung their hats. Mr. Switzer got mad then, and dashed in and gave Amesterdam one on the back, but got his feet tangled in the rope, and dog and man rolled over and over together. When he got up he chased the dog around the street, striking at his hind legs, but in trying to get in an awful blow he rooted the sod up with his nose, and the playful dog sat down on his head. The policeman then offered his baton, and he held Amsterdam and told Mr. Switzer to put in a regular old sockdologer right between the eyes. His instructions were followed, and Mr. Switzer hit himself on the knee and jumped around and shouted: "I have pretty near knocked my brains out!" The officer wanted to shoot the dog then, but Mr. Switzer preferred to do it himself and he took the revolver. Standing within four feet of Amsterdam he shot into a barn, grazed a fence, nearly hit a street car, and was just about to kill a boy, when the officer jumped in and with his baton knocked Amsterdam as cold as a hitching-post. Mr. Switzer stood over the body for a moment heaved a sigh, and then turned away and said, "Dat's shust de way by dem police—dey don't care how much dey hurt a dog when dey kill him."—Detroit Free Press.

A Will with Curious Antecedents.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the property of the late Robert Roberts, Jr., of Medfield, brings to light a reminiscence of the reign of terror in France. It appears that the elder Robert Roberts was a sea captain at that time, and when about returning from France a wealthy Frenchman applied for passage to this country in order to escape the headsman's ax. He shipped his effects, including $100,000 in gold, but, before he could get away, he was arrested and beheaded. Capt. Roberts immediately put to sea, not daring to remain in French waters after having attempted to aid a man in escaping, returned to this country, settled in Mdfield, and invested the $100,000. Upon his death he placed it in trust in the hands of the Hospital Life Insurance Company, and by the terms of his will the income only could be used by the junior Roberts, the principal to be given to his children. Roberts, Jr., died recently, having been married twice, and leaving no children except an adopted child, this child having been adopted by himself and last wife. There was an informality in the adoption, but, nevertheless, the Supreme Court has decided that the property belongs to the child, although there were nine other claimants, mostly nephews and nieces of the junior Roberts. The case has been through a long and tedious course of law, but the $100,000 has found a legal owner at last.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

The Spread of Cholera.

Recent investigations in regard to the nature of cholera, when regarded from one point of view, are by no means reassuring. Physicians of repute are not at variance in the opinion that in giving pandemic extension to the disease the power of human intercourse is not irrespective of important qualifications in regard to time and place, but they hold also that, those qualifications granted, human intercourse is the essential agent in the propagation of this most terrible disorder. Dr. Simon, the medical officer of the English Local Government Board, has recently shown that for European Russia, and probably for all Europe—as for America also—the infection is slowly assimilating itself in this respect to the typhoid fever, a bowel infection of by no means rare occurrence. The probability of having cholera a common and unpreventable disease cannot be regarded except with dismay, although as it shall become more frequent in its attacks it will be likely to become less virulent and be more easily dealt with by sanitary regulation. In regard to its approaches England has abandoned quarantine as useless, and in other countries has been proved to be more or less futile. Proper defenses against it consist only in judicious sanitary regulations such as every city and town is competent to form for itself. Such defenses have done much to lessen the frequency and virulence of typhoid fever, and will be equally valuable as against cholera. It is well for us to think of such things in time.

Nazareth.

A traveler in the Holy Land describing the birth-place of Christ, writes as follows:

The population of Nazareth is probably about 4,000. Its situation, although not particularly beautiful, is rather striking. It is built on the hill-side, and, from our camp, which was somewhat below, and at a little distance from the town, we could have something like a bird's-eye view of the place, the houses towering one above the other.

There is a large Latin convent here, which the monks claim covers the site of the house where Mary lived, and in which she received the angel Gabriel.

The most marvelous part of the story, however, is that the house itself is now in Italy. There is a tradition—of course without the least historic testimony—that when the infidels triumphed over the Christian arms in this Holy Land, the angels took special charge of the sacred house, and conveyed it first to Dalmatia, and afterwards to Loretto, in Italy, and to-day the "Santa lara," or holy house of Loretto, is probably the most frequented shrine in the world, being visited every day by crowds of pious pilgrims, who never doubt as to its identity.

The traveler is also shown in Nazareth the workshop of Christ, or, rather, of Joseph, where the Savior is supposed to have worked at the carpenter's trade. But this is to be regarded with about as much credulity as most other holy places in Palestine, that is to say, with a good deal of doubt.

From the hill that rises back of Nazareth we had one of the most charming views that we have enjoyed in any part of our travels. We had the rich green plain of Esdraelon on the south, dotted on its southern edge with numerous little villages, among which we could distinguish Nain and Endor, the former the place where the widow's son was restored to life, and the latter the place noted for Saul's interview with the witch. To the west was Mount Carmel with the Mediterranean washing its base, and away in the north we could see the snowy top of Mount Hermon, while to the east we had Mount Tabor, with its dome-like top.

One-Legged Pants and Cavalry Boots.

A one-legged soldier walking up the Bowery, New York, the other day, was accosted by a clothing merchant with the usual "Sell you something to-day?" Entering the store the veteran was invited to inspect the large stock, but having looked through the array of coats and vests and trousers, he turned to go, saying that he saw nothing there that would suit him.

"Vell, vat you vants?"

"I want a pair of one-legged pantaloons."

"Vos dat all? Yacob, bring me one of dem one-legged gray pants on dot pile in the corner."

In a few minutes Jacob returned and reported that the pair had been sold.

Meanwhile the partner next door who had been listening through the thin partition had mapped out a plan of campaign against the one-legged cripple. "Yohn," he whispered to an attendant, "cut me off de leg of one of dem gray pants. Send him up quick."

By the time this had been done the soldier hobbled out of the first store only to be inveigled into the second. Again he went through the inspection of odds and ends, and again demanded one-legged trousers, intimating that he didn't believe the trade had them.

"Not haf one-legged pants. Fadder Moses, vat you takes me for? Yohn, bring me one of dem one-legged gray pants in dat pile in de back of the sthore."

The newly-altered trousers were produced, and the waggish soldier gave himself up as lost. But as he spread them before him he became conscious, as did the dealer, of something wrong.

"Mein Gott! Fadder Abraham! John! you haf ruin me! You haf cut off de wrong leg."

Another of the Chatham street dealers had what he called army brogans and cavalry boots. An ex-soldier purchased a pair of the latter one rainy day, but returned to the store within a few minutes, complaining that the soles were of pasteboard and had already soaked to a pulp.

"Vot you vas done mit dem boots?" asked the dealer.

"Why, I walked two or three blocks."

"Valk! You valk in dem boots! Vy dem is gavalry boots!"

A CELEBRATED barrister was in the habit of saying, "I always study the feesibility of a case before I undertake it."

WISHART'S
PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL

Nature's Great Remedy
FOR ALL THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE OR ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL in the various diseases arising from IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

Expensive Rat-Fazing.

An Elkton man was bothered with the rats, and, hearing that they were fond of clams, put up a game on the rodents. Procuring a number of bivalves, and opening the shells, he plentifully sprinkled them with arsenic, and placed them where the rats could find them. About ten days later the man and his family were living in a tent, and the house was being overhauled by a gang of carpenters. The well-water didn't taste good either; so while a well-digger was investigating it, the family got their water from a spring about a mile distant. The result of the inquiry was seven rats under the floor and three in the well. The total cost of laborers and disinfectants was $100, or $10 a rat.

A TEACHER asked an advanced school-girl why beer in French was feminine. She replied that it was probably owing to the fact that the boys liked it so well.

ATTEND to the first symptoms of Consumption, and that disease may be checked in its incipiency. Use immediately Dr. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, a safe remedy in all diseases of the lungs.

Another Wild Man of the Mountains.

On last Friday morning, says the Knoxville Press and Herald, of Aug. 2, about 2 o'clock, a young man entered the house of John Webb, at "Buckeye Tavern," the usual stopping place midway between Caryville and the Cincinnati Southern railroad, near Chitwood, about ten or twelve miles beyond Caryville, and threw himself into a bed along with some gentleman stopping there for the night. The landlord, Mr. Webb, being aroused, found the young man in a state of intense excitement, and at first supposed he was drunk. But on trying to induce him to take lodgings elsewhere, it was ascertained that he was not intoxicated, but wild or crazy. Then Mr. Webb tried to induce him to remain and take quarters with him but failed. He became excited and ran away, and, strange to say, a fine mastiff dog of Mr. Webb's followed him, and was found with him and very much attached to him, six or eight miles distant, later on the same day. The first heard of the strange man after leaving Webb's, was early on Friday morning at Mr. Neal's several miles off, in Scott county. He was accompanied by Webb's dog, which seemed to have linked fortunes with him. He, in company with the dog, slipped into the house of Mr. Neal, and seized a four-year-old child and started for the woods. Neal pursued him, when he fled at great speed, leaving the child, the dog continuing with him. Here he became wholly destitute of any clothing save a shirt. The neighbors became aroused, and after running him through the mountain gorges for more than ten miles, succeeded in capturing him late in the afternoon of Friday. It was with the greatest difficulty that Webb induced his dog to leave him and return home, the canine showing many signs of sympathy with the unfortunate young man. Our informant saw him soon after he was captured. He was then much exhausted, and going through all the maneuvers of a tired dog—panting, shaking his sides, and lolling or dropping out his tongue to its full length and letting it hang out. At times he would go through the most remarkable grimace and distortions of his face and whole body. His captors had succeeded in getting a pair of pantaloons on him. He had talked a little in a very uncouth style; had asked for something to eat, drank a few sips of water, and commenced gnawing a huge piece of corn-bread. He gave his name most generally, as George Hyath, of Town Creek, Claiborne county, though he used other names frequently when asked in regard to his name. He is somewhere between 20 and 30 years old, being of that peculiar appearance that gives but little index to true age. He has some hair on his face, which leaves the observer in doubt as to whether it is a boyish fuzz, or a half-grown, or half a week's growth of hair.

He is not an idiot. He is a wild man. How long he has been such, or what has caused it, our informant seems to regard as matters of doubt. Those who had him in charge are good citizens, who designed proceeding to Huntsville and taking all necessary steps for his comfort and welfare.

A Very Loose Man.

For the past day or two, says the Providence Journal, there has been in this city a colored man who presents in himself a queer physiological freak. He is 34 years of age, thick set, of medium height, of fair intelligence, and was born in Manchester, England. He gains a livelihood by exhibiting himself to physicians. His abdomen is naturally full, but at will, without the use of his hands, he gives it a wave-like motion, and it gradually sinks in as if being wound up, until it apparently rests close against the back-bone, and he presents the appearance of a man with no abdomen, and then, in the same manner, he rolls it out to its original form. He then drops from under his ribs a duplicate set of ribs, with a breast-bone, when the original ribs and the duplicates can be distinctly felt and counted, and the whole front of the body is, as it were, iron-clad. Or, at will, he apparently drops his head from its natural position some twelve inches, puts it back, and sends it to the right side of the body, opposite its natural position, puts it back and sends it to to the lower part of the body on the right side, thus putting it in four different positions. During these changes the two sounds of the heart can be distinctly heard in either of these new positions, and not where they usually are heard. It seems to be necessary, however, that after each change it should go back where it belongs before being sent to a new quarter. He also has the power to stop the beating of his heart at will, from five to ten seconds at a time, the pulse stopping at the same time. He seems also to have considerable strength, easily bending by a blow on the arm, a heavy iron cane which he carries. Several of our prominent physicians have examined him, from one of whom we have obtained these facts, and pronounce him to be the greatest curiosity in physiology they have ever seen or heard of.

A Horse Attacked With Hydrophobia.

The Liverpool Daily Albion says: "A remarkable case of hydrophobia has occurred at Robert Town, Liverpool, near Dewsbury. On the 16th of last May a mare, the property of Edward Walker, farmer, was bitten by a small black-and-tan terrier dog, which was seen to run into the stable in which the mare was located. Mr. Walker drove it away, and, although he followed it, lost sight of it in one of the lanes of the village. Half an hour afterward the dog returned to the stable and again snapped at the mare, whereupon she kicked. On the 2d inst. the horses lip became very much swollen, and Mr. Sumner, veterinary surgeon, having been called in, he treated for a disease known as the 'straggles.' On Monday night, however, the animal became very violent, and snapped and bit at everything within her reach. Ultimately she exhibited all the symptoms of hydrophobia. The veterinary surgeon pronounced that she was suffering from the disease and consequently she was shot."

"HAVEN'T I a right to be saucy if I please?" asked a young lady of an old bachelor. "Yes, if you please, but not if you displease," was the answer.

British Beer.

A Parliamentary paper lately issued shows that, including "beginners," paying 12s 6d each for their license, and of whom there are 3,179, the total number of licensed common brewers in the United Kingdom last year was 29,929, and the total amount of license duty paid by them was £416,116 7s. besides net supplementary charges amounting to £22,239 6s additional. One brewing firm paid £10,784 12s 6d as license duty on over 850,000 barrels of ale and under 900,000; and three brewers paid license duty on over 650,000 barrels and under 700,000 each, their aggregate contributions to the revenue amounting to £25,378 7s. The total number of brewers not being victualers or persons licensed to sell beer on the premises in the United Kingdom in 1873 was 2,671, of whom 2,522 belong to England; the victualers were 99,061 in number, 69,948 belonging to England; and persons licensed to sell beer on the premises, all of whom are in England, reached a total of 40,701. There were 18,686 victualers in England who brewed their own beer. The amount of malt consumed by common brewers not being victualers or holding retail license was 45,533,976 bushels; by victualers, 7,570,588 bushels; by persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on their premises, 3,682,083 bushels; and by persons licensed to retail beer not to be drunk on the premises, 458,993 bushels. The total exports of beer from the United Kingdom between the 1st of October, 1872, and the 1st of October, 1873, amounted to 583,602 barrels, the total declared value of which amounted to £2,385,386.

A Prince's Financial Troubles.

A London letter says: "A report has suddenly gained currency that the long-expected crisis has occurred in the financial affairs of the Prince of Wales, and that the Ministry have made up their minds to propose to the House of Commons, at the next session, to pay his debts. The sum named is £40,000 sterling, four times the sum that was voted in 1787 to appease the creditors of that pattern of royalty who afterwards became George IV. About paying the bills there are certain to be two powerful and contradictory sentiments, one that the honor of the nation is concerned in providing for the debts of its future King; the other that these debts are of a character which ought to be paid out of the accumulated fortune of the Queen. The latter view rests on the well-known fact that the Queen has been receiving, ever since the death of Prince Albert, the whole of the income calculated at her decession to support the expenses of the Court in the usual degree of splendor; that Her Majesty has, however, lived during this period, for the most part, in retirement, and the cost of the drawing-room levees and other royal pageantry has, in fact, fallen upon the Prince and Princess of Wales, whose income has been unequal to such a burden. The existing debts, or a considerable part of them, have, according to this theory, been incurred in the discharge of these duties; hence it is urged that the Queen, who has had and kept money given to her by the State for such purposes, ought to pay them. The Prince of Wales has £40,000 a year, plus the revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall, which now amounts to over £100,000 per annum."

An Ice-House for Five Dollars.

A neighbor of mine, says a correspondent, has an inclosure about six feet square in the clear, and six feet high. The walls are formed of old refuse timbers thrown carelessly together, with no regard to form or comeliness. The roof is made of hemlock boards. The entire cost of this building did not exceed five dollars; and, practically considered, it is a success; not ambitious of containing thirty-five loads of ice, but simply five loads. Ten years this little, unpretentious house has been used for ice, and never yet dishonoured a draft upon its crystal deposit. About six inches of sawdust was spread upon the ground floor, and in packing a space of about nine inches was left between the ice and the walls of the building for sawdust, and about nine inches of sawdust was spread upon the top of the ice, and the thing was fixed. The three main principles observed here will always insure a supply of ice, viz.: good ventilation, good drainage and plenty of sawdust. With these rules adhered to a corner of any old pen-shed will prove quite efficient in preserving ice.

A RECENT trial in Massachusetts involved the question whether Spiritualism is a form of religion or not. A lady had the misfortune to receive an injury while riding on Sunday in one of the cars of the Middlesex Railway Company. She was at the time returning from a camp-meeting of Spiritualists. It was in evidence that she was a Spiritualist by profession. The injury was clearly proven, but the railway company complains that she had no right to recover damages inasmuch as she was traveling in violation of the Sunday laws of the State. The point urged was that she was not traveling on account of necessity or charity, neither was she going to or returning from a religious meeting. For all this the jury returned a verdict of $5,000 in her favor. On appeal the case was argued elaborately on both sides, but the Supreme Court refused to disturb the finding of the court below. It held that she had as much right to protection in riding from her camp-meeting as a Methodist had in returning from his. Her religion might be very absurd, but it was a question for her and her Maker and not for the courts.

HERE is a good story that Rev. Dr. Adams tells of himself. A lady parishioner once remarked to him that his sermons were a little too long.

"Don't you think so, Dr. Adams," said she, "just a little?"

"Ah, good sister," said he, "I am afraid you don't like the very sincere milk of the word.'"

"Yes, I do," said she, "but you know the fashion now-a-days is condensed milk."

Last Year's Cholera.

Dr. Ely McClellan, of the United States army, who was appointed some time since to investigate the cholera epidemic of 1873, has lately returned to his home in Lebanon, Ky., after visiting Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas. His work has not yet been carried far enough to authorize any broad generalizations, but a few isolated facts have been given by him to a Kentucky paper as follows: "It is apparent already that the investigation will cover a much wider field than has been anticipated. The number of points at which cholera occurred will be much larger than is generally believed. An impression has prevailed, for example, that the epidemic leaped from New Orleans to Vicksburg. In point of fact it is found to have dotted both sides of the river between the two points, cases occurring on plantations in nearly every parish. The first reported case of cholera in the United States in 1873 occurred in New Orleans, February 9. It prevailed in that city during the months of February, March and April. Early in May it began to travel northward, up the Mississippi. During the month of June it began occurring in the interior towns of Alabama and Mississippi, along the lines of railroads, and spread further north, step by step, during the months of June and July, reaching Little Rock, Ark., early in the latter month. Montgomery, Ala., by a rigid system of quarantine, escaped with a single case of cholera, while at Birmingham, in the same State, ninety-seven miles distant, and connected with Montgomery by rail, over 200 persons, mostly negroes, fell victims to the epidemic. The first case of cholera in Kentucky last year, so far as ascertained, occurred at Paducah, May 23. The investigation indicates that construction hands upon railroads were the most active agents in spreading the disease. It was introduced in Memphis by a party of laborers on the Memphis and Paducah Railroad. Thence it was conveyed to Nashville by convicts from the penitentiary that had been working on the same road. From Nashville it spread to Chattanooga and East Tennessee, to Gallatin, Franklin, Bowling Green, etc. The first case in Central Kentucky was that of a negro laborer at Muldrough's Hill, on the Cumberland and Ohio Railroad, who came from a construction party on a road in Tennessee."

THE SKEPTICAL CONVINCED.—Every advance in medicine, every new remedy has encountered an opposition, which is the test of truth. Galen and Jenner only were believed when they had proved their discoveries against opposition. But men are observing, and benefits always make believers. No incredulity can stand the silent argument of good results. When Dr. Walker proclaimed that he had produced from the medicinal herbs of California an Elixir that would regenerate the sinking system and cure diseases not organic, the incredulous shook their heads. Yet his VINEGAR BITTERS is now the Standard Restorative of the Western World. The truth could not be resisted. Under the operation of the new remedy, Dyspeptics regained their health, appetite and strength; the Bilious and Constipated were relieved of every distressing symptom; the Consumptive and Rheumatic rapidly recovered; Intermittent and Remittent Fevers were broken up; the taint of Scrofula was eradicated! Who could gainsay facts like these? Not even the Faculty. Skepticism was routed. All doubts as to the claims of the Bitters to the first place in the first rank of modern medicines were silenced, and this wonderful preparation is today the most popular Tonic, Alterative and Blood Depurent ever advertised in America. In common with other journalists, we are free to add our testimony to this remedy. It is a domestic medicine, and no household should be without it. 3

DEVASTATIONS IN NEBRASKA.—Grasshoppers by the myriads appeared in this State last week, and are destroying all the crops now ungathered. Thousands upon thousands of acres of corn have been destroyed in the last week. The insect are flying by millions, and look at a short distance like a cloud of dust or smoke. Potatoes and corn will be almost a total failure in consequence of their visit, but wheat, oats, barley and flax, already harvested, give immense yields, so the year will be a good one despite the incursion. The grasshoppers started through the State at Knox and Hall counties, traveled in a straight line across to Kansas, then returning by this route.—Lincoln (Neb.) Dispatch to Chicago Tribune.

BEGINNING of a Judge's charge in Iowa: "Gentlemen of the jury, you must now quit eating peanuts and attend to this case."

THE heat of Summer, as well as the sudden changes of temperature incident to Autumn, coupled with the use of unripe vegetables and fruits and other unwholesome articles of food, result every season in producing much suffering from Diarrhea, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Colic, and other derangements of the stomach and bowels. A remedy that will promptly relieve these sufferings and restore tone and normal action to the relaxed and debilitated alimentary canal, is surely a boon to the afflicted. Dr. R. V. Pierce, whose Family Medicines have acquired a world-wide reputation, by long study and careful chemical experiments has succeeded in extracting, by a cold process, from Smart-Weed, or Water Pepper, that modest little plant seen in wet grounds by the roadside and in neglected grounds and pasture fields, a remedial principle which, when skillfully combined with the extract of Jamaica Ginger and other pleasant modifying agents, in what he calls his Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, forms a most reliable specific for all such derangements and sufferings. It is pleasant and safe to take, yet powerful to cure. Its wonderful efficacy is a further confirmation of the Doctor's idea that God has caused to grow, in each climate and region, those medicinal plants best calculated for the cure of the diseases that prevail in the section of country where those plants are found—that "the leaves were for the healing of the nations," and that the fewer far-fetched remedies we employ the better, if we would thoroughly investigate and understand those we have at home. The Doctor's Extract of Smart-Weed is sold by druggists generally.

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & Co., proprietors, New Orleans. For sale by all druggists.

GO TO RIVERSIDE Water Cure, Hamilton, Ill.

The Ladies' Sorosis Club, of New York, recently changed their discussion from Woman's Suffrage to Hair preparations and Pimple Banishers. They declared that where nature had not endowed them with beauty, it was their right—yes, their duty—to seek it where they could. So they all voted that Magnolia Balm overcame Sallowness, Rough Skin and Ring-Marks, and gave to the complexion a most distingue (Sorosian) and marble-like appearance (dangerous to men, no doubt); and that Lyon's Kathairon made the hair grow thick soft and awful pretty, and, moreover, prevented it from turning gray. If the proprietors of these articles did not send the sisters an invoice, they are not smart.

Not Quite So Fast, Mr. Jones!—A horse-doctor in Philadelphia was caught changing the celebrated Mexican Mustang Liniment into other bottles and using it as his own recipe. Honesty is always the best policy. These medicine-men like to follow up such fellows. It cured the lame horse all the same; but it damaged the Doctor's reputation, and benefited the proprietor in proportion. We have heard of so many Rheumatic persons and lame horses being cured by the Mustang Liniment that we advise every housekeeper, liveryman and planter to invest in a 50-cent or a $1.00 bottle, against accident. Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

The Grand Revolution in Medical Treatment, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that PLANTATION BITTERS is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

MORE TESTIMONY.
Letter from Judge Hiram Barber.

HORICON, Wis., July 7, 1874.
MR. C. C. OLIN, Waukesha, Wis.:—Dear Sir—Inclosed please find $1.25 for five gallons of Mineral Rock Spring Water—can send to-day by express. I am much pleased with the results from the use of your Spring Water. I have used for the last two years other waters, but have never received from the use of others as decided results as from the use of that you sent me. It may be owing to other causes operating at the same time, which has aided in the favorable results from the use of yours; still I am not aware of any, as my habits have been the same, making use of no drugs or other medical treatment. Yours, H. BARBER.

EAU CLAIRE, July 6, 1874.
C. C. OLIN & Co.:—Gents—This is to certify that I have used the Waukesha Mineral Rock Spring Water for the last six or eight months, with good results. I was very bad with the kidney and liver disease, and this water has helped me wonderfully, in both of the diseases. My digestion has also greatly improved, and I now feel this water has been a great benefit in more ways than one. If I continue to use the water, I am confident that it will effect a permanent cure. Therefore ship me to this city another half-barrel of the water at once. Respectfully yours,
CHARLES J. SMITH.

MANHATTAN, Kansas, July 8, 1874.
C. C. OLIN & Co.:—This is to certify that I have been troubled with kidney, bladder and urinary complaints, bordering on to Bright's disease, for a number of years. For the last two years I have suffered much; the doctors could do me no lasting good. All the time there was quantities of albumen in my urine. I had seen a notice in the paper of Waukesha Water. Last February I thought I would try the water, and sent to St. Louis and got five gallons, and while I was drinking it I received four gallons from a friend in Illinois. In a few days I received a circular which told me that the water that was sent me from Illinois was from Mineral Rock Spring. Since then I have ordered two barrels and received it, and am making free use of it. By the use of the water my health is better than it has been for years. My wife thinks the water the greatest boon that I ever received. It has its desired and designed effect. I think after using it a few months more, I shall be all right. Now, sir, I am no scholar, and if you can change the style of my writing without destroying its meaning, you are at liberty to do it.

VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

A Means of Grace.

Rev. Milton Rowley, of Marseilles, Ills.—says: "I have no scruples about recommending Kress Fever Tonic. I rather regard it a means of grace in this locality, because many of my best parishioners are kept, by Ague, from church; besides it makes men cross, peevish and unsocial and any medicine which will cure such ills, should have the benefit of the clergy. I know Kress Fever Tonic will cure, because I tried it myself and have seen it tried, and I gladly do what I can to introduce so reliable a medicine to my friends." Her Railroads, Manufactures

AND PRINCIPAL

Business Interests.

Nature and Extent of Her Trade

WHAT IS BEING ACCOMPLISHED.

Few towns in the west have shown during the past three years so rapid a growth upon such a healthy and substantial basis as Auburn. Unimportant as a business point prior to the construction of railroad connections, it seemed fated to remainso. But a change has come. She has been awakened as from a dream, and today can be seen on every hand, the evidence of her recently rapid growth.—From a small village of about 700 inhabitants in 1870, she now fairly claims a population of 2000, and by no means infrequent enlargement of her boundaries, the busy hundreds who throng her streets, the gradual increase of her manufactories the erection of handsome business blocks and the construction of numerous handsome private residences, all speak of her prosperity in no uncertain terms. Her educational facilities and church priviceges, her moral status, and the excellent qualities of her inhabitants, her thrift and enterprise are all alike meritorious. The regularity of the streets, the numerous building sites, the healthy atmosphere renders Auburn a desirable place for the location of the mechanic, merchant or professional man, and affords a suitable residence for those who desire to retire from the cares of an active life. The following are our physicians:

J. H. Ford, J. B. Casebeer, J. J. Littlefield, J. Spooner, C. Knorr, J. A. Cowan, W. S. Allen and J. A. Sebring.

CHURCHES.

Auburn has seve churches. One Presbyterian, one English Methodist, one German Methodist, One Baptist, a German Reform Luthean and a Catholic. All have resident pastors.

SCHOOLS.

The erection of a handsome and commodious school building, in the place of the rather inferior one now used, is the next great achievement to be accomplished, yet, our public schools are most prosperous under an able corps of teachers.—A large number of foreign scholars are in attendance at every term, and Auburn is recognized everywhere as being fully alive to her educational interests.

COUNTY OFFICIALS.

Joseph R. Lanning, Clerk; Nicholas Ensley, Treas; Wm. McIntyre, Auditor; D. Z. Hoffman, Recorder, and W. L Meese, Sheriff.

THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

are D. Gonser, N. Griffith and J. Wanemaker, and have given the county full proof of their ability in discharging the duties of their office.

F. E. Davenport—Druggist.

The drug trade, not only of Auburn, but of the whole country, is one around which clings much that is of interest. Later years have in this, as in other business enterprises, resulted in many modifications and improvements, and its importance in business circles has become second to none. The entire world is made to contribute to a druggist. The ten thousand preparations from roots and herbs, the whole range of distillations—indeed, all that science has demonstrated to be of use in the healing art, these and numberless other things are parts and parcels of a complete drug house. In our daily trips up and down Main st. in search of items relating to the business houses of our village it has been necessary to often pass the well known house of F E. Davenport. One day we penetrated to the "sanctum sanctorum, stated our errand, and were soon absorbed in fathoming the „adinfinitum" items of an extensive drug trade. This house became established by the present proprieter during the fall of 1870, who purchased the stock of Mr. R. Elson, and succeeded him in the business. The goods on hand at the time of purchase invoiced to from $1200 to $1300. Mr. Davenport seeing the necessity for a larger and more extensive assortment of articles, increased the Merchandize in the store to the value of $2000. The trade rapidly increased and Mr. Davenport found that it required the time and attention of additional hands to superintend and overlook the business, and consequently associated with him in the fall of 1872 Mr. A. Totten as partner. By this partnership additional capital was placed at the disposal of the firm, and though the prices of goods in their line were fluctuating, yet the aggregate of sales and cash receipts were constantly increasing. During the same fall Mr. Davenport made the purchase of the building and the lot where the business house is located, and by the by, is one of the most e'ligable, if not the best business corner in our corporation. In the fall of 1874, Mr. Totten disposed of his interest to the Sr. member, Mr. Davenport, and shortly after this dissolution Mr. D. employed Mr. Eli Kuhlman, a graduate of Ann Arbor Pharmaceutical College. The same care and energy that built up the trade of this house has also carried it forward. Year by year the transactions and business capacity has increased, until it now commands a trade that is both extensive and commendable. No especial attempt is made at display in arrangement of stock, and yet the impression received by visitors is in every way pleasant. The gentlemanly proprietor is well known to every one hereabouts and seems to be in his element. He has given the closest care and attention for the past two years to the manufacture of fluid and solid extracts, until, he in this part of his profession is exceedingly proficient, and being in constant attendance at his establishment, is not only ready to prepare prescriptions accurately, but by the assistance of Mr. Kuhlman his gentelmanly clerk is able to attend to all the calls of his customers.

HIS DRUGS

are finely arranged and found in large or small quantities. He has a large supply of Trusses, Shoulder Braces, Supporters, Perfumeries, Hair Oils, a full line of the different kinds of Brushes, Patent Medicines, Lamps. He also keeps a good selection of Wall and Window Paper, Oiled Linen and Slat Shades and fixtures, and a large line of goods belonging to this class we cannot mention.

STATIONERY

is a fine exhibition of school, blank and miscellaneous books. He keeps Smith's Gold Pens for sale and warrants them.—Curtain cords and Tassels in large quantities and a full line of all the latest styles of note and writing paper, envelopes of nearly every kind and other stationery of excellent quality. Old fogies have said that it would not pay to keep so valuable assortment of goods on hand, but Mr. D's. custom trade contradicts this, and long since come to the conclusion that Auburn, with its pride and intelligence demands as good goods as in other places.

Mr. Davenport is a gentleman of culture an exemplary citizen and a fair dealer His clerk, Mr. Kuhlman, is a competent man, worthy of merit, and whose aimiable disposition and manners, enable him to win the confidence of our best citizens, and we wish them both continued success

E. Vordermark & Sons.—Manufacturers of and Dealers in Boots & Shoes.

This large and extensive Boot & Shoe Store house—in fact the largest and most popular one of the kind in Auburn—was established Sept 15th 1873, and situated in the beautiful brick belonging to the I. O. O. F on 7th street. It is a branch house of the Boot & Shoe Emporium at Ft Wayne. The gentlemen composing this are fine citizens of extended experience in the mechanical and mercantile parts of the trade, thoroughly conversant with all the ramifications of their buisness. The successful management of a large concern like this, where the various elements of the business are confined—overlooking the manufacturing departments, keeping them supplied with the various kinds of material making purchases from foreign markets watching the varying changes in prices, making customers, filling orders &c &c requires the time, energy and sagacity of clear heads, active hands and qualified minds. Instances of princely fortunes are confined to no locality, while those of men who through perseverance and industry alone have risen to buisness repute are still more common. A writer says: "There are three points of importance for a buisness man to be guided by, and act upon: First whatever be his business, to give himself to it; and next his goods or manufactures equally as good, and, if possible, better than that of his neighbors; second to advertise judiciously and constantly; and third, to see that every inquiry and demand is promptly met. If either of these essentials be neglected a minimum success can alone be obtained; it matters not whether the aspirant be in town or country. Experience has proved many instances that the latter has equal advantage which men have not been slow to accept These gentlemen appear to undestand fully the buisness maxims and aphorisms that guide men to success and act upon them.

THEIR STORE AND GOODS.

The Store room is 80 x 20 feet, having high ceiling, a french glass front, modern fixtures, presenting a neat, pleasant appearance. They keep in constant employment a full corps of experienced and fine class workmen, manufacturing calf, kip and stoga boots; and in taking a survey of their assortments of work on hand, the writer observed all the various classes and grades prepared for men, women's and children wear in the market. The prestige already won by the boots & shoes turned out in the manufacturing department of this firm, notwithstanding the vigorous rivaly from long established houses, is most gratifying. Everything pertaining to this establishment is as full and complete as ample means and thorough knowledge of the business could suggest and it is the aim of the firm to sell, or keep for sale no goods only those that they can recommend, and their prosperous growing condition exemplifies this assertion in strong terms. In conducting our review of this staunch company, and our remarks refering to their extensive assortment and excellent quality of goods we feel it our duty to add that this establishment reflects credit alike upon our thriving village as well as upon the proprietors and we take pleasure in commending it to our readers, especially to those who desire to procure good goods for summer or winter use, as no house here or Ft Wayne, posesses more available facilities to dress the feet with a better or finer class of goods than Messrs Vordermark & Sons.

H. H. Stamets.—Millinery & Fancy Goods.

The retail trade in Millinery & Fancy Goods, has attained such proportions in our villages and cities that we desire to devote a little space to this branch of commercial industry. Our citizens are justly proud of the store and buisness house of our village, and claim that they are equalled by very few in towns of like size in the country. H. H. Stamets, located in Ensley Block last April, and opened his goods making as fine a display of merchandize in his line as has been put on exhibition in this section of the country for a retail trade.

His stock is rich and varied, consisting principally in millinery and fancy goods, among which you can find stylish Hats, Shawls, Collars, Alpaccas Parasols, Embroideries, Necklaces, White Goods, White Marseilles, Swiss Mulls, Shawls, Crapes, Moruning Goods Lawns, Veils, and scores of other valuables pertaining to such a house of merchandize. The writer, is informed by the proprietor that he intends to return Eastward in a few weeks and make large purchases of such goods as are required to conduct the millinery custom departments, and be able to supply the trade in this part of the country with as good an assortment, and for as little money as can be purchased at Ft Wayne or Toledo markets He intends to supply his store with a full stock of ladies and gents under wear and of the different qualities, together with Furs for ladies and children, and Zephyrs and Germantown woolen yarns of all shades. The people of our rapid growing town demand as fashionable styles of millinery work as places of larger growth, and Mr. Stamets observing this is determined to mead such demands by stocking his store room with a large and elegant assortment of such merchandize as is kept in first class millinery & fancy goods buisness houses. Mr. Stamets is a gentleman of fine buisness qualities and we wish him abundant success.

Our Jewelry Trade—Abright & Shephard as Manufacturers, Jobbers and Retailers.

A certian writer says. "No buisness is conducted so purely on the basis of "Honor" as the jewelry trade. Among the great mass of the people few know the difference between "pinchback" and gold—between plate and solid metal. Fewer still are able to pass a competent opinion upon the finest of gold. To the unnitiated, jewelry may be 14, 15 or 18 karats, which they cannot tell. In Paris the jewelers attach cards to the various wares chered for sale stating their quality; here governmental regulations require it; in this county everything is left to honor of the jeweler, and according as representations may or may not be relied upon, his business thrives or languishes. Auburn in common with other villages of its size has its goods of gold and silver wares, we have but one store of this class upon which we can boast and that is the one named above. It was established about five years ago by Mr. Abright the Sr., member of the firm, but about two years ago associated with him Mr Shephard, and the finest stocks of Estey and Perry Organs, Violins, Guitars, Fluits, Fifes, Drums, Picaloes Flagelets, Hamon'cos, German and French claronets and accordeons that we have seen in this part of the country.

Their sale room is on the north side of 7th street in the "Ensly Block" and is in dimensions 72x21 feet a front of french glass highceilings and modern fixtures and pleasant, neat and elegant appearance. In this room is displayed a thousand articles in jewelry, watches precious stones, solid plated ware that delight the eye and have a tendency to deplete the purses of visitors—gazing at them the inclination to invest is almost irresistible. Both members of the firm give the buisness their attention and feel, naturally enough, some pride in the results of their labors. They have a varied assortment of Gold and Silver Watches, Solid Gold and Silver Spectacles, of which they make King's combination a speciality. Gold and Silver Watch Chains Thimbles, Shirt Buttons, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, Fine Gold sets Amethyst and Topaz Rings, Silver and Silverplated Ware.

Their line of clocks is extensive embracing nearly every kind in use, They also have a large assortment of childrens dolls and toys, and a stock of small vehicles, wheelbarrows and other goods for boys. Mr. Shephard is a gentleman of fine talent and turns his personal attention to the sale of organs and other musical instruments. Both are buisness men and have built up a noble custom trade and we commend their jewelery and music store to public and predict for it a successful future.

They also keep on hand a large stock of walking canes and make a speciality of the Bohemian Glass Ware Visitors to our thriving village will find their sale room well stocked with numerous as well as valuable curiosities

Auburn Woolen Mills.

The business of this firm was established ten years ago (in 1864) and is extensivly engaged in the manufacture of Cassimeres, Jeans, Flannels, and a superior quality of stocking yarn Some one has said that the Americans are a nation of inventors. If the multitude of devices which are brought out every year to simplify mechanical operations and to save labor are considered, there is good foundation for the remark. There is no department these devices are more forcibly exemplified than in mills When the machinery of some inventive genius is put to work spinning the wool which a few hours ago was clipped from the sheeps back, but now converted into a superior quality of flannels or cloths of the softest and finest texture rolled up and on the shelf in the store room ready for the mechanic to fashion and make into a garment. One would never imagine in the days of the quill wheel, that in this early part of our world's history such an improvment would exist any more than they dreamed of the railroad, or telegraph wire, but this system of things is now so common among us that by many are regarded as common-place affairs The firm known as the Auburn Woolen manufacturing company have one of the commodious buildings for the manufacture of woolen goods in this part of the country, it being three story brick 62x42, with a dye house 30x20 and an engine house and a finishing room combined 14x62. The main building has a front on Ninth street and is in close proximity to the business part of town, and is supplied with the most modern improved machinery. This establishment is meeting with much approbation, and Mr. Gross the superintendent is a gentleman of large mercantile experience, an old substantial citizen, generally popular, responsible in his engagements, an upright man and one in whom there is no guilt. The amount of wool necessary to stock the mill per annum is from 15,000 to 20,000 lbs. The cloth manufactured here is valued at $10,000 per annum, this added to the immense amount of carding and spining for customers, with the manufacturing of 5,000 lbs, of stocking yarn two and three ply, will give some adequate idea of the buisness done at these mills. They employ from ten to twentyfive hands the year round and the goods manufactured here are second to none in the State. Their machinery was made by Kent Baldwin & Co of Middlebery O. some by Thos. Stibbs of Wooster O. and some by Jenks & Son at Phila. Pa. and is among the best in the land. The superintendant has on hand assortment of cloths and stocking yarn. We commend these mills to the patronizing public for honest, good work and fair dealing.

John R. Cleveland.—Artist

This gentleman served a full apprenticeship under the instructions of Mr. Jacob Teeus of Ohio, and after familiarizing himself and making himself fully competent in workmanship, purchased himself a beautiful Pholograph car, and came to our village, and located on the north side of Eight street a little west of Main, where he has been engaged in a remunerative and prosperous trade. He did not intend at first to remain among us but a few weeks, but his patrons increased with such rapidity that they have held him here ever since the first of last July.—He has been anxious to visit other towns, but by the importunity of his patrons, he consented to remain until the last of this month and complete the work for his customers in the village and vicinity. His car 18x8 feet is well portioned, and furnished with all the necessary apparatus to conduct a successful trade. Mr Cleveland is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed and is giving the best of satisfaction.

His "Success Camera," manufactured by E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. of N. Y. is among the first and best, and renders the operator the facilties to take or copy pictures of any size with a degree of perfection rarely seen, in groups or single. He executes his work in all kinds of weather and those desiring to supply themselves with the pictures of themselves or their friends and be furnished with a superior quality, perfect elegance and beauty ought to visit him while he is here. We understand that Mr. Cleveland and his assistnat intends to visit Spencerville, this county with his car, and we congratulate the people of that village and surrounding country in view of the fact, they will find him to be talented in his profession, and a gentleman of good morals an honorable dealer and well worthy the confidence of the public. He makes a specialty of copying old pictures, and can take groups in numbering from three to seventy, and will bear with him in his departure the best wishes of our citizens

T. J. Cuppy—Produce Dealer.

There are few inland villages in the country of two thousand inhabitants that control so large a merchantile and produce trade as Auburn. This trade is not of a speculative character, carried on upon a borrowed capital, nor do our merchants or produce dealers hypothecate the future. The business of the vicinity which aggregates hundreds of thousands of dollars per year, is upon a basis firm as the rocks. In a great many cases the capital invested, has been made here. It is the fruit of years of toil and care, of economy and forethought, and as a natural result few chances are taken by our business men. Mr. Cuppy, the gentleman whose name heads this article is located permanently at our Eel River railroad depot, and makes this his trading post, and devotes his time in the purchase of the various kinds of seed and grain, brought by the farmer to our market. He has been with us in the trade but a short time, but his purchases have averaged him a full car load of wheat (which is 350 bushels) per day, and one of oats

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

In consequence of the criminal negligence and stupidity of railway officials in Vermont, an accident occurred the other day by which five persons were killed outright and fifteen were seriously injured. It appears that a bridge had been carried away by a freshet, and the section men were aware of the fact, yet they did not caution the coming train.

An accident occurred on the 16th inst. on the Trenton (N. J.) railroad, near Eddingham Station. An excursion train collided with a coal train on a siding, the switch being misplaced. Five persons were killed and fourteen seriously hurt....New York city has made a formal demand upon the Brooklyn Bank for $6,500,000 assumed to be standing to the city's credit, but actually stolen by the ring thieves. The city claims that the checks upon which the money was drawn bore forged indorsements.

At the request of the License Committee of the Boston Board of Aldermen, "Passion's Perils," a play founded on incidents connected with the Beecher-Tilton scandal, has been withdrawn from the stage of the Athenæum in that city. The proprietors were given to understand that another representation would cause their license to be revoked.

The West.

A serious smash-up occurred on the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad, near Sidney, Ill., on the 14th inst., resulting in the wrecking of sixteen cars, the killing of two and the serious injury of three passengers.

A decision has at last been rendered by the Chicago courts in the celebrated Cheney-Whitehouse case. The effect of the decision is to put the bill of complainants out of court, and to declare that the Rev. Mr. Cheney was not lawfully deposed from the Episcopal ministry....An enormous meteor, described to be as large as the full moon and almost as bright as the sun, passed over Cairo, Ill., a few days ago. It appeared in the northern heavens, moving with great rapidity, with a tremendous stream of fire following it, toward the horizon. Before reaching the horizon, however, it burst with terrible noise, into a dozen fragments, some of them bursting in their turn. For nearly a half-minute the streets were light enough to read.

A telegram from Fort Fetterman to Gen. Ord says: "A Cheyenne half-breed from Powder river reports that at a council of the Cheyennes and Arrapahoes it was decided to recall all hostile parties from the vicinity of the railroad and return to the Agency; that about 200 lodges of Cheyennes passed 35 miles north of that post on Friday en route to the Agency; that 100 lodges of Arrapahoes would follow in a day or two; that they were very hungry and eating their horses."....A man named Charles Levy, a Prussian Jew, claims to be the murderer of Benjamin Nathan, of New York, and has surrendered himself to the authorities of Bloomington, Ill.

The self-confessed Nathan murderer who recently gave himself up at Bloomington, Ill., turns out to be a fraud. He was aiming to get a dead-head ride to New York....Austin, Nevada, has experienced another cloud-burst, flooding the town badly. No lives lost.... The Railroad Commissioners of Iowa have written a letter to the Illinois Commissioners, explaining the occasion of their absence from the convention at Dubuque. They give as a reason pressing business engagements, assert their sympathy with the objects of the conference, and say that they will be present at the next meeting....Advices from the Custer expedition state that the hostile Indians will intercept it on the way back, before reaching the upper Missouri. The hostiles number about 5,000.

A rumor comes from the West to the effect that Gen. Custer's expedition has come to an engagement with the Indians, and that forty or fifty white men have been killed. The loss is much heavier than might have been expected, though the dispatches state that the Indians were 4,000 strong. Further advices will be awaited with some anxiety.

The South.

A dispatch from Charleston, S. C., states that a reign of terror exists in Georgetown, in that State, caused by a contest between two negro factions.

In a shooting affray at Point Pleasant, Tenn., Gen. Darnell was killed by Capt. Albert Hall, and Capt. Cole and two brothers named Coe were seriously wounded. The shooting resulted from rivalry between Capts. Hall and Cole, who ran competing ferry-boats. Much excitement prevails in Edgefield county, S. C., and a war of races is imminent. In that event the whites of Georgia will interfere in behalf of their friends. Arms and ammunition are being shipped from Augusta.

A New Orleans dispatch states that the reported duel in St. James Parish, La., between Dr. Charles Gray and Deputy Sheriff Richards is confirmed. They fought with revolvers at a distance of fifteen paces. Both fell at the third fire and died in a few minutes.

Great excitement prevails at the South, owing to fear of trouble between whites and blacks. In Chicot county, Ark., a white boy was killed by a negro, who was shot while endeavoring to conceal himself in the woods. His body was found some days afterward by negroes who threatened to kill six whites in revenge. Both parties were arming, and women and children were leaving for safety. Georgetown, S. C., is still crowded with colored militia, who are guarding the jail. A company had been summoned by Gov. Moses, from Charleston, but only twelve men responded. At Augusta the negroes are pleading for peace, and giving up their arms. The whites are still organizing, but do not intend to provoke a conflict, acting only on the defensive.

Washington.

The work of adjusting the claims for injury done during the war by the Confederate cruisers is progressing satisfactorily, and a majority of the claims that shall prove to be just will be paid before Congress again meets. The award made by the Geneva tribunal will be sufficient to meet all the legal demands upon the fund....The machinery for the redistribution of the currency under the terms of the law passed at the last session of Congress has been completed, and no delays will take place in accommodating all demands for currency from sections now deficient in their quota.... The new Currency act has thus far worked toward contraction, about $1,000,000 more national bank circulation having been retired than has been issued....The Secretary has issued a circular stating the number, class and compensation that is allowed to each branch of a Territorial Legislative Assembly, and adding that "no other officers or employes are authorized, and none others can be paid by the Secretary of a Territory."

A Washington dispatch states that the Attorney-General is in daily receipt of letters complaining of the unsettled condition of affairs in Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina. The negroes, on one side, complain of their treatment by the whites. The whites, on the other hand, are dissatisfied with the conduct of the negroes, and say that they are completely organized throughout the South, and are liable to break out in armed opposition to the whites at any hour. Both whites and blacks appeal to the President in the most earnest terms for protection from each other.

General.

The bark Mermaid, from New London, Conn., for New Orleans, was sunk at sea by a collision, and the captain and five of the crew were lost.

Political.

Jere Haralson, colored, has been nominated by the Republicans for Congress in the Mobile (Ala.) District, after balloting 240 times.

The venerable Montgomery Blair is a candidate for Congress in Maryland.

The new Constitution of Ohio has been defeated by a majority estimated all the way from 20,000 to 50,000....The Republicans of Pennsylvania met in convention at Harrisburg on the 19th of August and nominated E. M. Paxton for Judge of the Supreme Court, A. G. Olmstead for Lieutenant-Governor, Harrison Allen for Auditor-General, and W. E. Beath for Secretary of Internal Affairs. The convention expressed itself in favor of Gov. Hartranft for President. A resolution indorsing Gen. Grant in the event of his candidacy for a third term was voted down with loud shouts of disapproval....The Democrats of Tennessee have nominated James D. Porter for Governor.

Foreign.

Letters have been received from missionaries in Palestine giving accounts of the terrible famine now prevailing there. They tell a terrible story of suffering and death. It is estimated that 5,000 have already died from starvation, and thousands more are barely existing.

England, France, Germany, Austria and Italy, it is officially announced, have recognized the Spanish Republic. Russia hesitates, it is said, because such action will strengthen the cause of republicanism in Europe....Marshal Bazaine is sojourning at Brussels, the capital of Belgium. It is said France will make no demand for his extradition.... Hail to the Spanish Republic! The United States first welcomed to the federation of nations, and now it has been recognized by all the powers of Europe, except Russia. The initiative in this latter movement was taken by the German Government, which has been formally thanked for its good offices.

Holland and Belgium have recognized the Spanish Republic....The Old Catholic movement is extending into Bavaria. At Limbach Bishop Reinkens has just consecrated a new church, the first erected by the Old Catholics in Germany....Ten persons recently convicted at St. Petersburg of revolutionary propagandism were from 20 to 26 years of age, and included two married ladies in affluent circumstances....The Cologne Gazette publishes a letter from Mme. Bazaine in which that lady declares that the first account of the Marshal's escape was substantially true. She says that she planned the affair herself, and had no accomplice except one of her relatives.

The Archbishop of Paris has given rise to another diplomatic difficulty, and caused no little excitement in Rome and Paris, owing to his pastoral letter, which was read to a few of the faithful in the cathedral and posted upon the wall for a short time. No journal dared to publish it. The letter contained expressions offensive to Italy and Victor Emanuel, and Marshal MacMahon immediately repaired to the Italian Minister's house and made an apology for the offensive letter....M. Calvadas, the Bonapartist candidate for the French Assembly from the District of Cloidos, has been elected over his Republican competitor by a majority of 13,222, in a total poll of 68,066.

We have accounts from Brazil of a horribly blasphemous and murderous fanaticism among a sect of German colonists, led by a man named Manerer, claiming to be a prophet. The home of a seceder from the sect was attacked by the partisans of Manerer and burned, and the inmates, including women and children, shot. When the police appeared, they found Manerer and his sectarians, some 300 strong, intrenched in a mid-forest settlement, and, although a force of regulars was brought up, the soldiers were repulsed with five killed and forty-five wounded. At last dates the troops and a national guard were being collected and cannon were bombarding Manerer's position. It is said that the revolters have massacred thirteen families of seceders and lukewarm sectarians.... Bazaine's escape was not heroic. He scaled no beetling precipice and breasted no raging seas. Some pieces of gold in the hands of his guards did what personal valor would have attempted in vain. The prisoner walked out of doors and to the boat which carried him away with as little trepidation as would have beset him in eating a good dinner.

There is a good prospect of war between China and Japan. China has given Japan ninety days in which to withdraw her forces from Formosa, and at the end of that time, if the demand is not acceded to, will try to compel obedience. Japan, however, will not be bluffed, and intends to retain her hold on the island. We may, therefore, expect stirring news from the far East... It is rumored that Spain has ceded the island of Porto Rico to Germany.

Beecher-Tilton.

New York, August 13.—The long-expected statement of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was submitted to the Investigation Committee of Plymouth Church to-day. He starts out by reaffirming the general denial of the charges which he made on the 22d of July, and follows this with a fierce attack upon his accuser, Theodore Tilton, whom he charges with being an associate of the Woodhull, and a friend of her strange cause, by which and other follies he has become bankrupt morally and financially. Mr. Beecher continues: "I can now see that he is, and has been from the beginning of this difficulty, a selfish and reckless schemer, pursuing a plan of mingled good and hatred, and weaving about me a network of suspicions, misunderstanding, plots and lies, to which my own innocent words and acts, nay, even my thoughts, of kindness toward him, have been made to contribute. These successive views of him must be kept in view, to explain my course through the last four years. That I was blind so long as to the real motive of intrigue going on around me was due partly to my own overwhelming public engagements, partly to my complete surrender of this affair, and the papers and questions connected with it, into the hands of Mr. Moulton, who was intensely confident that he could manage it successfully. I suffered much, but I inquired little. Mr. Moulton was chary to me of Mr. Tilton's confidence to him, reporting to me occasionally in a general way Mr. Tilton's words and outbreaks of passion only as elements of trouble which he was able to control, and as additional proofs of the wisdom of giving it to him. His control of the situation seemed to me, at the time, complete, immersed, as I was, in incessant cares and duties, and only too glad to be relieved from considering the details and wretched complications, the origin and the fact of which remain, in spite of all friendly intervention, a perpetual burden to my soul. I would not read in the papers about it. I would not talk about it. I made Moulton for a long period my confidant and my only channel of information. From time to time suspicions were aroused in me by indications that Mr. Tilton was acting the part of an enemy; but suspicions were rapidly allayed by his own behavior toward me in other moods, and by the assurances of Mr. Moulton, who ascribed the circumstances to misunderstanding or to malice on the part of others. It is plain to me now that it was not until Tilton had fallen into disgrace and had lost his salary that he thought it necessary to assail me with charges which he pretends to have had in mind for six months. The domestic offense which he alleged, was very quickly and easily put aside, but yet in such a way as to keep my feelings stirred up in order that I might, through my friends, be used to extract from Mr. Bowen $7,000, the amount of the claim in dispute between them. The check for that sum in hand, Mr. Tilton signed an agreement of peace and concord, not drawn by me, but accepted by me as sincere.

* * * "When I had lost the last remnant of faith in Theodore, or hope for him; when I heard with unspeakable remorse that everything I had done to stay his destruction had made matters worse and worse, and that my attempt to keep him from a public trial, involving such a flow of scandal as has now been let loose, had been used by him to bring up new troubles; that his unhappy wife was, under his dictation, signing papers and recantations, and I know not what; that in short everything was breaking up, and the destruction from which I had sought to save the family was likely to be emptied on other families, the church and the community, with infinite horrors of woe for me, that my own innocence was buried under heaps and heaps of rubbish, and nobody but my professed friend, if even he, could save us—to his assurances that he could still do so I gave at least so much faith as to maintain under these terrible trials the silence which he enjoined. Not until Mr. Tilton, having attempted, through Frank Carpenter to raise money from my friends, openly assailed me in a letter to Dr. Bacon, did I break that silence, save by the simple denial of the slanderous rumors against me a year before, when, on the appearance of the first open attack from Mr. Tilton, I immediately, without consulting Moulton, called for a thorough investigation with a committee of my church."

Mr. Beecher says he finds himself in a position where he knows his innocence without being able to prove it with detailed explanations; declares that he is an hereditary hypochondriac, and that in certain moods of reaction the world becomes black. If he were to write in such a mood he should give false colors and exaggerated proportions to everything. He then proceeds to give a circumstantial narrative of his personal relations with Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, from the day of their acquaintance down to the present day. He first knew Tilton as a reporter of his sermons, became much attached to the young man, and shortly after gave him a position on the Independent, of which he was editor. He shortly after placed Tilton in charge of the paper during a temporary absence in England, and on returning made arrangements by which the young man became responsible editor of the Independent.

"Friendly relations continued until 1866," says Mr. Beecher, "when violent assaults were made upon me by Tilton in the Independent on account of my Cleveland letter, and a temporary discontinuation of publication of my sermons in that paper broke off my connection with it. Although Mr. Tilton and I remained personally on good terms, yet there was a coolness between us in all matters of politics. Our social relations were very kindly, and as late as 1868-9, at his request, I sat to Page some fifty times for a portrait. It was there that I first met and talked with Moulton, whose wife was a member of Plymouth Church, though he was not a member, or even a regular attendant. During this whole period I never received from Mr. Tilton or any member of his family the slightest hint that there was any dissatisfaction with my familiar relations to his household. As late, I think, as the winter of 1869, when going upon an extended lecturing tour, he said: "I wish you would look in often, and see that Libby is not lonesome, or does not want anything," or words to that effect. Never by sign or word did Mr. Tilton complain of my visits in his family until after he began to fear that the Independent would be taken from him; nor did he break out into violence until on the eve of dispossession from both the papers, the Independent and the Brooklyn Union, owned by Mr. Bowen. During these years of intimacy in Tilton's family, I was treated as a father or elder brother."

In regard to the matter of his alleged confession to Moulton, and the paper which it is charged he obtained from Mrs. Tilton while lying on a bed of sickness, Mr. B. says:

"In a sort of postscript she denied explicitly that I had ever offered any improper solicitation to her, that being the only charge made against me by Mr. Tilton, or sustained by the statement about the confession which he had read to me—I dreamed of no worse charge at the time—that was horrible enough. The mere thought that he could make it, and could have extorted any evidence on which to base it, was enough to take away my senses. It seemed to me as if she was going to die; that her mind was overthrown, and that I was in some dreadful way mixed up in it, and might be left by her death with this terrible accusation hanging over me. I returned like one in a dream to Mr. Moulton's house, where I said very little, and soon went home. It has been said that I confessed guilt and expressed remorse. This is utterly false. Is it likely that with Mrs. Tilton's retraction in my pocket I should have thus stultified myself? On the next day, at evening, Mr. Moulton called at my house and came up to my bed-room. He said that Mrs. Tilton, on her husband's return to her after our interview, had informed him what she had done, and that I had her retraction. Moulton expostulated with me, and claimed that I had taken a mean advantage and made dishonorable use of Theodore's request that I should visit her, in obtaining from her a written contradiction to a document not in existence. He said that all difficulties could be settled without any such paper, and that I ought to give it up. He made no verbal threats, but he opened his overcoat, and, with some emphatic remark, showed a pistol, which afterward he took out and laid on the bureau near which he stood. I gave the paper to him, and after a few moments' talk he left. Within a day or two after this Mr. Moulton made the third visit, and this time we repaired to my study in the third story of my house."

Mr. Beecher details his efforts to prevent the scandal being made public, which was threatened by the trial of Tilton by the church, and says of Tilton: "I was so determined to carry out my pledges to Moulton for him, and do all in human power to save him even from himself, that I was ready to resign if that would stop the scandal. I wrote a letter of resignation, not referring to the charge against me, but declaring that I had striven for years to maintain secrecy concerning a scandal affecting a family in the church, and that as I had failed I herewith resigned. This letter was never sent. A little calmer thought showed me how futile it would be to stop the trouble, a mere useless sacrifice; but I showed it to Mr. Moulton, and possibly he copied it. I have found the original of it in my house. If I could at this moment remember any of the other letters which I have written to Mr. Moulton, I would do so."

The following are the closing lines of Mr. Beecher's statement:

"In the note requesting your appointment, I asked that you should make a full investigation of all the sources of information. You are witnesses that I have in no way influenced or interfered with your proceedings or duties. I have wished the investigation to be so searching that nothing could unsettle its results. It is time, for the sake of decency and public morals, that this matter be brought to an end. It is an open pool of corruption, exhaling deadly vapors. For six weeks the nation has risen up and sat down upon scandal. Not a great war nor a revolution could more have filled the newspapers than this question of domestic trouble, magnified a thousand-fold, and, like a sore spot in the human body, drawing to itself every morbid humor in the blood. Whoever is buried with it, it is time that this abomination be buried below all touch or power of resurrection."

Moulton's statement was submitted to the committee to-day. It is a very brief document, making less than half a column in the city papers, and throws no fresh light on the mysterious scandal. He was also cross-examined at considerable length, but was dumb as an oyster so far as making any additional revelations was concerned.

New York, Aug. 14.—At a business meeting of Plymouth Church, this evening, it was resolved that the Examining Committee be requested to make a report at as early a date as possible consistent with the best interests of truth and justice. Mr. Beecher leaves for the White Mountains next week. Many of his church members and other friends called upon him to-night to express sympathy and bid him good-bye.

Some of Beecher's friends expect Moulton will soon make public his long statement in reply to the charges in Mr. Beecher's examination. One of the Committee of Inquiry remarked yesterday that Mr. Moulton must speak at once, if at any time. He would find no listeners if he kept silent longer.

New York, Aug. 15.—A reporter has had a brief talk with Theodore Tilton. He denied that he had received any money from Mr. Beecher, and if Moulton had received the amount stated, it devolved upon him to account for it. Shortly after Mrs. Tilton's confession of Mr. Beecher's criminality, the servant who was then living with Mr. and Mrs. Tilton became aware of the fact from having overheard conversations which had passed between them, and she began to whisper to her friends in Brooklyn. As soon as this state of things was discovered it was determined to send the girl out of Brooklyn as a protection to Beecher. She was sent to a boarding school. Beecher paid her expenses through Moulton. This might have amounted to some $2,000. It is stated in the Brooklyn Eagle that this servant-girl business will wear another complexion when the story of the girl, now in possession of the Plymouth Church Investigating Committee, is made public. The allegation is that Tilton, not Beecher, was interested in her removal from Brooklyn.

Mr. Tilton emphatically denied that Mr. Beecher had been the means of inducing Bowen to pay Tilton the $7,000 on the broken contract. He stated further that the theory of blackmail presented by Mr. Beecher was craven and malicious; that the support of the Brooklyn Eagle was obtained on account of the same accusation having been made against the editor, Kinsella, who was forced to support Beecher lest the latter's friends should crush him. In relation to the Woodhull family, Mr. Tilton said that they had been sent abroad by Beecher's friends through mingled terrorizing and bribing.

New York, Aug. 17.—The interest in the Beecher scandal is still maintained. Tilton is busily preparing another statement in reply to Beecher, and will include in it some documents that he has been holding in reserve for the legal trial. He denies, as does his attorney in the suit against Bowen, that Beecher assisted him to obtain his back pay from Bowen, but on the contrary asserts that Beecher worked hard to keep it from him. He also indignantly denies the charge of blackmail.

Moulton did not return to New York to-day, but stopped half-way to consult with Ben Butler and ex-Judge Morris. It seems to be conceded that he must speak and tell all he knows, or forever rest under the imputation of being one of the most dishonorable of men.

The papers in the civil proceedings against Beecher will be finished to-night, and in all probability served to-morrow. Judge Morris positively denies that Tilton entertains any idea of abandoning the criminal case, but, on the contrary, is indefatigable, and works day and night in arranging matters.

New York, Aug. 18.—Tilton still works incessantly, and spent the greater portion of to-day with City Judge Reynolds, his former counsel, in arranging proceedings against Beecher on the charge of blackmailing him in the $7,000 due Tilton by Bowen, of the Brooklyn Union.

Tilton makes no denial that he and Moulton are in constant communication, and will make a united effort to drive Beecher to the wall before the community, while they will be unrelenting in pushing matters through the courts. A few nights ago it was stated that Beecher threatened that, unless Moulton sealed his lips, he would go to Washington and use his influence to have him arraigned on charge of defrauding the custom-house. Private dispatches received here state that not only the Plymouth pastor, but a large number of his friends, have already placed themselves in communication with the authorities at the capital, and are endeavoring to bring all possible pressure on Moulton, to compel him to hold his tongue. A reporter, in conversation to-day with one of Moulton's bosom friends, elicited the fact that he is determined to clear his character of the gross charges of Beecher, even were it to be the cause of his pauperism.

New York, Aug. 19.—The following latter was addressed by Tilton's attorneys to the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher on Monday, the 17th inst.:

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher:

Sir: We have been retained by Theodore Tilton to commence suit against you. Will you please indicate the attorney who is authorized to appear in your behalf, so that we may serve papers upon him. Yours, etc.,

Morris & Pearsall.

To the foregoing communication, Messrs. Shearman & Sterling, attorneys of record for Beecher, this morning made the following reply:

Messrs. Morris & Pearsall:

Gentlemen:—Understanding that you contemplate the commencement of an action at law on behalf of Theodore Tilton against the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, we beg to inform you that we are authorized to appear for Mr. Beecher in all legal proceedings, and that we request, in his name, the immediate service of papers upon us, either at our office, or, if service can be made before 11 a. m., at No. 81 Hicks street, Brooklyn. Your obedient servants.

Shearman & Sterling.

The Argus to-day reports Moulton as speaking as follows: "All the world now knows that my honor has been impugned, and I shall publish my statement in full exactly as it was written at first. It is already in the printer's hands." He said his printer had promised him that everything should be ready in time for the statement to appear in the morning and evening journals of Saturday next.

How They Finally Got Married.

One long summer afternoon there came to Mr. Davidson's the most curious specimen of an old bachelor the world ever heard of. He was old, gray, wrinkled, and odd. He hated old women, especially old maids, and wasn't afraid to say so. He and Aunt Patty had it hot whenever chance drew them together; yet still he came, and it was noticed that Aunt Patty took unusual pains with her dress whenever he was expected.

One day the contest waged unusually strong, and Aunt Patty left in disgust and went out into the garden.

"That bear!" she muttered to herself, as she stooped to gather a flower which attracted her attention.

"What did you run for?" said a gruff voice behind her.

"To get rid of you."

"You didn't do it, did you?"

"No; you are worse than a burdock bur."

"You won't get rid of me, either."

"I won't, eh?"

"Only in one way."

"And that?"

"Marry me."

"What! us two fools get married! What would people say?"

"That's nothing to us. Come, say yes or no; I'm in a hurry."

"Well, no, then."

"Very well; good-by, I shan't come again."

"Stop a bit—what a pucker you're in."

"Yes or no!"

"I must consult—"

"All right; I thought you were of age. Good-by."

"Jabez Andrews, don't be a fool. Come back I say. Why, I believe the critter has taken me for earnest. Jabez Andrews, I'll consider."

"I don't want any considering; I'm going. Becky Hastings is waiting for me. I thought I'd give you the first chance, Patty. All right; good-by."

"Jabez! Jabez! That stuck-up Beck Hastings shan't have him! Jabez, yes! Do you hear—Y-e-s!"—Providence Journal.

Cloud-Bursts and Water-Spouts.

Many of our contemporaries seem to be under the impression that cloud-bursts and water-spouts are one and the same thing. Our own observations and experience of them during several years' residence in this State, as well as comparing notes in the experience of others, induce the belief that, although the phenomenal effects of each are very similar, yet there is a decided difference in their source and formation. Water-spouts are met with in the ocean or on broad surfaces of water. A cloud-burst is simply a most extraordinary shower or pouring-down of rain—an overladen cloud suddenly letting go its contents by the run. The heavy portentous cloud may pass along over the earth, showering down its watery contents generously as it goes along, and were it to meet no obstacle or changing circumstance, nothing unusual might come of it. At or about the heads of gulches or canons among the mountain-tops is where the cloud-burst occurs. The cause may be looked for in sudden electrical disturbances, the electricity of the earth and the cloud coming into contact or conjunction, or perhaps a huge current of cold air met with at that point may produce the result. Be that as it may, the observer will simply notice a sudden and furiously copious shower or pouring down of rain, and no definite body or column of water, as in the case of a water-spout. The steep hillside will be directly covered with flowing sheets of water rushing from all directions into the bed of the ravine, forming a great flood which sweeps along logs, brush, rocks, and every loose thing it can gather in its course, and thus driving along a huge front wall, as it were, of all sorts of debris, seething with angrily foaming water, sweeping everything movable before it, and spreading ruin and devastation in its course. The flood-gates of the upper regions seem to open, and the rain descends more in actual streams than drops. The watery composition of the cloud seems to condense all at once, and the name of "cloud-burst" is peculiarly appropriate.—Gold Hill (Nev.) News.

A Kentucky Female Stock-Drover.

The advent of drovers at the East Liberty Stock-Yards is not generally heralded with any extraordinary flourish of trumpets, though there is considerable bellowing at times when there is an arrival of stock. But when a female drover—a genuine female drover, or we might call her a droveress—made her appearance out there early last Monday morning, riding on top of a car with the other drovers, you may imagine it caused something of a sensation. The lady's name is Mrs. Margaret Magee, and she hails from Cynthiana, Ky. She brought along two car-loads of cattle, and was accompanied by her son, 17 years of age. She is rather good-looking, robust in figure, and probably 35 or 38 years of age. She owns 400 acres of land in a high state of cultivation in the blue-grass region, and is monarch of all she surveys. She raises stock, and has shipped stock several times before, but this is the first trip she has gone into the business, and into the caboose-car like the other drovers. She is the widow of a drover who died some time ago and left her to shift for herself, and she is doing it nobly. She is treated with the greatest respect and courtesy by the other drovers, and her first trip among the jovial class of drovers exerted a decidedly beneficial influence. Nothing was said in her presence to which she could take exceptions, and, her first reception being so cordial and gentlemanly on the part of the drovers and all others with whom she has had occasion to mingle, she will doubtless continue to accompany her stock to the East Liberty Yards in the future. There is no use in singing "Who will care for mother now?" about such women as Mrs. Magee.

The Temperature of the Sun.

The latest investigation on the temperature of the sun by Father Secchi has been recently published, and he concludes that the lowest limit of this temperature must be about 133,000 degrees centigrade. This determination he has arrived at by a comparison of the solar radiation and that of the electric light. He has employed the same apparatus, namely, the thermo-heliometer, described in his well-known work on the sun. The temperature produced by solar radiation was observed at Rome about noon on several days in July, and was determined to be 36½ times that of the carbon points of the electric light. Both Secchi and Hirn agree that the temperature of solar radiation may depend either solely on the superficial stratum of the sun, or on a considerable thickness of its substance, according as this latter is opaque or transparent. Hirn concludes that if the transparence were nearly perfect the solar temperature might well be only a few thousand degrees; but various phenomena, among them the observations of Prof. Langley, of Pittsburgh, on the crossing of the currents of the photosphere, show that the solar surface is essentially opaque, and certainly at the best is not completely transparent. The very high temperature of 130,000 degrees to 170,000 degrees, above given, is, therefore, not inadmissible, but must be looked upon as at least giving a lower limit to the true value of the temperature of the sun.

Reform in India.

The famine (the Hindoo Patriot says) has produced a reformer in the person of Pundit Ajoodya Prasad, who has taught the Tirhootia Brahmins that work is worship. He is himself a learned Brahmin of very high caste, and is circle officer of Putrahee, in Tirhoot, where these Brahmins are particularly numerous. He practically showed them, by using the hoe and pick-ax himself, that he did not consider this species of labor to be derogatory to his caste; and the result has been that there are now over two hundred of the poorest members of the caste cheerfully working on the relief works, and earning an honest livelihood instead of subsisting upon public charity.

Brigandage is assuming unheard-of proportions in Sicily. High legal officials, syndics of towns and other magistrates, are kidnapped by the robbers and held for ransom, and murdered if the ransom is not speedily paid.

The German Navy.

The Borsenzeitung, of Berlin, says that one of the chief occupations of the German Admiralty just now is to improve the ship-building interests of the empire. This is to be done not only by having a considerable number of ships of war built in private ship-building establishments, but also by applying almost exclusively to German manufacturers for the machinery and other articles required for naval purposes. It is hoped by this means in a few years to make the German navy quite independent of foreign countries, both as regards ship-building and its other requirements. The slight development which has taken place in the German ship-building industry during the past few years is regarded as a circumstance very prejudicial to the power of Germany at sea, and if the Government does not succeed in obtaining all it requires for the navy from private establishments, it will create factories of its own for that purpose. This will be especially necessary for iron plates and masts, which have hitherto invariably had to be procured from abroad. Last year Messrs. Krupp proposed to begin the construction of these articles on an extensive scale, but they seem now to have abandoned this project. As regards the construction of naval machinery, this is already being taken up private establishments with very satisfactory results.

A Kind of Enoch Arden Story.

The case of a man who went out to buy a cigar and was gone ten years, has been more than equaled. More than forty years ago, a resident of Jefferson (named Osgood) went out apparently to attend to his usual business affairs, leaving an enfeebled wife, and five very young children dependent on the sweet charities of the world, if he forgot to return, which he did. Years after, one of the children, grown to manhood, in passing through New York State, came across this quondam pater familias comfortably settled down to a new affinity, and the father of a second crop. Recently the man, feeble and whitened with age, accompanied by the third partner of his joys, returned to this, the scene of his earlier years, to find the deserted wife long since in her grave, and the children surrounded by children and grandchildren of their own. Verily, truth is stranger than fiction!—Lancaster (N. H.) Republican

Sir Samuel Baker has put his foot in it. His enthusiasm ran ahead of his judgment when he praised the Khedive of Egypt as a stanch Abolitionist. He has recently published a card in the London Times, in which he gives expression to his belief that the Khedive is somewhat of a hypocrite. While Sir Samuel was telegraphing all over the world the welcome news that slavery was abolished in the Nile Basin, one Abou Saood was busily engaged in importing slaves. Sir Samuel was comforted by the promise that this traitor should be brought to trial at the earliest opportunity, and therefore indulged in the congratulations which were so extensively shared in this country as well as England. But now it appears that Abou Saood, instead of making the acquaintance of the executioner, has been promoted in office. All of which goes to show that the faith of an Egyptian despot is not to be relied on more recklessly than that of an ordinary politician.

The Home of the Alpine Rose.—The real Alpine rose (Rhododendron eriu gineum), with the rust-colored hue underneath the leaves, is growing in the Schneisingen Forest, near Schneisingen, canton of Argus. On starting, of course with a guide, from the highlying church of the village, in the direction of the Ethal, and going across the wooded plateau of Bowald, in about forty minutes, in an open wood of mixed growth, a little garden, rather preserve, of Alpine roses is reached. It is supposed to be the only one in Jura, and was discovered about three years ago, when the parish of Schneisingen took it under its special protection by having the little colony fenced in and appointing a guardian in the person of its forester, who allows no one to gather the flowers. Our correspondent saw about fifty plants in full bloom, the branches and leaves also looking very healthy.—Swiss Times.

Fast Riding.—An Englishman, boasting of the superiority of horses in his country, mentioned that the celebrated Eclipse had run a mile a minute. "My good fellow," exclaimed an American present, "that is less than the average rate of our common roadsters. I live on my plantation at Port Royal; and when I ride in a hurry to town of a morning my shadow can't keep up with me, but generally comes into the warehouse to find me from a minute to a minute and a half after my arrival. One morning my horse was restless, and I rode him as fast as I could several times around the New South newspaper office, just to take the Old Harry out of him. Well, sir, he went so fast that I saw my back directly before me, and was twice in danger of riding over myself."

A band of Italians now performing in London have demonstrated that by breathing through large flint stones with holes bored through them, the air could be made vocal with the food of love. This strange company, the members of which are attired like brigands, give the overture to "William Tell" with astonishing brilliancy and elan, and the music is said to be unlike anything ever before presented. Henceforth the well-worn aphorism, hard as flint, will be likely to loose its significance.

A tombstone at Columbus, Tenn., has this inscription: "Escaped the bullets of the enemy to be assassinated by a cowardly pup—a kind husband and an affectionate father."

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

If every farmer and farmer's son would plant one tree each every year and every farmer's wife and daughter cultivate half a dozen flowers each, how much brighter the country would be.

In Connecticut a worn-out field was fifty years ago planted in timber. The field has yielded ten cords per year and fencing for the farm for twenty years past, and last year, when cleared, produced fifty cords per acre.

There is good authority for saying that beets will do well if transplanted when the roots are of a size ranging from half an inch to an inch in diameter. It is not safe to transplant if the roots are smaller.—Rochester Democrat.

A Massachusetts cultivator says, in Secretary Flint's report, that he has noticed in his garden that "that portion which is hoed or cultivated with the dew upon the ground produces better crops than when hoed in the heat of the day."

According to a French veterinary surgeon, if the inside of the ears and other exposed parts of horses are painted with a few drops of the empyreumatic oil of juniper, flies will not annoy them, the odor being unendurable to these tormentors.

"Are you going to make a flower bed here?" asked a young lady of her father's gardener. "Yes, miss; them's the orders." "Why it'll spoil our croquet ground!" "Can't help it miss; your papa says he is bound to have this plot laid out for horticulture, not husbandry."

For stumbling horses, shoe the foot as flat as possible, not having calks on the shoe except in slippery going, and then as low and short as possible and yet prevent the horse from slipping. The opposite foot should be shod like the lame one. Never let the smith pare the frog of the foot, whether sound or otherwise.

According to Endemann, meat cut in slices and placed in a room the air of which is heated to 140 degrees, and only allowed to enter and escape through cotton filters, becomes so dry in three hours that it can be ground, and, since the albumen and fibrin are not coagulated, it loses none of its nutritive properties.

An observing farmer much prefers a short-legged, broad-boned, full-bodied cow that will keep in good condition on good pasture to a large, loose-built cow that gives more milk in the season, but will not yield so much taking the season altogether. He finds that the largest milker is by no means the most profitable cow to own.

In a case of looseness of the bowels in horses we would give half an ounce of prepared chalk and half an ounce of ground ginger in the feed once a day. As indigestion is probably the cause, the feed should be carefully selected, and what grain is given should be ground. An ounce of salt should also be given in the feed daily.

To cure sleeplessness let the full meal come in the middle of the day. Two hours after it has been taken walk three or four miles, or ride twice that number. Eat a light, easily digested supper, and pass the succeeding hours till bedtime in a way agreeable, but not exciting. Avoid causes of worry, and sleep in a fresh bed and a well-ventilated apartment.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman, after having experimented to his heart's content with several kinds of grease, tobacco water, kerosene, ashes, unguentum, etc., for killing lice on cattle, has arrived at the conclusion that sulphur sprinkled on the animals, and well rubbed into the hair, and a tablespoonful given in meal daily for a week, is the simplest, safest, and surest remedy he has ever tried.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune says: Hungarian grass or millet may be sown for a fodder crop as late as the first of July. It should be cut before the frost cuts it, and be cured as hay, or cradled or raked up and put in bundles, like oats. These will probably be the best fodder crop to raise for horses. No grain is necessary when horses are not worked, if they have plenty of this feed, which is nutritious, if cut early.

For a paste for wall paper take a gallon of water, and bring to a boil in a kettle, one quart of flour stirred up in cold water, and strain through a sieve, so as to have no lumps in it; stir well into the boiling water, then add one teacupful of West India molasses. Let it boil up once, and remove from the fire, stirring it up occasionally till cool. This makes a very adhesive paste, and moisture in the room will not dampen the paper through.

In making softsoap, first put in the hopper about one bushel of ashes and pound them down; then sprinkle on a little lime, and put on more ashes and lime and pound down; and so until the hopper is full. Then pour boiling water on until the strong lye is all run off, and then pour on cold water to get some weak lye. Then put two gallons of grease in a ten-gallon kettle and let it fry brown. Then put in a pint of strong lye at each time, until you get two gallons in—keep boiling all the time. Then add one gallon, and the next time two gallons, and when the kettle is two-thirds full, fill up with weak lye; and when the kettle is full your soap is done.

Oil is the simplest and safest remedy against lice on cattle. When mixed with sulphur, its effectiveness is increased. Any of the following mixtures may be used: 1. Three parts of fresh lard ground up smoothly with one part sulphur. 2. Three parts of lard with one of kerosene oil. 3. Twenty parts of lard with one of carbolic acid in crystals, or one of creosote. Linseed oil may be used in any of the above instead of the lard. The effect of the grease or oil is to close the minute spiracles, or breathing pores, in which insects are situated upon the sides of the body, and the sulphur or carbolic acid entering into these pores is absorbed and acts as a poison. These mixtures, therefore, have a double effect.

A fine polish for boots may be made as follows: Mix together two pints of the best vinegar and one pint of soft water; stir into it a quarter of a pound of glue, broken up; half a pound of logwood chips, two ounces of green copperas, and one ounce of the best isinglass. Put the mixture over the fire and let it boil for about ten minutes. After straining it bottle and cork it. When cold it is fit for use. Apply with a clean sponge or soft brush. Or take of ivory black one ounce, sulphuric acid two ounces, one pint of molasses, two ounces of sweet oil, two ounces and a half of vinegar, quarter of an ounce of copperas dissolved in two ounces and a half of hot water, and half an ounce of gum arabic. Mix in the order mentioned and grind all together in a druggist's mortar.

Sarah Tyson, of Washington City, gives the following method for making pills to destroy moles: Make a stiff dough of corn meal, mixing with it a small quantity of arsenic. Make a hole with a finger in the runways, drop in a lump of dough about the size of a marble, and then cover over with a lump of earth to exclude the light. After the first rain, go over the field again, and deposit in all freshly-made roads. I once concluded to plant a piece of sandy-bottom land in sweet potatoes; but as it was much infested by moles, my success depended on first exterminating them. A few doses of arsenic given in the way described brought about the desired result, and it was a very rare circumstance to see the track of a mole in this piece of ground during the entire summer.

How He Took His Bath.

The Cape May Wave relates the following incident: "Among the excursionists that came from Wilmington by steamer was an unevenly-weighed man and wife—she, 300 avoirdupois; he, scarce 100 pounds would poise. Well, they must bathe, of course; what were the trips to Cape May without an ocean dip? A bath-house was secured. By tight squeezing our fat lady got into a bathing robe that was ready to burst at every step. Little husband girded about his body a woolen garment that fitted like a shirt on a killdeer. Down they go, bold as a couple of whales, to the water; but at the ocean's edge Puny suddenly halted, looked with awe on the furious billows, and then into the face of his determined three hundred. On her countenance were the words, 'Come on!' On his trembling lips shivered the sounds, 'Oh, no!' The small specimen of diminutive husbandry feared to risk his diminutive portion of flesh and bones in the dashing foam, lest some unlucky billow might swallow him down like a snipe. 'You shall go in,' said the fat woman. 'I won't,' said skinny, at the same time making frantic efforts to tear away; down he goes in the sand, scratching worse than a Kilkenny cat. Down drops the 300 upon terrified bones, slick as a hawk upon a spring chicken. The sand flew, legs kicked, man screamed, yet in spite of all the mammoth wife gathered her 100 pounds of furious sweetness in her arms, walked complacently into the biggest breakers, and kersouse she landed him h adforemost into the sea, and as he popped up to the surface, half strangled, she pressed him to her bosom, saying, 'Now, honey, that's what you came all the way from Wilmington to enjoy.'"

Suicide of Gordon Gordon.

The St. Paul Dispatch special from Fort Garry of the 3d inst. says:

"The notorious Lord Gordon Gordon came to a tragic end Saturday night. It appears that one Monroe, a detective from Toronto, arrived here on the steamer International with two warrants, issued by Police-Magistrate McNab, of Toronto, one was on the information of Marshall & Son, jewelers, of Edinburgh, Scotland, charging Gordon with obtaining goods under false pretenses; the second warrant charged him with bringing stolen goods into Canada. Monroe had the warrants indorsed by the Stipendiary Magistrate here, Gilbert M Micken, and, accompanied by two of the local police and Mr. Bain, a lawyer, acting for Marshall & Son, started Saturday afternoon for Headingly, where they arrived in the evening. They proceeded to Mrs. Corbett's, where Gordon boarded, and Monroe made the arrest in the presence of the others. Gordon seemed calm and self-possessed, but asked if it was another kidnapping affair. On being assured it was not and hearing the nature and regularity of the arrest, he begged that he should not be taken through the States He also asked the privilege of changing his clothes for heavier ones, and the handcuffs were removed for that purpose, Monroe following him closely. He went to the foot of his bed pretended to look for his Scotch cap, seized a pistol, and, declaring 'I will not go a step further,' placed it to his right ear and fired, killing himself instantly. The tragedy has created much excitement. An inquest is now being held at the deceased's late residence at Headingly, 16 miles from this city."

Art in the Capitol.

The eight paintings in the panels of the rotunda of the Capitol are to be retouched and revarnished. These are the Landing of Columbus, the Baptism of Pocahontas, the Embarkation of the Pilgrims, the Discovery of the Mississippi, and the four Trumbull paintings, viz.: Signing the Declaration of Independence, Surrender of Burgoyne, Surrender of Cornwallis, and Washington Resigning his Commission. Congress, on the unanimous recommendation of the Joint Committee on the Library, have purchased Moran's great painting, the Chasm of the Colorado. By direction of the same committee, the spacious hall on the second floor of the Capitol, and looking out upon the eastern portico of the Senate extension, has been set apart for its accommodation, together with the companion painting, the Grand Canon of the Yellowstone, by the same artist, and now in the national statuary hall. The committee has also purchased the original Gilbert Stuart painting of Thomas Jefferson, which will be placed in the gallery of Presidents which now adorns the parlors of the President's house.—Washington Star.

Gambetta at Home.

A writer in the London Daily News says: "Gambetta traveled much at an age when young Frenchmen are locked up in monastic schools. An uncle, who was engaged in the Levantine trade, took him often in his voyages to Greece, Turkey and the Black Sea cities. He went frequently to Italy when, under Cavour's leadership, that country was rising to active political life, keeping company with the leading men of the Ligurian towns. His home education was directed by a maiden aunt, who followed him to Paris on his being sent here to the bar, and who has ever since been his housekeeper and monitress. There is no household in Paris conducted with more genuine simplicity and order. The excellent lady exercising authority therein does nearly everything; sees to everything; lays hold on Gambetta's purse whenever the dividends of the Republique Francaise swell it; invests the money she economizes for him; takes notes of bales of letters—letters from constituents, from patriots, male and female, from foes, from political friends, from spies, from false brethren, from lunatics, which are to be thrown into the fire or answered. Her most arduous task is acting as a buffer between nephew and visitors innumerable, she making herself as agreeable as one so perpetually cumbered can be to those of whose common sense and sincerity she feels certain, and showing herself dry and curt to importunate lion-hunters. Mlle. Masabis sticks to her plain provincial ways, dressing on week days, no matter what high political fliers she has to usher in, in black stuff skirt, loose jacket, and clear-starched muslin cap, and on Sundays in plain black silk, guiltless of flounce or frill. This worthy lady taught Gambetta to read and write. His earliest literature was essentially substantial, his letters being learned on chocolate tablets, which were given him to eat when he knew the words stamped on these nutritious sweets. Mlle. Masabis is proud of her pupil: but, in pursuance of her old disciplinary habits, she only praises him when his back is turned. She takes his handwriting to be her greatest educational achievement. Gambetta writes a small, neat, flowing hand, without much flourish in the letter-tails and signature. He would, if 'the worst some day came to the worst'—if law, politics and journalism broke down—be very competent to discharge the duty of copying clerk in a pigeon dispatch office. Gambetta receives in a brown-cloth dressing gown, which gives him the appearance of a Capuchin. When conversation grows brisk, which it nearly always does when he is not busy and is with persons to whom he can talk freely, he unconsciously takes a cigar out of his pocket and puffs away. Political clients from every part of France, belonging to every profession, including the army and navy, pour in. Americans visiting Paris are sure to call upon Gambetta; but to see him it is necessary to be well introduced. The receptions take place early in the forenoon. Very intimate friends, or persons with whom he wants to chat unrestrainedly, are sometimes asked to stop for dejeuner. This repast, the only one at which Gambetta offers hospitality, is served at 11 o'clock on a round table covered in old-fashioned bourgeois style, with a plain brown oil-cloth. Nothing can be more unpretentious. The service is done by members of the family, the single domestic keeping out of earshot all the while that Gambetta is at home. On an occasion of this kind Gambetta's appears to a greater advantage than in the tribune."

The Devil Whisky.

Whisky is the devil that makes the mischief wherever it is tolerated, whether in America, Ireland or Scotland. There are 200,000,000 of people in Europe, outside of Great Britain and Russia, who drink nothing stronger than wine and beer; and among all that vast mass, outnumbering the population of the United States five times, there is less drunkenness and fewer arrests made on charges of "drunk and disorderly," than in the single city of Chicago, which contains not one five-hundredth of their population. This is an absolute fact—a naked truth—which it would be well for both liquor advocates and prohibitionists to turn over in their minds, digest well, and draw rational conclusions therefrom. A crusade against whisky as a beverage would be a legitimate and beneficent war, which, if crowned with success by the extirpation of the accursed fluid from the Union, would be a most inestimable public blessing. As a temperance measure, the tax on whisky should be quadrupled, while that on light wines should be reduced to one-fourth of existing imposts.—Medill's Correspondence Chicago Tribune.

Samana Bay.

A correspondent who has been taking a look at and about Samana bay, writes of the Samana Bay Company as follows: "This company commenced operations by building a hotel on the top of a mountain, which in this climate, I would call inaccessible. It is half-finished, and that part is already rotted by the rain and sun. A little further down the mountain a billiard-room, or, rather a barn, is half-finished, and also gone to decay. Still further down comes the Governor's house, Professor Howe's, small wooden shanty, containing three very small rooms, with a kitchen attached, and to get up to this house in this hot climate is a task that none would seek for pleasure. I visited them, and at every step lizards of all colors would bounce out of the grass, as well as in the houses. The company sold all its old furniture, in the shape of desks and chairs, early in June, and the only thing that they now possess is a small steam-launch, going to decay, as no coal is there to run her, and no trade. The Samana Bay Company is absolutely defunct and forgotten there. It has left nothing behind it upon which to build a monument, or a scrap of ground that it could call its own."

The Mount Carmel (Ill.) Register says: "Two thousand seven hundred and sixty-three gallons of blackberries have been picked in this vicinity the present season; and in picking them 641 women got 30,000,000 chiggers on them.

Address of the Wisconsin Grangers.

The Executive Committee of the State Grange of Wisconsin has issued an address to the Patrons of that State in which they urge them to beware of the attempts of the railroads to corrupt the ballot-box at the coming election, and next winter undo all that was done last winter. The Committee remind the Patrons that the State and National Granges have both declared for "cheap transportation," and that it is the "fixed purpose" of the order to "open out the channels in nature's great arteries that the life-blood of commerce may flow freely." The address further says, "we have declared that we are opposed to such spirit and management of any corporations or enterprises as tends to oppress the people and rob them of their just profits." They also declare: "We desire only self-protection, and the protection of every true interest of our land by legitimate transactions, legitimate trade, and legitimate profits."

We take from the address the following extract:

"If it be possible by corrupt means to repeal a law, how much longer will we wait to see laws enacted through the same means in the interests of the organized power which corrupts, and in reality confer "vested rights" which shall eventually absorb all other rights.

"The times look ominous in this direction. More than aught else may the toiling masses dread as their most direful enemy the corrupt use of the power possessed by aggregated capital. It means for them oppression, servitude—indirect but none the less galling—want, misery, anarchy, and finally frantic and bloody revolution.

"The 'Patrons of Husbandry' have it in their power to check the 'aggressive' power of organized capital, and the day is at hand in Wisconsin which calls for the exercise of it.

"We are told through the public journals that 'in the event of any further aggressive movement against capital in the West, the East is prepared to resort to very extreme measures against the States so influenced, both as a means of self-protection and retaliation.'

"And again, 'that the result of the Wisconsin law, if enforced, will be that the corporations will buy up legislators.'

"Patrons! it is now time that we each of us give heed more particularly to those declared purposes of the order which refer to our duty as American citizens, and see to it in the coming struggle that 'none but competent, faithful and honest men, who will unflinchingly stand by our industrial interests, are nominated for positions of trust,' and thereby 'do all in his power to influence for good the action of any political party to which he belongs.'"

We also give the concluding passage. The suggestion of making candidates show their hands before the election, whether they are for or against the people is a good one. It would have saved much trouble if it had been adopted years ago. It prevents the sly and tricky politicians from selling out the people. The people have votes; the corporations have money. The tricky politicians want both, and when they get them the people are the cheated party:

"Your committee would also add a word in favor of the practice already inaugurated by the order, of requiring public answers to questions publicly put to candidates as to their opinions upon the subjects they are likely to be required to act upon. This is especially important upon the coming occasion, but it should be adopted as the settled policy and practice of the order to make these public inquiries of public officers at any and all times, while they occupy public positions."—Industrial Age.

Position of the Patrons of Husbandry.

The Patrons of Husbandry are not opposed to railroads, or any other public institutions, as long as such institutions are not used as implements of oppression, But like men of all classes, they will tolerate no robbery or oppression, in any form, or under any guise, without at least a strenuous effort to preserve their freedom. There was a day when it was a noble thing to die in the cause of liberty. There was a day when it was a noble thing to be eternally vigilant, because liberty could be preserved alone to the wide-awake. But to-day, when men cry out against grasping monopolies and grinding rings, they may expect to be hissed at and threatened with dire calamities. They may expect to be blamed with bringing about all the direct and inevitable consequences of the petty, as well as immense outrages that have been perpetrated in the name of right and under the sacred forms of law itself. But why this constant cry against the Patrons of Husbandry? It is a part of a game. It is the purpose of the men who have grown fat off the people to continue their course uninterrupted. They do not want to come away from their pleasant places, nor leave their ill-gotten gains. They see that unless they can cry down the great reform organization their days are at an end. Let them cry. But, Patrons, go ahead with your organization. Perfect your plans, multiply your numbers, and as sure as right, when demanded by power, shall prevail, your success will be certain. Be not deterred by any reports set afloat to distract your counsel. Be one in mind—one in purpose. Be ever active and alert.—American Patron.

The Harvest Feasts of the Granges.

We have always looked upon social and educational features of our order as its most important and characteristic advantages. We do not undervalue the economic capabilities of the grange, but it requires certain conditions, not always attainable at present, to enable us to largely avail ourselves of them; but every subordinate grange and every member can get full benefit of the refining, elevating influences of our organization, as well as of the mental culture and the quickening of thought which it promotes. Every harvest feast is a social opportunity, and should be made as joyous and enjoyable as possible, all boisterousness and rudeness, at the same time, utterly excluded by the presence of the "Maids" and "Matrons" of the Grange, if not by the gentlemanly instincts of the "Husbandmen" themselves. We hope no grange will neglect or make light of these "Picnics," or forget that there should always be "the feast of reason and the flow of soul," as well as the meats and drinks that sustain the physical man and make glad the heart. Our tables should always be decorated with flowers and loaded with fruits of the season, as well as with the more substantial provisions which the "Grange" or farms afford. There should be something to delight the eye and please the mind, as well as to gratify the palate and nourish the body. If we eat and drink merely as animals, we degrade ourselves to a level with the beasts which perish; but with Ceres, Pomona and Flora seated at the board, we should masticate our bread and mutton, and sip our wines like immortal gods and goddesses, and rise from the table ennobled and made better and happier by the banquet.—Rural Carolinian for August.

Progress of Industrial Organizations.

The Cedar county (Iowa) Farmer, after giving an account of the progress of the Patrons of Husbandry in that county within the last two years, has the following in regard to other Industrial Associations:

"Nor are the Sovereigns of Industry, the Advocates of Justice, or the Industrial Brotherhood dormant or dying orders. Of the former we can knowingly speak, and confidently assert that never before was it in so prosperous a condition. Deputies are at work in nearly all the States in the Union, and recently a deputy departed for England, to extend the benefit of the institution to the green isles of Britain. The movement of this order is steady and invincible; and though it may possibly fail of success in certain localities, yet, judging from present appearances, its final triumph is certain."

New Freight Rates.

The absentee railroad grandees who disobey laws and bid the people defiance, assembled at Saratoga a few days ago and turned the screw still tighter on the surplus crops of the farmers of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Iowa and Illinois. The additional charge, we understand, is about a cent a bushel on wheat. We have heard the increase estimated as high as a million, or a million and a half dollars, that it will cost to market the farmers' crop this year, and this in defiance of the laws of one of the States. Is it not time the States tested their titles with the roads, and had the question settled whether they have any rights left or not?—Industrial Age.

How a Prize-Fighter Trains.

He rises every morning at 3:30, and takes a light shower-bath of strong brine, is rubbed dry with Turkish towels and a horse-brush until his skin glows like a cherry. After dressing, and drinking a glass of sherry with an egg in it, he starts out on a ramble of four miles over the hills. He returns about 7 o'clock and eats his breakfast, which usually consists of a mutton chop, a couple of soft-boiled eggs, bread a day old, and a cup of tea. After breakfast he takes a light pair of dumb bells, and saunters out for his daily walk, which usually consists of about fifteen miles. On the last few miles he comes in on a dead run, the sweat running from every pore. He immediately enters a closed room, his clothing is removed, and his trainers rub him dry with Turkish towels. When dry two pails of brine are dashed over him to close the pores and tone the skin. Again dried with towels he dresses and takes a little exercise with the dumb-bells to bring out a gentle glow, after which he stretches on a hammock swung under the trees, and reads the paper until dinner is announced.

His dinner consists of roast beef or fish, or, in fact, anything that he craves that is not injudicious to the system. After dinner he lounges around for an hour or so, then he goes into the gymnasium, where he practices dumb-bells, swings Indian clubs, exercises on the horizontal bar, or spars with Aaron until 4 o'clock. A tramp over the hills precedes supper, about 6 o'clock, which consists of a little chicken, dry toast and tea. After supper follows more gymnastic exercise; after which he bathes his feet in brine for fifteen minutes, and about 9 o'clock the weary pugilist seeks his couch.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

A Bridal Party Thrown Down a Precipice.

A young lady and gentleman, recently married, lie at the point of death in Dover, N. J., in consequence of having been thrown over a precipice. They had been married at Dover and with three friends started on a trip to Budd's lake. While climbing the Stanhope mountain, near the railroad bridge, the pole of the carriage broke and the vehicle rolled rapidly down the steep grade. It struck against the side of the bridge, tore off the railing, and went over the abyss fifty feet deep. The bride and one of the gentlemen had both arms and legs and several ribs broken. The two other ladies were fearfully bruised, and the bridegroom fractured an arm beside receiving a number of cuts about the person. It is thought he cannot recover. The sufferers were all removed to Dover.—New York Mail.

Pure Girls and Impure Boys.

Girls, in treating dissipated young men as equals, do a wrong that they can scarcely realize. Such men should be made to feel that until they redeem themselves, until they walk with correctness and honor in the path of right, good people will stand aloof from them. Girls who respect themselves will not be seen with such young men and will decline to receive them on the familiar footing of friendship. It is a mistaken kindness to poultice when caustic is needed, and I am inclined to think that a little sharp decision on the part of the girls of to-day would go far to correct the general looseness of morality among young men.—Woman's Journal.

A Thrilling Incident.

A singular and thrilling incident occurred on the eastward-bound passenger-train, recently, two miles east of Rose creek, near Winnemucca, Cal. The train was on a heavy down grade, going at a high rate of speed, making up for lost time, when the engineer, Nick Cole, thought he saw an obstruction on the track, a few yards ahead. The locomotive whistled "down brakes," the lever was reversed, and every effort possible was made to stop the train, which was under tremendous headway. As the train approached the spot the object proved to be a human being lying with his body directly across the track. The man (for man it was) was alive, fully conscious of his mortal peril, but unable to move from his position. He had pulled out his handkerchief as a signal, however, and was waving it with his hand. Thanks to the Westinghouse brakes and other means used, the train was brought to a standstill when within a few yards of the helpless man. The man was found to be paralyzed, and was picked up, placed on board the train and taken to Winnemucca, where he was provided for at the hospital. He states that while walking along the track he fell down, completely paralyzed in his limbs and body, and could not move himself an inch. When he saw the train coming he expected to be crushed to death, and his feelings were too horrible to express. He screamed, threw his hands up frantically, and waved his handkerchief.

Gordon & Roth—Photograph Artists.

The art of photography has been greatly developed of late years, under skilful hands, yet there are a great many connected with it, who are but mere novices in the profession and know but litt'e of its practical application. It requires years of study and experience to bring forth good work, and this is only attained by a few.—Among these may be found our enterprising artists, Messrs. Gordon & Roth now handsomely located in the Ensley block. Mr. Gordon, the Sr., member of the firm, has devoted y ars of close application to this profession, until he is now able to produce a class of work not surpassed in Northern Indiana.—Little by little he has added new features until he has every facility to turn out first-class work. Having associated with him about a year ago Mr. J. L. Roth, who has made great proficiency in the art, and they challenge any gallery in this section of country to equal them as to quality and prices. Their gallery is now, having been built last summer expressly for that purpose and with the new machinery they have added recently, are prepared to meet the demands of the trade. Their hall is nicely arranged and supplied with every necessary feature for the comfort of their visitors. They make life sized pictures and execute in the India Ink, oil and water colors, and crayon, and their retouched negatives cannot be excelled. They make a speciality of Mezzo Tint photographs, a new design recently introduced, which are very beautiful.—By a visit to their gallery all can be convinced of their superior workmanship. They also keep in operation the gallery next to Case's Hall, where part of their work is done. They are offering spec'al inducements as to prices and the public should not fail to take advantage of them.

Auburn Lumber Yard.—W. Sheffer & Bro Props.

Mr. I. M. Thomas instituted this commercial enterprise in 1870 and conducted the buisness of buying and selling for about one year, at which time he disposed of the yard to Messrs Penny & Sheffer, who continued the business in company about seven months. Mr. Penny desiring to retire from the buisness disposed of his interest to Mr. Sheffer who in connection with his brother have successfully conducted the buisness ever since. The lumber yard is elligably situated near the Ft Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Rail road depot and contains a general assortment of pine lumber used by mechanics for building purposes. The firm also had on hand the different style and grades of shingles, a large quantity of both lime, coal, plaster, cement, and plastering hair. These gentlemen are doing a successful business and have by their advantage in buying extended the trade to a considerable magnitude. The lumber trafic of the yard at the present time reaches to from three to four hundred thousand feet of lumber per annum. Their sales of shingles will aggregate from seven to eight hundred thousand per annum, lath five hundred thousand and they sell about six thousand bushels of lime annually which, when taken together speaks well for the trade of this lumber yard, and shows conclusively that the firm are enjoying the benefit of a prosperous and remunerative custom. These gentlemen are taking measures to enlarge the business and make such additions to it, as will enable them to meet the increased demand of their custom trade. They are certainly enterprising in their commercial intercourse and take pains to be accomodating to their patrons, and with their energy, industry, and upright dealing cannot help but succeed.

T. B. Totten.—Hats Caps & Gents Furnishing Goods.

This Merchant occupies one of the most elligable and popular corners in Auburn, and may easily be found by the sign of the big hat on the north east corner of Main and Seventh streets When he first engaged in the mercantile trade he opened a grocery store, and two years since disposed of his stock to Messrs Martin & Sons.—In December 1873 he opened his present establishment and stocked his room with everything that comprises a hat, cap, and gent's furnishing establishment. He has on hand a full stock of the different styles and fashions of hats, hosiery, suspenders, collars, hankerchiefs, and is agent for the celebrated American Sewing Machines (a new and improved invention) and are said to be in some respects superior to any other Sewing Machine in the market. All the goods of this house are disposed of as cheap as the cheapest, and Mr. Totten is enjoying a prosperous trade, and we reccommendboth him and his goods to the patronizing public.

A. E. Swineford.—Meat Market.

This market has been opened but about two weeks, and considering its locality, we conclude it to be a necessity for our citizens in the south part of town. Mr. Swinford has a neat tasty room and takes pains to keep all the appointments of the institution in good condition. His beeves, and other meats are among the choicest driven to our market and his meals, sheep and hogs, are all well fatted and selected. He buys green hides and poultry, and his market is well patronized. Remember the place on Main Street south of the hotel, and if you want a good roast or choice steak give him a call.

W. W. Humes.—Boot & Shoe Manufactory.

This practical and accomplished mechanic has followed the boot and shoe business for a period of eighteen years. Ten years in which he devoted to the trade in Ashland, Ashland County, O., and the remaining part of the time in our village. He first opened his custom shop on the north east corner of Main and Seventh street, after which he moved to what was known as the Wagoner stand, and from this place he removed to the room he now occupies over Klotz' dry goods house, one door South of the Post Office, and intends soon to suspend the sign of a big boot. The history of this boot & shoe establishment, illustrates how much unswerving integrity, close application to business and sagacity in success in the trade. There is a large demand springing upon Mr. Humes for his excellent work and he is engaging a steady flow of custom calls. All varieties of coverings for the feet are manufactured in his establishment (except childrens) from the heavy stoga boot to the fine delicate french calf. The material he uses is the best the market affords and he warrants all his work. His business extends over a large territory for a custom shop and he maintains his custom trade in spite of competitors.—The method of manufacturing boots & shoes by machinery has long since satisfied the public that the method is weighed in the balances and found wanting, consequently Mr. Humes adheres to the old plan of doing his pegging and sewing by hand and on that account, can warrant his work against ripping and can asure his customers of genuinness Mr. Humes has been established among us so long that we do not think it necessary to give a statement of his standing or to further commend his custom boot and shoe shop. He keeps a full corps of experienced workmen constantly employed and boot and shoe findings of the different kinds for sale. It needs a person to prove his work in order to get an idea of its completness to visit his shop and inspect his work and goods to be found there Mr. Humes intends to lay in heavily for the fall and winter trade, and it will be well for our citizens to engage their work there

Miller & Casebeer —Dry Goods, Grocery, & Provision House.

The retail trade in dry goods has attained no small degree of prominence in Auburn, and our exhibit of our business facilities would be incomplete did we not devote some space to this branch of commercial activity. The dry goods, grocery and provision house of Messrs Miller & Casebeer is elegantly located and has its situation on the north west corner of Main and ninth street, and is one of the oldest and most reliable mercantile houses of the place. All the appointments and arrangements of the sale rooms give the store an appearance of elegance, and it contains a line of dry goods not excelled in our village. All that capital, energy and trade can suggest, has been used to make it a first class trading post. Our citizens are justly proud of the stores of our village and claim they are equaled by very few in towns of like size in this country. The above firm visits eastern houses several times per year making such purchases as their extensive trade requires, which enables them to not only keep pace with the times, but to keep constantly on hand a fresh assortment and take advantage of any depression in the prices of their line of merchandize.—The prosperity of this house is onward and constant, evidencing a good financiering ability and a prestige for a successful career in buisness life. The gentlemen composing the firm have brought to their buisness an excellent practical education, extensive mercantile experience, and above all, a desire to connect their affaris in a straight forward and honorable manner. System of the most perfect kind prevails, so that almost clock-like regularity is secured. Their principal stock of merchandise consists in a great variety of foreign and domestic dry goods, notions, boots & shoes, hats & caps, groceries & queens ware, the customers visiting Auburn from the country for the purpose of procuring goods in their line, will find it greatly to their advantage to visit this store and make their purchases.

Furniture Rooms.—Wm. Long. Pro.

The subject of this notice has his business department on the West side of Main Street North of Sixth street and keeps on hand a complete stock of the various kind of goods composing the furniture trade. His goods as to styles, elegance of finish, or design are not supassed in our town. His store room is literally filled with parlor sets, bed room sets, fine bureaus, lounges, chairs, tables, mattrasses, and a variety of other goods relating to the furniture line. Mr. Long also keeps a hearse, and the different designs and attends to funeral calls either in the village or country, He sells cheap, and is a fair derler.

Meat Market.—M. Huston Pro.

If our citizens desire to procure sweet fresh meet they will find their old friend Huston on the north side of Eight Street one door west of Main keeps just what they want. He prepares for his meat market from eight to ten well fatted beeves weekly, and for the past six weeks he has averaged the sale from six to eight dressed hogs weekly. He also provides mutton and veal and intends to keep for his customers the best meat the market affords.

Boot & Shoe Harness & Collar Shop—Sayeby & Hull Props.

The first named gentleman has been in the boot & shoe trade for about twenty years, and a resident of our village about eight years. He manufactures as good work in his shop, either pegged or sowed, as is turned out of any establishment of the kind in the town of Auburn. He employs one of the best boot makers in this part of the country and is not afraid to have the work of his shop inspected.

Mr. S. is an experienced mechanic and one of the secrets of his success is honesty and fair dealing. He has built himself a new shop on the south side of Eight street, west of Main, and may be found at all hours ready to take the measures of his customers.

E. T. HULL

who occupies the east side of the room devotes his time to the manufacturing of country and village harness, of the different styles and qualities. He has a patent horse collar, that he makes a speciality in which is said to be different in draft from the ordinary collar in use; and a sure cure for a horse with a galled shoulder, and enables the animal to perform its labor at the same time. Mr. H does all kinds of custom work belonging to the trade. Use the best of material and warrants all his work.

J. E. Woodford—Boot and Shoe Store.

There has hardly been a time in which clothing for the feet has not been prepared, of some kind, among all civilized people. Among the ancients they wear sandals, consisting of a sole held to the foot by straps, but there has been a vast improvement in the preparation of these articles since the days of the ancients. If the reader doubts this let him procure a picture of a sandal used in olden times for the protection of the foot, and step with it into J. E. Woodford's ready made boot and shoe store, and make the comparison. Mr. Woodford has not only a boot and shoe store, but one excellent in itself, containing a well selected assortment of different grades styles, and qualities. His room is full of Men's, Womens' and Childrens wear, and are calculated for all kinds of weather and adopted for all kinds of wear. Mr. W. has recently settled among us, but is building up for himself a prosperous trade and an excellent line of custom. He is a liberal man and takes pride in keeping pace with the times, and cannot help but succeed. He sells his goods with a small margin of profit, and it would be well to remember this new boot and shoe store and give it a liberal patronage.

Groceries—Rainier & Hi tige.

The amount of capital invested in the grocery and provision trade in Auburn is much greater than is generally supposed, and the extent of opperations of the various firms and individuals engaged in the sale of such commodities out line an extensive exhibit. The headquarters of the above firm is west side of Court Square, and the stock and quality of their goods deserve an extended notice, but at this late hour we have not the time, or even the space in our paper to do these gentlemen justice. They are successful merchants have engaged a successful busines career, and are building up a prosperous custom trade. Everything in the grocery line may be found here, and as good in quality as can be obtained in our place. Their enterprise is a success, and it is but a merited tribute to the energy and deserts of these mercantile gentlemen.

Benedict & Leasure.—Tobacco, Cigars, Confectioneries & Yankee Notions.

This establishment was first opened by Messrs. McQuiston & Coder. but after conducting the enterprise about four months, Mr. Coder having disposed of his interest to Mr. F. Benedict retired from the buisness. The style of the firm was at this time Mc Quiston & Benedict and continued such until the 20th of July last, at which time Mr. Benedict purchased the interest of McQuiston and associated with him J. H. Leasure, The enterprise is situated in the same room of the Post Office and doing a healthy buisness. Its stock is general embracing the different brands of tobacco cigars, pipes and other goods belonging to the retail trade. The firm has on hand a large and well selected stock of notions, and confectioneries and dispose of their goods at reasonable prices If you want a good article of tobacco, or a prime cigar to smoke step in at the sign of the Big Indian.

Hub and Spoke Factory.

This manufacturing establishment was erected in 1873, and is located on the south side of the E. R R. R. The capital stock of the institution is $25,000, and has a capacity of turning out from eighty to one hundred wagon hubsets and 3000 spokes per day. It employs 25 hands and contains a full and complete set of implements and machinery for manufacturing purposes The building is 100x40 feet and has an engine of 125 horse power.

Scroll Factory—J. W. Case

This factory is situated opposite the E. R depot—is having extensive additions in course of construction and valuable machinery set up, and when completed will be an institution greatly enlarged and of absolute necessity. It is impossible to enter into detail at this time and give a history of its origin, or the nature of its workings.

Theron Clark--Saw Mill.

The interests which cluster around articles in daily use are frequently more varied and involve more energy, skill, foresight and hard labor than objects that seem to be of far greater importance. We became impressed with this fact on our recent visit to the new mill owed and occupied by the one whose name heads this article. Our citizens are aware of the sudden disaster he met with on the 2nd of Sept 1873, when the fire fiend devoured his saw mill and cut off his support for a livilihood. But by the benevolence of his friends, and their timely aid, (whom Mr. Clark not only remembers with gratitude but in this issue of the COURIER, desires to return to them his heart felt thanks) he resumed his enterprise, re-established his mill on a new lot, procured new machinery and is in possession of one of the best mills of the kind in this section of the country, and capable of manufacturing sixteen thousand feet of sawed lumber each twenty-four hours. The engine is a forty horse power, and the mill contains superb machinery for cutting fine or heavy material for building purposes. The mill is superintended by Mr. Clark in person who devotes his time and talents to comply with the wishes of his patrons. He is now busily engaged cutting out material for three different depot buildings, and is crowding his mill to its utmost capacity in order to complete his contracts. The proprietor keeps in his employ selected help and engages none but those who are reliable. He pays cash for all kinds of lumber in the log, and does custom work The mill buildings are located east side of the Eagle Flouring Mills and in dimentions are 60x26 and 60x16 feet. The mill is a necessity to the vicinity and a great advantage to the village. We wish Mr. Clark his full amount of success.

Groceries and Provisions--V. A. Beard.

The reputation of this house is to firmly established to require comment at our hands. Its trade aggregates largely, and reaches throughout a wide extent of territory, its foundations were not laid so much upon capital as upon honorable dealing. This house is the oldest one of the kind in the village of Auburn, and opened in confidence, the proprietor feeling assured of success, but his increase in business has been greater than be expected, and little by little the limit of trade has expanded until the house has one of the finest and most extensive classes of patrons in our town. The entire floor as well as the shelving is filled with goods The exterior of the establishment is noticable by reason of its being located in one of the beautiful three story commodious brick edificies fronting court square on the north side of Seventh street. The stock of groceries and provisions is very large and of excellent quality, embracing all that is generally kept in a first-class retail store of this kind—such as spices, crackers, canned and dried fruits, fish flour, smoked and pickeled meats, syrups, sugars, teas, coffee, crockery, wooden ware, &c. He also has a large assortment of confectioneries, and other goods in the line of Groceries and Provisions that we have not space to mention. Another item worthy of note is that Mr. Beard's stock of goods are selected, choice and fresh. Indeed he has advertised our town and its vicinity by his own success, and it is but right that he should reap that reward that comes by fair dealing.
